What is the difference? The difference is in the one case we prosecute because a man violated the law. In the other case we defend the criminal because he is the law. That is the difference. One is a case where punishment must take its course. The other is a case where whoever tries to bring the culprit to justice is liable to have the finger of vengeance pointed at him. Many people in this country do not dare speak about Farley and report his crimes. They dare not do it.

I have had man after man tell me, "I would like to tell you all about it, but look what will happen to me. You have the little fellows in the penitentiary", and yet the man is afraid to be honest and tell the truth about it for fear he will be sent to the penitentiary if he dares to tell the truth about these big strapping Tammany politicians who have come here to use the processes of the Government for their own benefit to the tune of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars.

So, Mr. President, the matter of equality, the matter of rules and lessons of equity go unheard and unnoticed. If Senators would listen to me from now on it would be to their profit. I am sorry there are not more Senators here to listen to me.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to make the point of no quorum?

Mr. LONG. No; not now. I want to save that for a little later. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. There might not be any more business transacted between now and then. I am making one of the finest speeches ever made here and it is just simply too bad that so few Senators, who claim to be interested in this subject, do not stay here and listen to me. I tell them what I think is best. I am making a speech that will be read for many hours after it is made, probably. I am making a very fine speech and not all the Senators appreciate it as do the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that if his speech is read at all it will be read many hours.

Mr. LONG. When a Senator goes to the trouble to carefully prepare an address and deliver it to this body he is entitled to be listened to with care. It has always been my view that the least Senators can do as a matter of courtesy is to stay here and listen to speeches. In the days to come someone will get up here and ask me a question about something, and the chances are it will be something that I have fully covered in my speech this afternoon; and if they had stayed here and listened to me this afternoon, they would have known all about it and would not have to take the time of the Senate hereafter to have me repeat it.

When I have made a good point, when I think I have developed something to where a man who heard it would have been influenced by it, then some Senator straggles in who I know has not been converted and I feel the necessity of starting all over again and telling what I said in his absence. Of course I am not going to do that for all of them, but to some extent. Senators have lately returned to the Chamber because the news has gone around that I am making a fine speech. It will be all over the Capitol very soon. As Senators return to the Chamber I am going to have to repeat some of the things I have said because the news is bound to get out that I am making a great speech here, one that all Senators are going to want to listen to, I am sure.

We spend entirely too much of our evenings in the wrong way. Instead of listening to the logic of one another, our evenings are spent in taking care of Washington's social functions.

Nearly every man here goes home and gets ready to go out to some dinner or to some important diplomatic affair, and we all spend our time in such ways in the evening, when the chances are that if we mutually counseled with one another, each and every one of us and the country in particular would be the beneficiaries of a better form of conduct. So if we stay here this evening on this subject, the first time it has ever been passed upon in the history of America—if we ponder a few moments, and give our best minds and talents to it—it is likely to mean a great deal to all of us, and more to the country. That is the way I look at the matter.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator from Louisiana is a good lawyer, of whom Chief Justice Taft said that he had one of the most brilliant minds ever appearing before him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Minnesota is not asking a question.

Mr. SCHALL. It will be a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point is well taken. The Senator's remark is not, thus far, a question.

Mr. SCHALL. I intend to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will ask a question.

Mr. SCHALL. I wanted to ask the Senator whether he does or does not think the Postmaster General violated the income-tax law when he gave hundreds of thousands of dollars in nonperforated stamps to his friends without paying a tax upon them?

Mr. LONG. He not only violated the income-tax law in regard to the taxes on probably half a million dollars' worth of income, for which he should have been prosecuted, but he violated the law which prohibited the issuance and giving away of those stamps, or handling them in any way, except for cash to the amount of the face value of the stamps. He violated two laws; but there used to be a song in this country—it is rather modern, in fact—to this effect:

I wonder how you are, and I wonder who you are, and where you are, and if you are all alone.

The law has gotten down now to the point where it is not a matter of A's and B's and C's, what you did or what you did not do. It is a matter of who you are, and it is a matter of where you are, and it is a matter of whether you are this, that, or the other, and whether you are all alone. With Farley, it is a matter of where you are. "Why, I am sitting on the right hand of the President of the United States." It makes a big difference—yes, sir!—where you are, and who you are. "I am the Postmaster General." "And are you all alone?" "Oh, no; oh, no! Where Macgregor sits, there is the head of the table. Where Farley sits, there is the law." You can have all the laws you want to; but when you make Mr. James A. Farley the master of the law, what does law amount to?

Somebody said to me, "Present the matter to the United States attorney and to a grand jury." Would not that be a nice thing, to walk in and present it to Farley's appointees like that? Here is Mr. Farley, who appoints the United States attorney. Here is Mr. Farley, who appoints the officers of the law. He can remove them tomorrow morning; and you want to send me down there to see Farley's own appointee, to see what he will do about Farley! The chances are that they would put me in jail for going down there if I went down there to try to get him.

What is the difference? The difference is that if you are going to allow this reign of terror to continue, with the enforcement of the law under that man Farley, you are going to take away from the people of this country about everything that sustains good government. That is what the thing amounts to.

Mr. President, if it were left to me, long ago I should have said that Mr. Farley's case would have come up on its merits. It would have been investigated from Dan to Beersheba. Mr. Farley would not be waiting for Congress to adjourn in order to tender his resignation, as the rumors go about. I do not know whether they are true or not. The rumor comes that they are just waiting until Congress adjourns, and that as soon as Congress adjourns Mr. Farley will tender his resignation. I do not know whether that is so or not. I hope it is not so, because I tell you that the acts of Farley ought to be scrutinized by Congress at its present session, and Farleyism ought to be eternally uprooted in this country, and never allowed to return.

I ventured off on that line, and I ventured off on all this line. I owe something to the soldiers of the country. I owe a debt to the soldiers of the country, and I am paying the debt that I owe to them. There was a time, in 1917 and 1918, when the soldiers of this country stood in the face of the German cannon, and they stood on guard all day and all night in order that 120,000,000 of their people in America might live under a constitutional government. They never asked if it was time to go to breakfast. They never asked if it was time to go to dinner. They stood there on guard for 120,000,000 American people.

I have done very little for the soldiers in return for the service they did for me and others. I have done very little for these men who came back maimed and wounded, or, if they were not maimed and wounded, who came back after rendering eternal sacrifices and going through a thousand deaths, whether they died or not. I have done very little for those men, and many of my colleagues here probably have done no more than I have done for them; but I am standing here tonight on guard for those soldiers, just as those soldiers stood on guard for me in 1917 and in 1918. If there is no other man left in the United States Senate who will stand up and stand against the illegal, unprecedented action of giving the President of the United States a forum in which to blare and display and trumpet the time that he stabs a dagger to their hearts; if there is no man but me left in this body willing to stand to prevent the President of the United States from erecting himself a monstrous castle from which he may blare forth with all the advantage that modern mechanisms and contrivances provide; if there is no one left but me to stand between the soldiers and that, I will do the dead level best I can to stand against it as long as I have the power to do it.

Let the President find another time to break this precedent. Let him find another time to do this illegal and this unconstitutional act. I am calling on the men of this country to stand up for these men who stood up for them. The time has come in the legislative forum when that has to be done.

Oh, I know we may be defeated. I do not care. What do I care whether it means victory or defeat? I know exactly what the situation is. I know, with the lash and the power the President can exert, that it is probable he can bring about the change of enough votes to prevent overriding this veto. I know what the situation is; and it is just as legitimate and proper—it is even more so—that I should stand here and warn and plead and beg against these performances as it is that he should use his midnight hours for the distribution of patronage. It is just as much the part of constitutional government for me to do what I am doing, and probably more so, as it is for him to use the resources at his command to bring about a contrary result.

So that is where I stand tonight on this issue, Mr. President. Let the President stay back there. There will be called to the attention of the American people, I think, before this contest is over, the great strategy which has been used to prevent the payment of this debt that is 17 years overdue. I say, "the payment of this debt"—I should say, the partial payment of this debt. This action does not purport, topside or bottom, to pay anything like half the debt that is owing and due to the soldiers of this country; nothing of the kind. On the contrary, if this bill should become a law it would give to the soldiers a niggardly sum. It gives to the soldier less than the wages the commonest laborer earned for the length of time the soldier was in the trenches. So, therefore, we undertake here to vindicate the right of the soldier to receive this payment.

Mr. President, we must do something about it. Why? We passed a bill here appropriating $4,800,000,000. Forty-eight hundred million dollars of the money of the people of the United States has been placed in the hands of a candidate for President who desires to defeat certain other candidates. As long as that money was honestly administered, I suppose nobody could have had any complaint at all about it, regardless of how great the debt of the country might have been, on a reasonable or rational policy.

But when you take a million dollars of that money and send it into a State and say, "This money is to be used here for enlarging the relief roll", when you say, referring to the relief roll, which they managed to pull down to a few thousand people, "I want this relief roll multiplied 10 times to make it big enough", you destroy the moral fiber of those people, and put hundreds and thousands of people on the relief roll who have no business being on the relief roll, and take people off the relief roll who perhaps ought to be on the relief roll. That is a kind of Government nobody on the face of the living earth will stand for.

I know they have us beat here the way they are going to pull this thing off. I know what the vote will be, and everybody else knows what it will be. I know what the vote will be on the resolution. There is no use fooling yourselves; I know what the set-up is. I know what the vote is. I know why all the blare and display is made to keep the vote what it is, and they will keep it what it is. I know that.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. For a question.

Mr. SCHALL. Does not the Senator think that perhaps the President may believe that a dollar and a quarter a day is too much for those soldiers, since common labor now is to get $19 a month? A dollar and a quarter a day would bring $30 a month, anyway.

Mr. LONG. I would not doubt but what he thinks that, from what I know about it. I would not doubt that he honestly thinks that. He may be very honest in that opinion. From what I know of the man, his opinion may be perfectly honest about that. He fixes $19 as the wage to be paid people down in Louisiana.

Anybody who has ever done hard work knows that a man cannot get enough to fill his stomach on a wage of 65 or 70 cents a day. I am telling you what the Lord loves, the eternal truth. I have done hard work in my time, and I state that the man who does 8 hours work and thinks he can get what he needs to eat for 60 or 70 cents a day is fooling himself. It cannot be done. But that is what they have tried here under this thing the President has promulgated. Here is the whole thing: $19 a month—$19 a month for 40 hours labor a week.

Mr. President, this country is being lowered into a further depression. We were told that we were going to cure unemployment. How many years have we been here trying to cure the unemployment? A little over 2 years Franklin Delano Roosevelt has been in office. Now we are in the third year of Roosevelt, the third year. When November comes he will have been elected 3 years. Next March he will have been in office 3 years, and today there is an unemployment list in this country bigger than it ever has been in the history of the United States.

Talk about being over the depression! Officials have been sending out propaganda that we are coming out of the depression, that the depression is over. There is a bigger unemployment roll today than we have ever had since the United States was founded. Talk about coming out of the depression; we are going into the depression. We are just getting started. The United States Government owes $30,000,000,000, or something like that, and it is fixing to put out $5,000,000,000 more of bonds. I do not know whether the statement is correct or not, I have never taken the time to look up the figures, but it is said that every time the United States Government takes in $3 it spends $5; and that does not include the relief money and the emergency money. The cost of Government of the United States today is $5 every time we take in $3, I am told.

I am told that on top of that we have to add all the relief money and the emergency funds, and the expenditures of the various and sundry alphabetical arrangements that are spending money all the time.

They went down into Louisiana, into the great, wide, beautiful land of Louisiana, where the sun shines nearly 365 days out of the year, where there is seldom a day when the sun does not shine, down in that beautiful State where the Lord has smiled, and given people practically every resource on the face of the earth. He has filled the waters so that they teem with fish, and oysters, and shrimp, and everything of that kind. The land blooms the year around—beautiful Louisiana, with clear streams, charitable people, a generous population, harmonious in the main. They have their political differences, but most of them are instigated here at Washington. Louisiana would not have an anti-Long faction in it today if it were not for Federal money. The only way they keep an anti-Long faction there at all is by using Federal money. They have to pay everybody they have two or three times apiece. That is the only way they can do it, by buying the opposition. The opposition is bought with Federal money. It used to be paid by the corporations. Now, they have another way of doing it. The opposition is paid by money of the United States Government. That is the only kind of opposition there is.

At any rate, they have gone into that State, and instead of trying to set those people an example of truthfulness and honor, they have taught a man to be dishonorable, to plow up his garden, to be trifling, to lie down and not work, in order to get on the relief roll, instead of saying to a man that God helps those who help themselves, and that they should try to help themselves first.

They say to the people, "Plow up your gardens, shoot your hogs, kill your cattle, and be trifling and no account, and stand around", and they will keep them drawing a little handful of hay and other food to keep them living in an indecent poverty. That is the kind of curse inflicted upon the people in the name of a foul Farleyism and politics. That is all they have ever done. That is all they intend to do.

There are millions and millions for plunder. They have plenty of that kind of money. They have all that kind of money they want to use. They have plenty of money to use for that kind of politics, but no money to pay the soldiers; oh, no. No kind of soldiers' bill can go through. There is no money to pay to soldiers; oh, no; no money. That is their responsibility.

The time will come when things will be changed. The people will understand this thing. The right action will not always be postponed. Then they will have to return to this doctrine Mr. Roosevelt announced at Chicago.

I have learned one thing in my life. Whenever you have to make a man do something you might just as well not have him do it. Whenever, in order to get a man to do something as a candidate for office, you practically have to make him do it, he is not going to fulfill his promise after he gets into office. That has been my experience.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, does not the Senator think this so-called "planned economy" is only a deliberately planned chaos?

Mr. LONG. I think some of them are planning for chaos. I think they want to have the millions of American people in desperation so that they will have to take what little dole they hand out to them and will have to do what they want them to do in order to get that little, pitiful, poverty-stricken hand-out. I honestly think that some of them do.

Mr. CONNALLY. Some of whom?

Mr. LONG. Some of the people connected with the administration, with the A. A. A. and the N. R. A.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator refer to any Senators?

Mr. LONG. I do not think the Senators do; no. I would not say it if I thought it, and I do not think so.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope the Senator will not equivocate. Does he or does he not refer to Senators?

Mr. LONG. The Senator knows I do not. However, the Senator knows that I think some Senators could vote better than they are voting on that matter, and stop some of it. I think Senators are wholly mistaken in their votes on some of these points, but I do not equivocate in any respect concerning the motives of Senators. I never have since I have been here. I should not be allowed to do so if I desired to do so, and I should not desire to do it if I could. Personally and politically I have about the same regard for some of my colleagues that they have for me. I share the views of other men pretty well. I have never made my status with anybody. I have always made the other man make my status with him. I reciprocate other men's friendships and the rest of their feelings 100 percent, and a little bit more.

So, Mr. President, we will return to the logic of Franklin Delano Roosevelt at the nominating convention, because there are two Senators who have returned to the Chamber since I started to talk about that who did not hear what I said before they came in. I shall now read it to them. Here is what he said:

Throughout the Nation men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government of the last years, look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of national wealth. [Applause and cheering.]

Mr. President, I was not there to do any of that applauding. I was not at the convention when Mr. Roosevelt got there. I had been up all night for 2 or 3 nights at the Chicago convention. We had a hard fight, one of the hardest fights we ever went through.

I think I probably was the one who suggested that we had to keep the convention in session all night long in order to nominate Roosevelt. The fact of the case is that I know I am the one who suggested it. We did keep the convention in session all night long in order to nominate Roosevelt. Why? Because the galleries were so hostile to the Roosevelt cause that every time one of my men got up and mentioned Roosevelt's name he was practically booed off the grandstand. A Representative from Mississippi, Mr. RANKIN, made a speech and the galleries practically booed him down. It got to the point where it took minutes and sometimes hours to quiet the convention if the name of Roosevelt was even mentioned. That is how bad it got to be in the Chicago convention. Anyone who listened over the radio knows how bad it was.

So I went to my chieftains and to my associates—I did not have any chieftains then; I was one of the chieftains—I went to them and I said, "There is only one way we can ever nominate Franklin Delano Roosevelt, and that is to empty the galleries. Put those in the galleries to sleep, or we will never nominate him." So we forced the delegates to nominate candidates for President until 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. Then we had the galleries about two-thirds empty, and those who were there were so sleepy that they could hardly hold their eyes open, and we went to work and finally got to a poll of the vote—the only way we could ever get them started.

If we had waited until the next morning, when the delegates began to nominate Ritchie and Byrd and "Alfalfa" Bill Murray, they would have had demonstrations lasting 4 or 5 days, and we never would have got to taw with the nomination. We were having some time holding any delegates at all. So I suggested that we would have to stay in session all night, and that is why they held the nominating convention all night long, to nominate this man Roosevelt President of the United States. I stayed there with them the whole night long, and we worked every hour and every minute of that night, and the night before that, and the night before that. We fought day and night, and I spent every dollar I had on earth, and every dollar I could beg, borrow, and steal, to nominate this man President of the United States—this man who I thought was going to keep his word. The same man who caused vast sums to be spent to bring about my destruction is the man for whom I spent my time and my talent and my efforts to make him President of the United States. Why did I do it? Did I ask him for a job? No. Here is what I asked him for and here is what he did. He made a speech. I sat up in my room on the day when he arrived at Chicago and I heard him read his speech, and when he read these lines I hopped into a taxicab and got into a drawing room, sick as I could be, and came on to New Orleans, La., and then back to Washington. I supported him for President because he had promised to say what he said in that speech and he had promised to do what he said. He had said in Atlanta:

Throughout the Nation men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government of the last years, look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunities to share in the distribution of the national wealth. [Applause and cheering.]

The minute the first caucus of the Democratic Party of the United States Senate was called, the first thing I said to them was, "Let nothing be done here that is going to close the door to our putting this thing through if possible, even before Roosevelt becomes the President of the United States." That is the pledge made to the American people, that we would have a redistribution of wealth; that we would not have a few people owning everything and the masses of the people owning nothing. Roosevelt made that pledge. He made a speech in which he said there was going to be no poverty in this land. He made that statement to me, and I said, "You must make it to the people if I am to support you. It is not enough to make it to me; you have got to make it to the people of the United States."

I was a Senator in those days and he was a Governor. He needed me and I did not need him. I could talk big then. Yes, sir; I could talk big then!

Yet we are faced today with the situation where the lowest wage is fixed at $19 a month, and the wealth of this country more concentrated than ever. Many of our banks were closed before the guaranty law was passed, and millions and hundreds of millions and billions of our dollars were wiped out in a niggardly policy dictated by the financial captains of Wall Street, and they would not permit the little banks to be open, nor the bank accounts of the little people to be guaranteed.

Now none dares to gainsay the breaking of the pre-election pledges and the failure to keep those promises. None there is who dares even to mention that the promises ought to be kept. None there is who dares say, "I expect you to do what you said you would do."

We had a slim amount of official dignity left to the United States House of Representatives and the United States Senate, and now that is to be taken away. About all we had left was the right to think we amounted to something, and now that is going to be taken away from us. We did have the right to feel that we amounted to something as we were still a Congress, but now inch by inch our prerogatives are encroached upon and precedents are broken, and now at last we are to be summoned over to the other end of the Capitol, something which the Constitution never contemplated, something which Washington never did, something which Jefferson never did, something which Lincoln never did, something which Adams never did, something which Theodore Roosevelt never did, something which Woodrow Wilson never did; yet we are all to be called over there to listen to the President, with the accompaniment of a blare of trumpets, and with a regular moving-picture display made up, with movie cameras grinding, with loud-speakers, with the swelling ruckus, in order that on the great day when Franklin Delano Roosevelt stabs the dagger to the hilt into the souls and bodies of 3,000,000 soldiers, and the sons and daughters and wives and children of the 3,000,000 soldiers, everyone must yield, must give way, and rush and hurry because the great master has come, and he has decreed, promises to the contrary notwithstanding, that the feeble-minded must give way and assemble at his beck and call to hear the ruckus, and to hear the condemnation pronounced by reason of the Congress not declining to pay the debt, 17 years overdue, and which will not even pay half of what is due when the soldiers do get it. That is our case in part.

I have been charged with being disloyal to the Democratic party on account of my stand on the tariff. I am able to defend myself on that. I think I have got a little book here which contains the platforms of all the parties way back for a number of years. I think I can show whether or not I have been right in that matter. We cannot change men's minds on the tariff question. I do not have the book available at the moment, but later I shall refer to it. I shall have to get it a little later and therefore I will pass over that point for the time being.

The main reason why my stand as a Democrat is referred to is that I refused to go along with the President. I was elected a Senator before he was elected President. Perhaps my people want somebody to vote like he tells them to vote. If they do they had better get somebody else than me. It will not be long before they have a chance to do that. I come up for reelection in January. It may be the people will want somebody to vote like Roosevelt tells them to vote. If they do they will have to get somebody besides me.

Bless your soul, the day they vote me out of public life I shall be a happy man. I shall never surrender my principles and my promises to the people of the country and of Louisiana. I shall never voluntarily give up the fight that I promised I would make for the people of the United States and for the people of Louisiana. I shall never voluntarily give it up, but I shall be glad the day the people tell me to get out. There are not men enough in the United States Senate to tell them that, either. They can all go down there who want to do so. There are not enough men in Washington to tell them that, and they can all go down there and they can empty the United States Treasury, including the $5,000,000,000, like they are emptying part of it now, and they will come back with nothing done. I am afraid they will, but if the result shall be to the contrary it would not abash me for the moment.

I shall keep the word I gave those people, whether the President does or not. God made me keep my word long before I ever heard of the President. I shall keep my word to my people. I shall keep my word to them and those who may ridicule the phrase "share our wealth" in this country should remember there is only one ground upon which they can ridicule me and not ridicule the President, and that is because I kept my word and he did not. That is the only difference. They can only criticize my stand as compared and contradistinguished to his on the ground that I am being more sincere, and on no other ground.

Let us see about the tariff question now. I have before me the Democratic platform of 1928 which says:

The Democratic tariff legislation will be based on the following policy:

I am reading from the platform. This is the platform upon which I was elected to the United States Senate by the Democrats of Louisiana. I read:

(a) The maintenance of legitimate business and a high standard of wages for American labor.

(b) Increasing the purchasing power of wages and income by the reduction of those monopolistic and extortionate tariff rates bestowed in payment of political debts.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. LONG. Not right now; a little later.

I continue reading:

(d) Duties that will permit effective competition, insure against monopoly, and at the same time produce a fair revenue for the Government.

Here is the line that counts:

Actual difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, with adequate safeguard for the wage of the American laborer, must be the extreme measure of every tariff rate.

That is the basis of the Democratic Party's tariff policy that was adopted in 1928 and it has never been repealed. That tariff platform which the Democratic Party adopted in 1928 was not changed one bit in 1932. It was left there, and there were some additional pronouncements. I was elected on that platform. Whenever the time comes that I have to stand here and let Japan sell Brazil's cotton right on the shore of New Orleans, La.; whenever I see Germany selling cottonseed oil in Houston; whenever I see the Japanese selling straw hats in Baltimore; whenever I see the Chinese selling toothbrushes in New York City at a price at which it is not possible for the American people to produce them, I am not going to vote for any bill that allows it.

I knew the reciprocal-tariff business was going to mean wreckage to this country. I knew the worst men in the land to handle it were the set that had in charge the tariff business. They have had this idea of talking about world trade, world trade, world trade. Have they got it? Yes; they have it. They have the Japanese doubling their imports into this country. They have the Mexicans and Cubans taking away the farmers' business down in Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida, and Texas. They have the Mexicans selling beef over here. They got what they wanted. Yes; they finally got it. They have been trying to get what they wanted, and they finally got it.

I have this in mind. If the United States Government does not soon change its attitude on the tariff matter I do not know what is going to happen. Over in the Lancashire mills in England they had a celebration just a short while ago.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Does not the Senator think that it was a part of the plan to bring about chaotic conditions that will permit this President, as he himself stated, I believe, to be the last President?

Mr. LONG. I hope I do not have to concur in Mr. Roosevelt's prediction. I do not want to admit that statement, for which I have only the public press and others for verification. I do not want to admit that Mr. Roosevelt's statement that he will be the last President is correct. I do not want to admit that. I am sorry if he made that statement.

Mr. SCHALL. Does not the whole idea and program of this administration point to some definite plan, some great plot, to do away with a representative form of government?

Mr. LONG. I cannot figure out in my mind what it is. I have tried to figure out what it is. I seldom ever question the motives of men to find out what they are trying to do. I have tried to figure out what this administration is trying to do. Once or twice I felt encouraged that things were going to turn around and be different from what I thought at other times. I particularly thought that when we finally drove through a bank guaranty law after a lot of trouble. I thought that when we passed the Johnson public-utility bill. I was very much encouraged after that was done.

I have tried to figure out what they have had in mind. That is particularly true when they began to kill the hogs. There was not enough meat in the country to feed the people then, but they went out and killed the hogs, slaughtered millions of them, killed the pigs, killed the sows so the sows could not breed. They killed the pigs by the million. I tried to figure out what they meant. Had they gone crazy? But the next thing I knew they came along with a cotton program—raise less cotton! Then they began to make contracts with the people not to plant, paying the people not to plow, paying the people not to raise hogs, shooting the cattle down when we needed the milk. They poured the milk in the river in spite of the fact that the people were hungering for it. I tried to figure out what they had in mind.

Thousands and thousands of banks were closed by Mr. Roosevelt. I want to tell you gentlemen something you probably do not know: I practically took my life in my hands in opening up the banks of Louisiana. I will tell you what we did. This is something that has not been printed as yet. I sent out word for the State banks to stay open that Mr. Roosevelt had ordered closed. I sent the message to keep those bank doors open whether they paid the deposits or not, until we got affairs in hand, and he did not dare close them. We finally got a little something done. I have tried to figure out just what this outfit is trying to do, but I cannot figure it out. I cannot make out, to save my life, what it is.

I want to tell you what I think it is. To answer my friend from Minnesota truthfully, I do not believe they ever had any deliberate plot. I do not believe they know what they want to do. One day they want to do one thing, and the next day they want to do another. One day they do not want any tariff, and the next day they want to put a processing tax on an American product. That means that we shall never be able to sell the American product in competition with foreign products, because the cost of the domestic product will be so much higher than that of the foreign product that it will not be possible to sell it on the American market in competition with foreign goods.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question to my friend.

Mr. SCHALL. Does not the Senator think the effect of the first act of the President to which he has just referred, in closing all the banks of the country, was to create a chaotic condition which has been followed by one thing after another? The most charitable construction would be to call these actions insane; but if we follow the plot from beginning to end, remembering the promises that have been broken, there is one definite trend, and ultimately it means the destruction of the Republic and the Constitution. I think—

Mr. LONG. I can yield only for a question.

Mr. SCHALL. I ask the Senator if he does not think, in order that the Democratic Party shall not be insulted, that a better name for this administration would be the N. R. A. party, or the "Nary" party? "Nary" keep your promises; "nary" carry out your platform; "nary" do anything you promised to do, and all the time tend to destroy the Republic and to destroy representative government, creating chaos that will ultimately necessitate the exercise of the power needed to place a king or an emperor at the head of this country.

Mr. LONG. I take that for a question by the Senator. Of course, I refuse to condemn the Democratic Party on that state of affairs. I am undertaking to save the Democratic Party, and to save the principles of the Democratic Party. I still am a Democrat. I think some of my associates have not stayed as true to the party as I have. I have stayed a real Democrat. I have stayed as the Democratic Party said it would do, and I have done the things that democracy should have done, I think. However, my neighbors and my superiors—if they may be so termed; I do not accept any of them as superiors—may think differently.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that when a Senator yields for a question, it is not right to ask him another question until he has answered the first one. The Senator from Louisiana has not answered the question which he has been asked.

Mr. LONG. I answered it as best I could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the point of order made by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Louisiana exculpated the Senator from Minnesota from the charge embodied in my point of order. I made the point of order that when a Senator yields for a question he ought to answer it, and he ought not to yield for a second question until he answers the first one; but the Senator from Louisiana says he has answered the question to the best of his ability, so I suppose it is all right to ask him another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course the Senator having the floor must be the judge as to whether or not he has answered the question.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a further question.

Mr. SCHALL. Does the Senator know that during the Presidential campaign the Russian papers published Franklin "Delaware" Roosevelt's picture, and said that he would be the next President of the United States, and the first communistic President of the United States? Has the Senator any information as to that?

Mr. LONG. I shall have to ask that that question be repeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Official Reporter will read the question.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

Mr. SCHALL. Does the Senator know that during the Presidential campaign the Russian papers published Franklin "Delaware" Roosevelt's picture, and said that he would be the next President of the United States, and the first communistic President of the United States? Has the Senator any information as to that?

Mr. LONG. I do not know that, and I do not believe it.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, one further question: Does the Senator think we have been kept up to date as well as the Russian people on what is going on? It seems that Russia and the communistic element there—Comrade Tugwell and Comrade Bullitt—know more about what is going to happen in the United States than the people of the United States know. Does the Senator realize that 300 newspaper men have been put on the job here to censor the departments, and censor everything in the country, so that the people are absolutely unable to know what is happening and that their Republic is being stolen from them?

No one seems to be willing to let the people know what is going on. I thank God that there is somebody like the Senator from Louisiana who has the courage to stand up here and tell some of the truth, a little of it leaking out!

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator. I do not suppose there is any question to be answered there.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I think there is. The Senator from Louisiana yielded for a question, and I think he ought to answer the Senator from Minnesota, especially the part where he struck hands with the Senator from Louisiana in a new comradeship.

Mr. LONG. It is not a new comradeship.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Louisiana are paying compliments to one another back and forth across the Chamber.

Mr. LONG. I can get along with a western Republican a good deal better than I can get along with some southern Democrats. I do not mind that accusation.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is evident that the Senator can get along with Republicans better than he can with Democrats. He has been that way ever since he has been in the Senate.

Mr. LONG. It is evident that I can get along with some Republicans better than I can with some Democrats. I used to get along pretty well with the Senator from Texas, but he got so far off that I could not stay with him any longer. When I first came here he had up a bill for income taxes, and I was with him on that; and then we got together and made a fight for an oil tariff. I was with him on that. Since that time, however, the Senator from Texas has either parted company with me, or I have parted company with him; I cannot tell which it is.

I think the Senator from Texas voted for reciprocal tariffs. That left us where we never could be friendly on tariffs, at least; but, generally speaking, I get along a great deal better with western Republicans than I do with either eastern or southern Democrats. I do not why that is, but it is generally true.

I know that when I was out campaigning for my friend Mr. Roosevelt for President, I never fought any western Republicans. I fought for both the western Democrats and the western Republicans. I do not care much about the party business, except to preserve good government and to preserve and help the American people. I will be frank. Had the Democratic Party nominated some of its candidates, and had the Republican Party nominated some of its candidates, I would have rather gone Republican than to have gone Democratic in the last election. I am for feeding and clothing and housing the American people, and having them live respectably. Whether or not it is believed by my colleagues and by the American people, I think I am at least sincere when I say that I want to see happy children and happy people in the United States. I want to see children in school, and children in college, and children fed, and children housed, and children clothed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator wants to see so many happy people, how about happy Senators?

Mr. LONG. I am not worried about them.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why not let us go home for supper?

Mr. LONG. I think the Senators have developed voracious appetites, and it is impossible to make them happy. Every time one favor is done for them, I think they want two more. I do want to see happy American people. However, I want to see children clothed and children fed, and men, women, and children well to do. They can all be well to do. I think the system of greed and rapacity that is running this country so that a few can be rich, and a few can be well to do, and the many must be paupers, can be abolished in America, and it should have been abolished long ago.

How are we going to bring that about so far as men are concerned, I do not know, but I do know the laws that will do it; all I am trying to do is to get men to declare for those laws, and when they declare for them to try to convince them and persuade them, and, if necessary, drive them to keep their word. I am not in favor of the man who makes a political promise and then will break it. I want to convince him he should keep his word; if he will not do it, I am in favor of trying to make him do it, and to endeavor to make him see that the only thing for him to do is to keep his word.

Any Senator who wants to do so may go and eat. I want to say that no one will have the right to say that I am starving him, because I am not doing any such thing. Any Senator who wants to go eat may eat. Let them eat, and let there be somebody else who can eat. I have no idea when I am here occupying the floor trying to provide means by which other people may eat of keeping my colleagues from eating. That is the last thing in my mind.

Mr. President, if I could get Senators who want to help the other man eat, just as they want to eat themselves, we would have everything fixed up; things would be "hunkydory" in a few days. I can tell you that from 18,000,000 to 20,000,000 people would be eating tomorrow night and the night after that, if we would pay the debt we have owed the soldiers for the last 17 years. Here we have sat and owed them for 17 years.

I do not worry about Senators any more than Senators worry about me. They have long since quit worrying about me. There may be some of them that worry a little about me. If I should be defeated in Louisiana in January, I suppose they would say, "I think that is much better", though there might be one or two who would feel a little sorry for me, perhaps 10 or 12; although that number may be a little high. But I have myself to take care of, and the way I am doing it is by trying to take care of the children and the men and women who are affected by this kind of legislation. I want the world to know that I am a politician first, and I want the world to know that I am a good politician. I should like the world to think I am a pretty good politician. I am a good politician by following the dictates of my heart and the dictates of my mind. It is good politics to do what I am doing tonight. It is good politics because it is right; it is good politics because it is for justice; it is good politics to call the attention of the American people to the fact that their last constitutional prerogative which has not been invaded is being fought for on the floor of the Senate tonight by undertaking to keep the President from doing what none of the Presidents has done during 146 years. It is good politics; the best in the world.

Let the President of the United States get up his crowd. I will help him get up a crowd. If he wants a crowd to talk to, I will help him get it. I helped him get up the last one. When he wanted the farmers to come here and wanted to talk to them, I helped him get a lot of them. I did for a fact. Of the 400 farmers who came here from Louisiana, I helped some of them to get here.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator mean to say, or does he charge here, that the President of the United States inspired and stirred up the farmers to make the trip to Washington?

Mr. LONG. I understood the department—

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not asking what the Senator understood; I want to know if he is making that statement?

Mr. LONG. No; not exactly that.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator ought not to insinuate or intimate things about the President of the United States or about any Senator unless he has some information.

Mr. LONG. I am not insinuating. Here is my information, and I am willing that the Senator should have it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not want the Senator's information. I want to know if he stands here as a Senator, and, on his responsibility as a Senator, makes the charge that the President of the United States stirred up the recent pilgrimage of the farmers to Washington?

Mr. LONG. I will answer; I have the floor and I can say what I want to say. I will answer that directly; no, with this explanation. My understanding is that those in control of the A. A. A. wanted the farmers from throughout the United States to come here on a certain day, and that they also let them understand that those who came would go over to the White House and see the President and he would make them a speech. That is my understanding. I want to say that I helped get some of them here. I say, let them come if there is no harm to be done by coming here, and I could not see any harm.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to say to the Senator that his understanding, if that is his understanding, is not correct. I know that the arrangement to see the President was made after they arrived in Washington and was made at the request of the farmers and not at the request of the President.

Mr. LONG. Maybe that is so, but, since my friend is giving me all this information, how did this trip all come about?

Mr. CONNALLY. It originated as every farmer knows, and as the Senator would know if he talked to any farmer from Louisiana, among the farmers themselves. One of the leaders of the movement was a man by the name of C. H. Day, from my State. The farmers paid their own way; they made up the money in each community. There was left in my office a list showing by the different counties where farmers contributed 50 cents, 20 cents, 25 cents, and the names of the donors. In that way the farmers paid their way to Washington. The movement was not incited by the President. The Department of Agriculture has repeatedly issued statements through the press, statements which have gone undenied, that they did not incite the trip, but that it was generated among the farmers themselves. There was a large delegation here from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. There were 400.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want the record to show what the Senator from Louisiana is saying about them and that the President of the United States and the Department of Agriculture stirred them up to come here; because I happened to have had some contacts with them, and, I know, if they came from Louisiana as they came from other States, they came of their own accord and at their own expense.

Mr. LONG. May I ask the Senator how did all these farmers from the different States know to come here on the same day?

Mr. CONNALLY. They knew that; they had some intelligence; the farmers are not all fools.

Mr. LONG. I did not think so.

Mr. CONNALLY. They had contacts, and the arrangements were made something like 30 days before the trip was actually undertaken. They corresponded back and forth through their organizations; it was advertised that they were coming at a certain time; and everybody who wanted to come from a State came. I am surprised that the Senator from Louisiana, representing a great agricultural State, should try to insinuate and reflect upon the farmers who came here to Washington.

Mr. LONG. On the contrary, I do not insinuate as to them, and I had understood the facts to be substantially as the Senator from Texas states them; but somebody had to call them from the 48 States; or they all could not have come at one time. I understood that the A. A. A. wanted them to come, and I wanted the farmers to come from Louisiana and I helped some of them to come. So far as the 400 that came from Louisiana is concerned, if all the farmers of Louisiana are like the 400 who came here, I would be in pretty good shape. I saw delegations of farmers from several other States who called on me.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did any farmer from Louisiana tell the Senator that the President had stirred this movement up and gotten them to come here?

Mr. LONG. No; and I did not say that, either.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator said that he understood certain things.

Mr. LONG. I understood that the A. A. A. people and the Agricultural Department wanted to get a delegation of farmers to come here and did so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator if any farmer from Louisiana who came to Washington ever told him that he came because the A. A. A. authorities induced him to come?

Mr. LONG. I do not know whether any of them told me that or not.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did they or did they not?

Mr. LONG. I do not know.

Mr. CONNALLY. Where did the Senator get his understanding?

Mr. LONG. I got my understanding that the A. A. A. got delegations to come here from the States.

Mr. CONNALLY. There were 400 farmers, supporters of the Senator, so he says, who came from Louisiana, and if he wanted information as to why they came to Washington, why did he not ask a single one of them if they had been sent here by the Department of Agriculture or by the President of the United States? I am surprised that the Senator from Louisiana has so little confidence in the integrity and standing of the farmers from his own State that when he was in search of information he should not have gone to the very source of it and have asked the farmers of Louisiana, who sent them here and whether they came of their own accord.

Mr. LONG. I was not in search of information. It is generally understood I know that two and two make four, and it is impossible for farmers from 48 States to come from 48 States spontaneously and arrive all at one time. Anyone who has even a little sense would have known that some agricultural agents had something to do with it.

That is not all. Some of them were not farmers; some were agents connected with the Government; some of them were never farmers at all. They came along, all right; they were good fellows. The fare was $48.75 for the round trip from Louisiana up here. Getting on a train in Monroe, La., it was $48.06. Many of them had not been to Washington before, and I was glad they came. There were different delegations; some came from Texas and some from other States; quite a few delegations came to see me, and I told them that I would not vote for the A. A. A. on a bet. It did not seem to affect them at all. They all went away good natured. They did not have anything to gain from me.

I did see one fellow down there who said, "I am a farmer." He looked kind of funny, and I could tell by looking at him that he was not a Long man. I can always tell a Long man just by looking at him. There is a gleam of honesty back in his eyes. [Laughter.] At any rate, I could see that this fellow was not a Long man, yet he was at a farmer's convention. I looked at him a little bit, and I said, "I do not believe you are a farmer", because it is very seldom I see a farmer in my State who is not for me, very seldom.

I said, "Are you a farmer?"

"Well", he said, "in a way I am a farmer."

I said, "How did you get to be a farmer?"

He said he owned either a bank, or a store, or something, which took over 5,000 acres of other people's farms.

I said, "We do not consider your kind as farmers. You are one of the farmers who farm the farmer."

He was the only man I saw who did not look like a Long man. As I said, they were nice looking men.

"Long men" and "honest men" are equivalent terms in our State.

Now I want to say something further. The Senator from Texas almost distracted me from my original line of thought. I want the President to have a crowd.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was only trying to direct the Senator—

Mr. LONG. To what I ought to talk about.

Mr. CONNALLY. To some degree of accuracy. If that distracts him, I am sorry.

Mr. LONG. The Senator is all right. He has treated me all right about this. There is no complaint.

This is what I was trying to tell the Senator and the balance of my hearers—and if the Chair has noticed, my hearers in the Senate have increased. All around here the word has gone out that I am making a splendid speech. [Laughter.] It is going to get better than it has been as I proceed. I am going to make the best speech I have made, after a while, one of the best that any Senator has ever heard, as they will all agree, if they remain.

I am trying to help get up a crowd for the President if he wants to make a speech. I will help get out a crowd. I will get up a crowd of people who will cheer and give him a good clap and applause at anything he wants to say. That is all right. Let us get up a crowd for him.

If he wants to have a crowd and wants people to listen, it is our duty to get up a crowd for him. As he is the Chief Executive of the country, and that is our duty. But I do not see any use in his coming here and calling the two Houses together, calling in the Congress, to receive a lecture on what there is about the bonus we do not know about.

Let us not get funny about this. One of my colleagues says he is anxious to know what the President can tell him. The President has no more information on this matter than the balance of us have. Let us not fool ourselves. They have a set of boiler-plate figures they claim show that this has been done and that has been done, and a few other things, and that there is nothing more to do about it.

This is what should happen; this resolution should be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee ought to make a speedy report as to whether this proposal is constitutional or not. I am willing to have a study made of it by the Committee on the Judiciary, and if that committee shall say this is in keeping with the Constitution and the precedents, I will be willing to waive my objection and abide by the rule of the majority. I am a member of that committee. That is what I think ought to be done with the resolution.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has suggested the absence of a quorum, and the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make the point of order that the Senator from Louisiana has surrendered the floor. He has left the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point is well taken.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make the point of order, and I claim the floor in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator claim the floor?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do; and I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator claims the floor?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. NYE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the motion the Senator from Texas makes?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield for that purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. If I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will not lose the floor. Does the Senator yield so that some other Senator may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Legislative Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Connally	Long	Pittman
Bachman	Costigan	McGill	Pope
Bailey	Dickinson	McKellar	Radcliffe
Barbour	Dieterich	McNary	Robinson
Barkley	Duffy	Maloney	Russell
Bilbo	George	Minton	Schall
Black	Guffey	Moore	Schwellenbach
Brown	Hale	Murray	Sheppard
Bulow	Keyes	Neely	Stelwer
Byrd	King	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Byrnes	La Follette	Nye	Thomas, Utah
Clark	Loneragan	O'Mahoney	Truman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order. I had the floor when I called for the quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Louisiana yielded the floor, that no business had been transacted when the quorum was called, and that the Senator from Louisiana has spoken twice on the same subject during the present day.

Mr. LONG. I move, as a substitute, that the concurrent resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Louisiana on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has not the floor; therefore he cannot make the motion. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I move that the concurrent resolution—

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Louisiana has not the floor for the purpose of making a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No motion can be made by the Senator. The Senator from Louisiana has not the floor, and cannot make a motion.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order. Cannot the concurrent resolution be referred to a committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It cannot. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have not finished my speech. I had the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that the Senator has spoken twice on the same subject during the present day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has had the floor twice in one legislative day upon the pending concurrent resolution, and the rules of the Senate provide that he cannot have the floor again. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NYE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. He is unavoidably absent because of illness in his family. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I am prepared to vote, and therefore I shall vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with that Senator. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McNARY. I am advised that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] are necessarily absent. If present, they would vote "yea."

I also announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] with the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]; and

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

I further wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]; and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is it in order to ask for a recapitulation of the vote?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask that the vote be recapitulated.

The vote was recapitulated.

Mr. NYE. My colleague [Mr. FRAZIER] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is unavoidably absent. Were he present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BONE] is unavoidably absent. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. ASHURST. My colleague [Mr. HAYDEN] is detained from the Chamber on important matters. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. DIETERICH. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], is unavoidably absent. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MURRAY. The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is unavoidably absent. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. RADCLIFFE. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys] is unavoidably detained. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I regret to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also desire to announce that the following Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate: The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

I am advised that if present and voting these Senators would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 4, as follows:

YEAS—43

Ashurst	Clark	Lonergan	Pittman
Bachman	Connally	McGill	Pope
Bailey	Costigan	McKellar	Radcliffe

MEMORIAL SERVICES

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives presided.
The Chaplain, Dr. Montgomery:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread; and forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil; for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Interstate Male Chorus sang, "Going Home", by Dvorak.

The Chaplain, Dr. Montgomery:

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever. Amen.

Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

O, yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood;

That nothing walks with aimless feet;
That not one life shall be destroy'd,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete;

That not a worm is cloven in vain;
That not a moth with vain desire
Is shrivelled in a fruitless fire,
Or but subserves another's gain.

So runs my dream; but what am I?
An infant crying in the night;
An infant crying for the light,
And with no language but a cry.

I falter where I firmly trod,
And falling with my weight of cares
Upon the great world's altar-stairs
That slope thro' darkness up to God,

I stretch lame hands of faith, and grope,
And gather dust and chaff, and call
To what I feel is Lord of all,
And faintly trust the larger hope.

Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead thou me on!
The night is dark, and I am far from home—
Lead thou me on!
Keep thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene—one step enough for me.

I was not ever thus, nor prayed that thou
Shouldst lead me on;
I loved to choose and see my path; but now
Lead thou me on!
I loved the garish day, and spite of fears,
Pride ruled my will. Remember not past years.

So long thy power hath blest me, sure it still Will lead me on O'er moor and fen, o'er crag and torrent, till
The night is gone,
And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which I have loved long since, and lost awhile.

We praise Thee, our Father in Heaven, for those qualities of soul that bind us together at such a time as this. We are grateful that at each swelling of Jordan comes a vision, each hunger in the wilderness has its angel, and each Gethsemane has its flower. We dedicate this hour to retrospection; let it be sweetened by Thy presence, and may all tremors be calmed. We thank Thee for the glad assurance of immortality. In the glow of this faith, the clouds separate and are lifted. Blessed be the God of all comfort, who giveth peace in the deepest sorrow and in the saddest bereavement. Grant Thy richest blessing upon those whose days are shadowed; the retreating footfalls of their loved ones have died away and they are alone. May they journey on through morning skies within Thy everlasting arms. Help us to learn of that love that casteth out fear. Finally, bring us to that heavenly fellowship with the Master, and with those noble souls clothed in the livery of God's house, Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ROLL OF DECEASED MEMBERS

Mr. Patrick J. Haltigan, reading clerk of the House, read the following roll:

Died January 13, 1935.

Mrs. NORTON, a Representative from the State of New Jersey, standing in front of the Speaker's rostrum, placed a memorial rose in a vase as the name of each deceased Member was read by the Clerk.

Then followed 1 minute of devotional silence.

Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, a Representative from the State of Virginia, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS OF HON. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM

Mr. Speaker, once again we pause to linger for a season in memory of our late colleagues "whom we have loved and lost awhile." On this day the sword of partisan conflict is sheathed; political differences and contests of opinion are laid aside; weighty and vexing problems of state are for the moment forgotten; and we meet as comrades to turn back the pages of memory and live over again those days with our friends of yesterday.

It is with mixed emotions of joy and sadness that we gather upon this occasion—joy because we have known and loved these great men; sadness because we miss them. We call their names. We seek them in familiar places. They are not here. They have gone. Only memory is left.

Where is now the merry party
I remember long ago,
Laughing 'round the Christmas fireside
Brightened by its ruddy glow;
Or in summer's balmy evening
In the field upon the hay?
They have all dispersed and wandered,

Far away.

Some have gone to lands far distant,
And with strangers made their home;
Some upon the world of waters,
All their lives are forced to roam;
Some have gone from us forever,
Longer here they might not stay,
They have reached a fairer region,

Far away.

As name after name of our departed colleagues has been called here today, our memories have been traveling back to many scenes and incidents connected with our associations and their service in this body. We look back down the years perhaps to a day when amid the glamour of freshly won political laurels a bright-eyed youth, with agile step and a heart beating high with ambition and hope, walked down the aisle of this Chamber to receive the oath of office from the Speaker of this House. The years have come and gone. We saw him again here in this Chamber in victory and in defeat; we have seen the flash of his steel and heard the clang of his armor in battle. We felt the impression of his activities and watched his labor in the interest of the cause he espoused. But, my brethren, imperceptibly at times, silently often, but always surely and inevitably, the passing years take their toll. Under the heavy load and strain we saw that once agile form bend under its burdens; the eye that once sparkled with ambition grow dim with the strain, and the raven locks yield to the biting frosts of passing winters; and one day we were saddened by the news that this friend, this comrade, this collaborer, had answered the last roll call, had embarked upon life's greatest adventure. We had witnessed, my friends, the drama and tragedy of life, with its sunshine and shadows, its hopes and disappointments, its victories and defeats, its life and death.

How happy we are that it was our privilege to know, to love, and to labor with these comrades of yesterday, each with his own characteristic vices and virtues, each with his own philosophy and his own viewpoint, often as widely separate and apart from our own as the North from the South, and yet they were our friends. I have often thought that perhaps there was no place or no body of men where associations were so remarkable or friendships quite so close as in this body. In the years that I have served in the Congress I can think of many outstanding instances of remarkable friendship, often strange and unaccountable. There comes to my mind at the moment the great personal friendship, which was in reality a deep-seated affection, that existed between the distinguished and beloved former Speaker, Nicholas Longworth, and the present distinguished Vice President, John N. Garner. In political battle that called for keen wit, ingenious strategy, and indefatigable labor, these two great men never gave quarter, nor expected it. Yet, personally, it was "Jack" and "Nick", and I am sure some of my hearers today, like myself, number among their most precious recollections those rare and delightful occasions when after the labor of the day was over, Jack and Nick and their intimate friends met for a season in social contact.

There is no more honorable mission than to be chosen to represent a constituency in the United States House of Representatives. It is an honor that may well be coveted by our fellow citizens. The Congress is the most distinctly representative legislative body in the world. Here we find literally and actually a cross section of the American people. Every school of thought, every political philosophy has in this Hall its representative, as it has the right to have. If we at times seem to be in confusion and wandering in a wilderness of conflicting objectives, then it is largely because the American people are unsettled and undetermined. This Congress is just what the American people wish it to be. Individually and collectively, its Membership compares most favorably with any other group of American citizens. Upon the roster of the Congress we find the names of men who have been leaders in the business and the commercial life of the Nation as well as those who have served their communities and their States and the Nation in places of high honor and great responsibility, both in the judicial and the executive branches of government. Every type and every calling is represented here. Let us not forget for an instant that every Member of this House holds his commission only because a majority of the citizens of his district, entitled to suffrage, desired that he represent them. He will be kept here or retired, rewarded or condemned, according to whether that same constituency shall feel that he has served them well or ill. This is representative government in its truest sense. So long as that continues, the Republic is safe. It seems to be a popular pastime to ridicule and criticize the national legislative body. It is always open season on Congress. I suppose this is no different today from what it has been in other days; nor do I make any complaint. Undoubtedly, we often deserve and merit criticism.

Unquestionably, the casual visitor in our galleries, noting a scarcity of attendance, a lack of interest, and oftentimes bedlam and confusion will form a very erroneous and unjustifiable opinion of this body and its work. He perhaps has not taken into consideration the fact that the speeches being made upon the floor, under the rule of general debate, have little relation to the legislation under consideration, and that the particular bill or resolution, which will ultimately pass, and probably without contest, has been the subject of weeks and months of careful thought and patient study by a responsible committee of the House. He does not take into account the fact that the real work, the determining battles are in committee work, and that often the issues are settled before the legislation comes up for consideration. There may be found in this Membership some of the most conscientious and hard-working men I have ever known—men who literally grind out and spend their very life's energy in an effort to serve. We are made up of just plain human beings, with all of the frailties and imperfections of the race. I do say, however, that the Membership of this House individually are men of honor and capacity, striving, according to their own individual opinions and the understanding that they have, to serve their constituencies and their country; and I say very deliberately and emphatically that if you give this House the true facts, and sufficient time for deliberate and orderly consideration, its ultimate determinations will generally be in keeping with American ideals and for the best interests of our people.

As I meditated upon this occasion, my mind went back 10 years to a day when a great man stood upon the Speaker's rostrum, about to relinquish voluntarily the high robes and office of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The day was March 4, 1925, and Mr. Speaker Gillett was leaving the House of Representatives after 32 years of service to accept a commission as a Member of the United States Senate. I commend to you, my colleagues, that you read the entire remarks of Mr. Speaker Gillett on that occasion. For the purposes of this ceremony, however, I desire to quote briefly from his address:

It is the fashion to sneer at Congress, as it always has been the fashion, and I have no doubt always will be, because Congress is expected by legislation to put into concrete and definite form the hazy and contradictory ideals of the people, and as realization generally falls short of expectation, as "man never is but always to be blest", so congressional action must always be disappointing.

This House becomes in time a pretty infallible judge of a Member's merit. It learns to appraise motives. It discriminates between the modest men who with sincerity are trying to render service and the men who are working only for display and self-advancement.

And it is refreshing to note that although the home folks may often be deceived by the fake statesman who is always playing to the gallery, yet here the sincere and industrious and modest man has his recognition and his reward. I would deem the genuine esteem and respect and confidence of this body the highest tribute a man could earn.

You may remember when first elected Speaker I said that I had attained the goal of my desires and my ambition was completely satisfied. I feel exactly now as I did then. Thanks to you, my friends, my enjoyment of it has been equal to my anticipation. I would rather be Speaker of this House than hold any other position in the world, and it was no ambition or initiative of my own that led me to relinquish it.

Such, my colleagues, were the sober reflections of a great man who had rendered a great service to his country. Not only did Mr. Speaker Gillett prize and value his service in this body, but I am thinking of another great Speaker and of his last remarks in this body. On March 4, 1931, Mr. Speaker Longworth adjourned the Seventy-first session of Congress and walked out of this Chamber never to enter again. I read you his remarks because they were prophetic:

The SPEAKER. Mr. Byrns, Mr. Crisp, and you, my colleagues, I need not say that I am profoundly grateful for this demonstration of your affection. Perhaps this is the last time I will address you from this rostrum. [Laughter and applause.] I do not mean to insinuate I regard it as a probability, but I must admit it is a possibility. The decision lies with none of us here. It is a decision that lies with an All-Wise Providence. It is only an All-Wise Providence who is going to determine which of the two great political parties will organize the next House of Representatives.

With whatever Providence may decree I am abundantly satisfied. [Applause.] I ought to be, for but three Speakers of the House in all history will have had a longer term of consecutive service than I have had.

I have enjoyed practically every minute of it, except a few minutes last night. [Laughter and applause.] But even during those few minutes when some Members struck me as being, perhaps, a trifle bothersome, I esteemed them all, as I have esteemed every Member here during my service of 6 years, without one single exception. [Applause.] If I am to retire from this office, I do so with profound gratitude to my colleagues, not so much for having elevated me to this, the greatest office in any legislative branch in any government in the world, but more for the evidence of the esteem and confidence you have had in me.

And now, the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, I declare this Congress adjourned sine die. [Applause.]

In all of my experience I do not know of any incident that more tragically demonstrates the uncertainty of our existence. Today we are here, gathered together in strength and happiness. Not a man among us can tell when the flying shaft of death will find its mark and add his name to the list of those who have gone before. How careful, therefore, we should be that in the heat of conflict there be no word or act that will leave its personal sting or an unhappy memory.

Our colleagues whose names we call and whose services we honor today lived and served as best they could, each according to his own light and ability. An ancient Grecian legend tells us that once a year the Goddess of Thebes came to visit her city and land; that if she sat upon the log that had been blasted by the lightning stroke, behold! green vines sprang up to cover its blackness and decay; if she stepped in murky waters wherein lurked death and disease, lo! springing fountains of life-giving waters sprang up wherever her feet pressed upon the slimy soil; little children sang and danced for joy as she passed by; and all the world was brighter and better because of her coming. The world has been a better place and our lives have been brightened and sweetened because of the coming, the knowing, and the serving of these our absent comrades.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, in his fascinating and charming volume, Camp Fires and Guide Posts, tells the story of an ancient legend which says that at the beginning of the sixth century after Christ the Island of Britain was popularly believed to be the country of the dead; that on the opposite coast from Brittany there were some villages occupied by fishing people and farmers. These simple people were not required to pay tribute or taxes because, according to their legend, they were under obligation to serve as the ferryman of souls. According to the ancient legend, at the darkest hour of some night these simple folk were aroused by loud knocking at their doors, and an invisible voice called them to their task. They repaired to the beach and to their boats—not their own boats, but stranger boats—loaded down to the sinking point, though they appeared to be empty, and an hour later with their invisible load they reached an island. The invisible passengers disembarked upon the mysterious island and their invisible conductor assigned them to their places, to their tasks, to their rewards, to their punishment. The simple fisher folk returned to their villages, there to take up their routine life until the next knocking at the door by night, or until the time should come when they would be among the mysterious and invisible passengers. What of the voyage and where the island? Who was the pilot and what was the hereafter? My friends, I cannot tell you the answer to these questions. I do not know how long the voyage, when we shall embark, or what awaits us on the other shore, but I do know there is a pilot who knows the way, and I have an abiding faith and confidence that for those who keep the faith there will be another day when the broken ties of friendship and love will be welded together in a chain of eternal life.

Sometime at eve, when the tide is low,
I shall slip my moorings and sail away,
With no response to the friendly hall
Of kindred craft in the busy bay.
In the silent hush of the twilight pale,
When the night swoops down to embrace the day,
And the voices call in the water's flow—
Sometime at eve, when the tide is low,
I shall slip my moorings and sail away.

Through purple shades that darkly trail
O'er the ebbing tide of the unknown sea,
I shall fare me away with a dip of sail
And a ripple of waters to tell the tale
Of a lonely voyager, sailing away
To mystic isles, where at anchor lay
The craft of those who have sailed before,
O'er the unknown sea to the unseen shore.

A few who have watched me sail away
Will miss my craft from the busy bay;
Some friendly barks that were anchored near,
Some loving souls that my heart held dear,
In silent sorrow will drop a tear.
But I shall have peacefully furled my sail
In moorings sheltered from storm and gale,
And greeted the friends who have sailed before
O'er the unknown sea to the unseen shore.

The Interstate Male Chorus sang "Worship of God in Nature", by Beethoven.

HON. CHARLES L. GIFFORD, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, delivered the following address:

ADDRESS OF HON. CHARLES L. GIFFORD

Mr. Speaker, a fitting custom sets aside this hour to pay loving tribute and affectionate remembrance to those Members who, during the past 12 months, have passed the Great Divide. We wish to commune with them today. What the wavelengths? What the power to use that they may hear and understand? This occasion should mean more than the mere paying of respect to their memory. It reminds us that it is still possible for men of many minds, gathered from every section of a wide-flung nation, men of divergent interests, different faiths and conflicting theories of government, to meet on common ground, with complete unanimity of thought and purpose to do them honor. We should go forth from this Chamber inspired by a new determination to put aside personal prejudice, to be more understanding and patient regarding the opinions which march contrary to our own and to strive more earnestly for a similar meeting of mind on every occasion affecting that other common task, the service of the best interests of our beloved country.

In troubled times such as these, when we, who are charged with a major share in the making of the Nation's laws, healing her ills, and preserving her cherished institutions, are beset by extraordinary difficulties, there must come to each of us moments when the burden seems heavy, indeed. Are we not sometimes tempted to look ahead to the end of all this earthly strife and striving, especially when we recall religion's comforting assurance that there is another and far-better life beyond for those who have here earned the right to enjoy it? At least we can rejoice in the attainment thereof by those who have won their way after having given their best to the public service as we face the tasks left for us to carry on.

We cannot know what may be beyond the world's horizon. But if, as so many confidently believe, death is but the gateway to a richer, more abundant life, where the spirit form may go on, freed from the limitations imposed by human nature and the conflicts bred of the nationalism, sectionalism, and inherited prejudices of earth, then those who have made their escape by that door may in truth be regarded as fortunate. For who would not gladly be free from the personal prejudices of inherent inhumanity; free to chart his course by a fine ideal unswayed by all those conflicting influences? If what we believe is true, how happy are they who have no longer the necessity of shaping their conduct to the exigencies of this life, who never know the bitterness of defeat in battle for a cause on which their hearts were set, who never have the dissatisfaction of soul which comes from yielding to compromise.

It is for them, we hope, to be what all of us would wish to be—completely honest. It is for them to follow their own true desires and high ideals, freed from the restricting influences of earth. If statecraft was here their chosen pursuit, they may follow it there in its truest sense, unswayed by thought of material reward or mundane honors. In that better land there may be no new laws to frame, but they have become a part of the universal laws which have endured, and shall endure, through time. Theirs it is to learn at last what constitutes perfection in the giving and administration of law. They are now like the artists described with the imagery of the poet in the lines:

And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame;

And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame,
But each for the joy of the working, and each, in his separate star, Shall draw the thing as he sees it for the God of things as they are.

A famous philosopher once remarked that if there were no God it would have been necessary for mankind to invent one. Similarly, if we had no positive assurance of an after-life it would have been necessary for humanity to create an imaginary one to serve as a goal and a reward for mortal life well lived and an incentive to honest endeavor here on earth. But we have that assurance. And whether an individual regards the hereafter as typified by heavenly choirs and streets of gold, the peace of green pastures and still waters, or celestial spheres for new and wider endeavor, the thought of immortality cannot but bring comfort to those who are left behind whenever the silver cord has been broken and loved ones have gone on ahead.

May the relatives and friends assembled here receive comfort and take honest pride in the knowledge of how greatly we honor their dead. May their faith in a further reunion be confirmed and strengthened as they listen to our confession of that faith and belief. May they feel assured that their loved ones now gone ahead have been assigned the promised mansions and are making them ready for their coming. Let them not fear the future.

It is not death to die,
To leave this weary road,
And midst the brotherhood on high
To be at home with God.

It is not death to close
The eye long dimmed with tears,
And wake in glorious repose
To spend eternal years.

No, no, it is not dying
Heaven's citizen to be;
A crown immortal wearing,
And rest unbroken sharing,
From care and conflict free.

Thoughts of this nature must come to all of us during moments like the present. Nevertheless it is essential that we turn from them to rededicate ourselves to the tasks that we are called upon to perform here while we yet remain.

How heavy those tasks are! How grave the problems with which we are today confronted! We are Americans. In most of us has been instilled the firm belief that our form of government is the best that has yet been devised. Liberty under law is our heritage, and any form of absolute dictatorship or political system under which the State is everything, the individual nothing, is distasteful or abhorrent to us. Our republican democracy is now being weighed in the balance. The scales are not counterbalanced by reason, but by a confusion of fears, hostilities, and passions born of prejudice and demagogic appeals, all resulting from unsettled economic conditions and the changing pattern of society. Should we allow ourselves to be swept off our feet by a flood of hysterical fears, of temporary character, into the abandonment of political theories and institutions which have stood the test of a century and a half of peace and storm alike? Which have proved their worth repeatedly under the vicissitudes of our national life and helped to make and keep our Nation great?

St. Paul's words of advice spoken to the Thessalonians are still sound: "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

The gravest danger with which our land is faced is the tendency of people who have known misery and want, and grown discouraged or bitter in consequence, to run after false prophets who offer them cure-alls appealing to the imagination, regardless of what judgment pure reason may pass upon their panaceas. It is true that we are the people's Representatives, chosen to give expression to their collective will; yet at crucial times like these we have a duty far transcending that—a duty to employ all the power of intellect and strength of character with which we may have been individually endowed, to stand firmly against the pressure of passion and prejudice, to the full extent of our ability proving all things with conscientious care and holding fast to that which time has shown to be good.

This, O departed colleagues, is our supreme test today. We are the trustees of American democracy and American institutions, and their preservation for posterity, unimpaired, depends on how we administer that trust.

While the fundamentals of human nature change but little and the innate characteristics of individual men can rarely be altered to any great extent, there do seem to come brief periods of stress in the course of history when—by the grace of God—mortals are enabled to rise above their normal selves. We are mere men, representative in more than one sense of the average citizens who sent us here, with all their good and bad qualities, their strength, and their weaknesses. Yet at this hour it is incumbent upon us to make ourselves, so far as possible, like those officials described in the Book of Exodus as "able men, such as fear God, men of truth hating covetousness, wise men, and understanding." For upon us and what we may do, or fail to do, our cherished institutions and our country's well-being in the future to a large degree today depend.

Surely the eyes of our departed comrades and that whole unseen multitude who gave their best, and often life itself, to preserve our Nation and its institutions, are now upon us. If we yield a jot to the clamor of the demagogue or to the fallacious appeal of those who love not our democracy, we shall be guilty of a breach of faith with them.

To many, impatient for change and who seem to believe that any change would be for the better, the word "conservatism" is seemingly a term of derision and reproach. True conservatism is not reactionary. Life itself is change. To move forward is good so long as that progress is toward a true and not a false ideal. The Great Lawgiver has taught mankind that the path of evolution from chaos to completion is one on which man moves slowly, oh so slowly; one little step at a time. "Rome was not built in a day"—but it was almost destroyed in a night! God grant that the political system painfully and painstakingly builded by our fathers and courageously sustained by our departed colleagues may be protected by us, who are now charged with its preservation. May our solemn oath to support and protect the Constitution be uppermost in our minds during these trying hours. Departed brothers, we feel the pressure of your admonition that we do not falter.

It sometimes seems that there is an inescapable analogy between the present cynicism, bred of the existing disturbances within our social and economic order, and that which existed among the self-styled advanced thinkers who had acquired that dangerous thing, "a little knowledge" of science. Those who now cannot, or will not, see below the surface of things and who sneer at the past, asserting that the social and governmental philosophies of our forefathers are now antiquated and worthless, are like the cult that said the same of what has been called the "ancient" truths of religion. Modern science, they declared, had exploded them, demonstrating that the Bible was largely a collection of folklore and allegories akin to fairy tales; at most, a book of outgrown superstitions and symbols. According to them, the present was the age of pure reason, when facts were indisputable and the material things all that really counted in life.

Yet now the onward sweep of true science has in its turn confounded them. Month by month, almost day by day, it is alike probing forward and outward into space, discovering more and more proofs that there must be a great and single purpose behind the universe. Archeologists, delving back into the past, are constantly bringing to light new positive evidence to establish the fundamental accuracy of Biblical literature, which the scoffers had declared to be myths. Far from being the enemy of religion, science is slowly but surely demonstrating the essential truth of these old verities. And so will history and political science eventually again pronounce that our own American institutions were fundamentally sound; that our Constitution—the rock upon which we have been bulld—still stands as one of the greatest single achievements of the mind and purpose of mankind. Have we not claimed that God himself has ever directed our destinies?

To the self-styled "rationalists" the spiritual life was another religious myth. Man was mere matter that had, through evolution, been endowed with a material instrument with which to think. But now science has established the fact that matter itself—even in its most solid form—is not simply substance but, in reality, just one form of the same sort of energy which pervades all things, not only on the earth but throughout the ever-widening universe. There is a kinship between the clod of earth and the cosmic ray; and each new advance of pure science more and more conclusively establishes the essential continuity and unity of all things in the heavens above, the earth below, and the waters under the earth. What mankind first merely imagined, moved by faith, science is now establishing as fact. The poet was not greatly exaggerating when he wrote the lines—

All things by immortal power
Near and far, hiddenly,
To each other link-ed are;
That thou canst not pluck a flower
Without trembling a star.

With this thought in mind, can we not well believe that the spirit of man is essentially a part of the cosmos, capable—under proper conditions and in some manner not yet disclosed to us—of making contact with the spirits of those others, whose mortal bodies have been dissolved? At this time, assuredly, we have need of such spiritual communion with those who, on earth, faced problems similar to our own and who now no longer "see through a glass, darkly." Have we not a right to feel that those who, when on this earth, lived in America, loving her the more because of the sacrifices which they made to create and protect her free institutions, still remember her and wish her well? Can we not believe that they stand ready to lend us of their spiritual strength if we will call upon them? Even though our call is no more than grateful remembrance of what they were and what they did and a conscious endeavor on our own part to emulate and keep the faith with them!

With these thoughts invoked by this time and place, let us revert to the present need which we have to be spiritually strong in the face of the dangers with which our beloved country is now beset. It is our present duty by example and counsel to restore confidence and self-control to those whose feet are faltering; to have self-control. I refer to the familiar lines of a beloved American author.

O beautiful for pilgrim feet,
Whose stern, impassioned stress
A thoroughfare for freedom beat
Across the wilderness!
America! America!
God mend thine every flaw,
Confirm thy soul in self-control,
Thy liberty in law!

With self-control confirmed, the present dangers can be safely passed. Flaws which undoubtedly do exist can be eliminated without destroying the whole noble structure. Those who come after, when we shall have gone on to join our departed comrades in the Great Beyond, will behold the fulfillment of the prophecy:

O beautiful for patriot dream
That sees beyond the years
Thine alabaster cities gleam
Undimmed by human tears!
America! America!
God shed his grace on thee
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

A cornet solo, "The Rosary", by Nevin, was played by Oscar Short, of the United States Navy Band.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pronounced the benediction:

And now, may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the peace of God our Father that passeth all understanding, and the sweetness and fellowship of the Holy Spirit abide with you and keep you always. Amen.

HON. BRONSON CUTTING

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my sorrowful honor to pay my modest tribute to the memory of a man I knew well and admired much. With that thought in mind, I hope the Membership of the House of Representatives will be indulgent while I address myself to the memory of the late Honorable BRONSON CUTTING. Others today will pay tribute to him, and I shall only add mine from the point of view of one who knew him both inside and outside of his official life.

Announcement of the death of my friend smote heavily with sorrow the hearts of his colleagues and legion of friends and brought to me the shock of personal bereavement.

My purpose in this pronouncement is to voice an humble statement to the memory of a great public official and an honorable statesman whose name will be prominently and permanently engraved in our Nation's history.

A newspaperman, a scholar, a statesman, and, above all, an honest gentleman, BRONSON CUTTING rose rapidly to a career that was only fairly started, and his death is all the more tragic because the career he has carved out promised so much for the future. Young in years, as Senators go, and only beginning his second term, Mr. CUTTING already had established a statesmanlike record.

Taken from his birthplace at Oakdale, Long Island, N. Y., on a stretcher to New Mexico suffering from tuberculosis, he literally rose from the grave in the infant State of this great Union to become a powerful factor in the affairs of the Nation. He did everything that was expected of a man of his sterling characteristics, and he did it like the gentleman he was. I wish I had at my command a vocabulary that would better describe my friend who has answered the last roll call. I am frank to admit that I cannot find words with which to express my feelings other than to say, If there is a senate in the hereafter, BRONSON CUTTING is the floor leader.

With all his wealth, his loyalty to his country, which characterizes his life, he did what all Americans of age, and who were honorable citizens, did—he volunteered his services to his country in the World War. Thank God, he was spared to champion the cause of the veterans with whom he helped his country defend the flag which draped the casket that was lowered in the sod in the community he trod as a boy. Men seldom think of the great event of death until a shadow falls across their own pathway, and by a strange quirk of fate my friend and colleague went to that Dark Valley when a fog-bound plane crashed while he was returning to vote on a subject close to his heart—the soldiers' bonus.

As we all know life in the Senate, or the House for that matter, is no flowery bed of ease if a man is as sincere as BRONSON CUTTING was, because both Houses are nothing more than great coliseums of statesmanship where all must stand or fall on merit alone. In either of these Houses of Congress wealth will not win nor power prejudice.

The tragedy of our American life is the fact that our wealthy citizens take so little interest in governmental affairs. BRONSON CUTTING, a wealthy man, came to the United States Senate to serve his people, the residents of the State of New Mexico. He undertook the task and to his everlasting credit he did it well.

Besides his immediate family, including his mother, to whom he was most lovingly devoted, he is survived by a constituency whom he served faithfully; a State which he helped to make better; and a Nation which by an act of God he had to leave. He left behind him a career that merits the applause of all good citizens and a fine example which should be emulated by future sons of the well-to-do.

BRONSON CUTTING ingratiated himself in the affections of his people in his adopted State and his associates in the United States Senate by firmly and indelibly imprinting in the minds of his colleagues the fact that he devoted himself to public service with a combination of conscientious zeal, ability, and personal charm which made him one of the most valuable and effective Members of the Senate. To do this a man must have had some inspiring influence behind him, and that influence was his devoted mother, for whom I have the deepest and most sympathetic regard for having reared such an honorable son, and I share the sorrow of his passing with her.

In conclusion, let me say that BRONSON CUTTING has left in the Senate no enemies. Anyone who ever knew him even slightly was his friend. His adopted home city can ill afford to lose him; New Mexico can ill afford to lose him; and his passing is the Nation's loss. It is a matter of universal regret that a tragic death prevented him from rendering many additional years of useful service to New Mexico and the Nation. I will conclude with a factual statement in this eulogy of my friend: BRONSON CUTTING was an honor man at Harvard; BRONSON CUTTING was an honor man in the United States Senate; BRONSON CUTTING was an honor man with me.

Requiescat in pace!

HON. GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Speaker, deeply mindful and conscious of a personal loss, I desire to express my tribute to the memory of our late colleague GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM. During the term of his distinguished services here as the Representative of the Thirteenth Congressional District of Pennsylvania he exemplified in high degree those qualities of mental attainment, industry, devotion to duty, and friendliness which endeared him to all those privileged to know him.

My acquaintance with Mr. BRUMM dates from the beginning of my service as a Member of the House of Representatives, and our relations as Members of the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress were always most cordial, intimate, and friendly.

He was one of those men it was good to know. Always knightly, generous, and courteous in his contacts with others.

Born and reared in the rich anthracite mining district of his native State and educated under the splendid guidance of his distinguished father, Charles Napoleon Brumm, whose footsteps he followed in his service in the National Congress of his country, GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM brought with him to this body those attainments of head and heart which contributed so well to his distinguished service in the Halls of Congress. He was untiring in his efforts and always sympathetic to the needs and wants of his constituents. Five times they chose him to represent them here, and their confidence in his political judgment never wavered but remained constant to the end. He knew his people as few have known them and was always responsive to their needs and desires. It was his generous spirit of helpfulness that drew the hearts of his people unto him and held their affections.

Mr. BRUMM rendered patriotic military service on the Mexican border and during the World War served on the conscription board and was a member of the speakers' bureau. He knew the soldier, their widows and dependents, and gave them all the aid that was in his power. He knew the miner, the farmer, the worker, and industrialist, and in his service to his home people he knew no political parties, no sects, and no classes.

Useful as he has been in the larger national field, he was of even greater service to his own home people, and in his passing they and we alike feel keenly the loss of a friend whose place cannot be filled.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the passing of GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM, of the Thirteenth District of Pennsylvania, who died May 29, 1934, was for me a heartfelt personal loss. I desire briefly and humbly to pay tribute to one who served his country well as a Representative. FRANK BRUMM, as we all knew him, was a scholar, kind-hearted, agreeable, and one of the most friendly of our colleagues in Congress. He was loyal to his party and always interested in that which would help to make this country a better place to live.

Many times I enjoyed automobile rides over the country roads near Washington and vicinity with him. I would listen intently to his recitals of American history as he would unfold this knowledge in conversation, from the time the Declaration of Independence was written until the present era. He often talked of the Constitution and those who wrote it; and being a student of law, he extolled its virtue. His loyalty to it and his oath to support it were not a mockery but a reality—a fact which he carried out to the letter.

He was a defender of the Nation in the great World War, interested in the ex-service men who were wounded in service, and desirous that they receive proper compensation for their service dependent on their injury or illness.

FRANK BRUMM was a lover of nature; he enjoyed the woods, the streams, the flowers, and the hills—all things that made up the universe—and anything that God had made he admired.

How he extolled the good in his father, mother, and family, honoring and respecting them for what they were and what they meant to him in his boyhood days.

It is therefore with an unusual depth of feeling that I here express my humble tribute to this good friend. He will always live in the hearts of those with whom he was associated. To them he needs no other monument.

The influence which he exerted out of his experience and judgment and flexible character will live on in the structure of our Government. His personality is the heritage which will be ever treasured in the memory of his friends and associates.

These few lines from an unknown author's work are very appropriate at this time:

Sleep on, dear friend, such lives as thine
Have not been lived in vain,
But shed an influence, rare, divine,
On lives that here remain.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, during the faithful and efficient service of GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM in the Congress of the United States, it was my pleasure to know him well and to have frequent opportunity for association with him. Our fathers had served together in the House of Representatives before us, and this was a natural tie which led to a genial friendship.

The worth and ability of this splendid gentleman were known to all who had occasion to observe his service. Blessed with a keen and analytical mind, his private thinking and public utterances were characterized by that somewhat rare quality of absolute intellectual integrity. He was a forceful speaker in the legislative halls and an indefatigable worker for the welfare of our country. His one ideal was to be truly helpful, and to this purpose he devoted his talent and energy without stint.

But my own reflections turn today to the genial association it was my privilege to have with this distinguished son of Pennsylvania. We were affiliated with different political parties, but the rancor of partisanship never marked his public or private contacts. His interest was in America and its betterment.

After all, the things which endear men to us are not their conspicuous achievements but their friendly and human traits which make life happier for all who know them. GEORGE BRUMM and I lived for many years at the same hotel. Often we had our evening meal together and would prolong our chat far beyond the dinner. His kind heart was in keeping with his keen mind. I can never forget our most pleasant association. It was a real joy to know him and have him for a friend. I mourn with his loved ones at his passing. His example will remain as a benediction and inspiration to us all.

Mr. DARROW. Mr. Speaker, a pall of sadness and visible grief was in pronounced evidence when we were advised of the passing of our beloved friend and colleague Hon. GEORGE FRANK BRUMM.

It can truly be said that saddened hearts were not confined to his colleague in Washington, who had enjoyed his intimate acquaintance and who were able by observation, as well as contact and labor with him, to place a high estimate on his ability and worth as a legislator and public servant but by a loyal constituency which he had served so faithfully and energetically.

Mr. BRUMM was born in Minersville, Schuylkill County, Pa., being the son of Charles N. and Virginia Brumm, the former having represented his constituency in eight different Congresses. He was educated in the common schools of Minersville, Washington, and Pottsville, and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania with a bachelor of science degree in 1901. Following his graduation from college he was employed in the insurance business in Pittsburgh, during which time he also studied law. He graduated from the law school of the University of Pennsylvania in 1907 and was admitted to the Pennsylvania bar in January 1908. He engaged in the practice of law as a profession since that time. FRANK BRUMM also served in the military service of his country, enlisting in 1916 as a private, and served as a corporal in Company C, Pennsylvania Engineers, on the Mexican border. During the period of the World War he was attorney for the conscription board, as well as a member of the speakers' bureau of the Three-Minute Men Association.

Mr. BRUMM served as a Member of the Sixty-eighth, Sixty-ninth, Seventy-first, Seventy-second, and Seventy-third Congresses, and within a very short period prior to his death on May 29, 1934, had been renominated by the Republican Party of his district as its candidate for election to the Seventy-fourth Congress.

I was closely associated with FRANK BRUMM during the period of his congressional service, and enjoyed his friendship. I found him to be loyal to his friends, and most enthusiastic and energetic in any cause which he espoused. He was a strong and vigorous American, too soon removed from those who loved him, and from an opportunity to render further patriotic service to his constituency, our State, and country.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the Honorable GEORGE F. BRUMM entered the House of Representatives at the same time I did, in the Sixty-eighth Congress. He was a man of a great deal of force and character and an able debater, and rendered very valuable service to the country.

I always liked him and admired him very much. I regret exceedingly that a man of his character should be stricken down so young.

Mr. HAINES. Mr. Speaker, to know Hon. GEORGE F. BRUMM was to love him.

It was my privilege to serve with this fine gentleman in the Seventy-second and Seventy-third Congresses of the United States, where I became intimately acquainted with him and learned to appreciate his fine qualities of manhood and his worth as a legislator.

In his passing away his district suffered a loss, for he was an efficient, honest, public servant of proven worth.

It was indeed a shock to me to learn of his death and it brought sadness into my heart, as must have been true with the host of his friends.

Born in the great Keystone State, educated in the public schools of that State, and graduated from one of its outstanding universities, the University of Pennsylvania, he later practiced law, entered the military service of his country in the Mexican conflict, and was discharged with honor. During the World War he gave of his time and efforts toward a successful termination.

I found him to be a loyal friend and most enthusiastic and energetic in any cause he was interested in and which had for its objective a better land in which to live.

His passing away was most unfortunate and I desire to join with others in paying tribute.

Mr. WOLFENDEN. Mr. Speaker, the passing of my esteemed friend and colleague, the Honorable GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM, brought to a close the career of a most worthy Representative from the Thirteenth District of Pennsylvania, whose record of service in his district will stand as a perpetual monument to his memory.

We mourn the loss of a man of fine character, of a friendly, gentle nature, a man of broad human sympathy, whose heart was full of love and charity for his fellow men. He was not given to display, but from the very beginning observed in his manner of living a certain simplicity which won for him the confidence and esteem of everyone. He was an ardent champion of whatever cause he espoused; straightforward, courageous, and honest in his views. He was an interesting speaker, and his direct and forceful presentation of a subject commanded the respect and attention of his audience. His capacity for work was apparently unlimited. He was tireless in his services to the people. The request of the humblest constituent received as prompt and faithful response as that of the highest.

GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM was an attorney of ability, but enlisted in the military service in 1916 as a private. During the World War he was an attorney for the conscription board, later running for Congress, where he ably represented his district until his untimely death. He was a strict party man and had the confidence of his party associates.

We have assembled here today to do honor to his memory. Congressman BRUMM has gone from our midst, but he is not forgotten, though the voice of my friend is hushed and a familiar face missing. He was a true patriot and a most efficient public servant, devoted to the interest and welfare of the people of his district. His life, character, and public service are indeed an inspiration and may well be emulated by those who come after him.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to pay reverence to our departed colleague, Hon. GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM, who was not only a credit to the Thirteenth Congressional District of Pennsylvania, which sent him to Congress, but as well to the body in which he served.

Mr. BRUMM was first sent to Congress in 1923, and during his years of service made a host of friends who honored and respected him for his steadfast ideals and for his earnest support of that which he felt to be right and just.

He was an ardent lover of sports and often took part in games with his friends.

I think the most admirable characteristic of GEORGE BRUMM was the closeness in which he had patterned his life after that of his famous father, the Honorable Charles N. Brumm, who was also a member of this great body, and represented the same district in Pennsylvania, as early as the Forty-third Congress. Both having served their country in time of war and as outstanding attorneys and great statesmen.

Born from the common folks whom he loved and served so well, he kept the faith with them and followed the best traditions of his State, serving them not unlike his father had during his long and admirable career.

He participated in the civic activities of his State and served as a private in Company C, Pennsylvania Engineers, on the Mexican border in 1916, and during the World War was an attorney for the conscription board.

In 1923 he was elected as a Republican to the Sixty-eighth Congress, and although an unsuccessful candidate for renomination in 1926 after serving for two terms, he returned to Congress again in 1928, serving his people until his untimely death near the close of the last session, May 29, 1934.

As a Member of Congress he served numerous committees, always endeavoring to put forth the best of his abilities. It may be said that those who had the good fortune to work with GEORGE BRUMM were more than pleased with his unstinted efforts and admired him for his earnest and willing desire to accomplish those duties which were before him.

His is a record of accomplishment and success based on a determination and a sincerity of purpose which comes to those who not only have the ability to see clearly but are alive to their responsibilities to their fellow men. He has left a record of achievement and public service which is not only a credit to his State but another example of devotion to his country, for which our Nation is noted.

In closing, may I trust those members of his innermost home life may be consoled by the consciousness that GEORGE F. BRUMM has left behind with them a heritage of honorable service to his profession, to his city, to his State, to his Nation, and to his friends; and that his death found him in the midst of duty not yet completed and still striving for accomplishments hoped for.

Statesman, yet friend of truth of soul sincere,
In action faithful and in honor clear,
Who broke no promise, served no private end,
Who gained no title and who lost no friend.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, our late friend and colleague from Pennsylvania, GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM, was a dependable legislator. He combined the gift of oratorical ability with that of constructive ability, an unusual combination. He was a logician. As an excellent lawyer he would argue upon the basis of the law and the facts, and when necessary could embellish both with equities and sentiment. His mind was trained in the art of public speaking, an art doubtless inherited from his father, Charles N. Brumm, long a Member of the House, whose forceful eloquence, I am told, often rang through this Chamber.

The younger BRUMM was a devoted student of the Constitution and was recognized as an authority on constitutional questions. He regarded that instrument as the yardstick by which he measured and analyzed every proposed enactment; and if he detected in a proposal either a plain or a covert violation of the supreme law, he felt it to be his bounden duty to oppose such legislation in obedience to his oath "to support and defend the Constitution." Being a man of strong sympathies and possessed of an abundance of the milk of human kindness, it was not always an easy task for him to submerge his inclinations and oppose unconstitutional measures for so-called "social welfare", but he would not compromise his convictions; he would not violate his oath of office, even where there existed a reasonable doubt.

We could not detain him here, but we can emulate his example of courage and fidelity to duty and principle.

Mr. GILDEA. Mr. Speaker, the Thirteenth District of Pennsylvania lost a devoted public servant when, on May 29, 1934, Congressman G. FRANKLIN BRUMM, of Pottsville, was called to his heavenly reward.

The American Legion and all ex-service men lost a devoted friend and champion. A veteran himself, the welfare of those who served our common country was always his foremost consideration.

Anthracite-coal miners lost a representative who never failed to interest himself and express himself in matters pertaining to the welfare of the mine workers or the mining industry.

Independent voters lost a man who was truly independent.

Congressman G. FRANKLIN BRUMM paid allegiance to the party of his choice; but while a Republican in the truest sense of the word, his independence appealed to the entire electorate of the thirteenth district to the end that in the campaign of 1932—a Presidential year—he was elected to his fifth term in Congress by almost the unanimous vote of the district, 92,065 men and women showing their confidence in him by endorsing his candidacy.

Congressman BRUMM grew up in the shadow of the National Capitol. His father, the late Charles Napoleon Brumm, represented the home district in eight different Congresses. His was a proud record of devotion to public service, and of the son it can be truly said he proved himself a worthy son of a worthy father.

In Schuylkill County the name BRUMM stands for courage, loyalty, and intense patriotism.

The highest ideals of citizenship and patriotism are exemplified by the Brumm family, and it is of the man, not the politician or statesman, I would speak in bringing to a close these few words of tribute to a friend.

As a man he had no false conception of his own importance. Truly great in the sense that he always tried to pay the obligation of complete service to his people, he added to his stature by the ease with which he made and kept friends. Friendship proven in the crucible of service was his outstanding characteristic.

Those of us who knew him best mourn his loss. Being called to fill his seat in the Seventy-fourth Congress, I can conceive of no greater honor that might befall me than the ability to follow humbly in the footsteps of my predecessor, secure in the knowledge that he was a man whose service and example are well worth emulating.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, on May 29, 1934, GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM was called to his eternal reward. On that day the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania lost one of its stalwart sons, one who had written his name into the record of noteworthy achievements for the State and for the Nation.

Mr. BRUMM was a lawyer, a soldier, and a statesman. In his chosen profession of the law he enjoyed the confidence of the court and of a large and influential clientele. He was ever mindful of the interests of those who committed their problems to him, and discharged with utmost fidelity his obligations to all whom he represented. As a soldier Mr. BRUMM carried out the splendid traditions of Pennsylvania on the field of battle. A love for country and a devotion to its institutions were the challenge to our colleague to render a service of loyalty and sacrifice for the Nation. Mr. BRUMM served as a distinguished Member of the House of Representatives in the Sixty-eighth, Sixty-ninth, Seventy-first, Seventy-second, and Seventy-third Congresses.

The interests of his constituents and the advancement of the merits of Pennsylvania were his constant care. His geniality and good fellowship won him a wide circle of friends in the House. On the floor and in committee he manifested an unusual ability which commanded the respect of all his colleagues. He championed causes which he believed to be right with earnestness, and fortified his opinions on disputed questions with accurate facts, which he presented with conviction. The record of his life is the record of a learned advocate, a courageous soldier, a sound statesman, and a faithful public servant. He exemplified the highest type of American manhood.

GEORGE FRANKLIN BRUMM had as his motto the declaration of President Lincoln when he said, "Stand with anybody that stands right. Stand with him while he is right and part with him when he goes wrong."

HON. THOMAS COFFIN

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in the time of stress, uncertainty, and insecurity, during the dark days of 1932, the people of the Second Congressional District of Idaho chose from among themselves a native son, THOMAS C. COFFIN, to send as their representative to the seat of government at Washington, to cooperate with their chosen leader, our great President, to plan and put into operation a recovery program to halt the ravages of the depression and promote the general welfare by insuring to our people the principles of liberty and security upon which our Government was founded.

The record that was made by Representative COFFIN in the trying period of rebuilding this Government is a bright page in the history of the illustrious sons of Idaho.

By the death of Mr. COFFIN we have lost one of our valuable Members in the House of Representatives. As a new Member, he has made an enviable record for effective work in support of the great recovery program formulated and being carried into operation by the present administration. By his devotion to the interests of our people and by his industry and application to his duties at the Capitol he has made a record which will endear him to the people of Idaho and will be cherished with increasing appreciation as time passes.

HON. HENRY T. RAINEY

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I deeply appreciate this opportunity to express my tribute to the memory of the late lamented Speaker, HENRY T. RAINEY, who was my friend and mentor. I had formed a high regard and admiration for him long before my election to this body, as I have for many years been interested in the proceedings of Congress and been a reader of the daily RECORD of its deliberations. Consequently, during the past twenty-odd years I had read Speaker RAINEY's addresses and his contributions in the debates in the House and become impressed with his ability and qualities of leadership. When I came to the Capital early in the year 1933, he was one of the first Members with whom I became acquainted and I shall always remember the kindness and courtesy with which he greeted me and his many acts of assistance to smooth the path of a new Member of the House. The fact that I was born in Illinois, which was also his native State, and very dear to him, was probably one of the reasons for his kindly interest in me. He was also more or less familiar with the State of Washington and the southwestern portion, which comprises my district, for during the 2 years, from 1921 to 1923, when he was not a Member of the House, the only interruption of his long period of service which caused him to become the dean of the House in the Seventy-third Congress, he had lectured on the Chautauqua course in southwest Washington and learned to know our people and their local problems. It was for the latter reason that he sympathized with my desire to attain membership on the Rivers and Harbors Committee; and when he was elected Speaker, I was able to realize my ambition.

Speaker RAINEY was one of the scholars in politics, possessed a liberal education, and a mind enriched with the treasures of knowledge. He had studied and knew the history of the past. He was a trained parliamentarian, and as the presiding officer of the House was fair and just in all his rulings.

HENRY T. RAINEY was a very pleasing and forceful speaker and an orator who swayed his audiences. On March 4, 1911, which was Robert Emmet's birthday, he delivered in the House a eulogy on the life and services of that great champion of Irish liberty, which, in my opinion, is one of the most eloquent speeches of modern times. His concluding words on that occasion were:

The time has almost come to write his epitaph—the time he dreamed of so long ago as he stood before his judges. His motives are known now, and his patriotism is understood in all the nations. When that time comes I would erect above his modest grave a monument of whitest marble piercing the skies, catching and reflecting back the first rays of the morning sun, gilded by the last rays of the setting sun, and on each of its four sides, high up above the habitations of men, up toward the stars, I would emblazon in letters of fire, so that all might read this simple epitaph: "Here lies Robert Emmet, who died for liberty."

His farewell address to his colleagues on March 4, 1921, when he had been defeated for reelection after 18 years of service is very touching and a gem of purest eloquence. Two years later, in 1923, his constituents returned him to the House and he served here continuously until the time of his death in the summer of 1934, when the entire Nation was shocked by the sad news of his sudden demise after a brief illness.

I shall always prize a letter which I received from our late beloved Speaker, bearing date June 12, 1934, shortly before Congress adjourned, conveying to me a generous message of approval from our leader, which was simply another evidence of his thoughtfulness and helpfulness, "Your record has been fine", which was praise from Sir Rupert. It was another expression of the same generous spirit which prompted Speaker RAINEY to write me from his home in Carrollton, Ill., on October 3, 1933, the previous year, the following letter:

You must have made a splendid speech at the national convention of district postmasters. I hear from it even in Illinois. One of my postmasters, who heard your address, considers it one of the best he has ever heard and the best made at the convention. I hope you are getting a vacation. I am not. I expect to return to Washington early in November.

Busy and occupied as he was, this great man and holder of the third highest position in the American Government took the time and trouble to thus write to a new and unknown Member of Congress in order to encourage and inspire him to nobler efforts.

These incidents are in harmony with HENRY T. RAINEY's philosophy of life, which is set forth in a biographical article describing his long, distinguished public career. We are informed that a friend once asked him, "What is your philosophy of living, your idea of the aspirations a man should entertain and the rewards he should desire?" Speaker RAINEY replied earnestly, according to the writer, as follows:

The whole thing is covered by the phrase "service of others." My idea of right living is to do as much for others as I possibly can, consistent with the recreation or amusements that I should have. No life can be sanely lived without the contact of recreation or amusement. I remember Woodrow Wilson telling me soon after he became President: "RAINEY, if it were not for these opportunities for public service, I shouldn't care to be in public life; I shouldn't dream of attempting a second term in the White House." I think any man who is worth his salt feels that way. He has a sense of worth and achievement; he establishes his self-respect only as his ambitions and efforts are for the good of others.

We can truthfully say that Speaker RAINEY translated this philosophy of life into actual practice in his daily living and his contacts with his fellow men. He has gone from among us and we no longer behold his tall, stately figure, his classic but kindly features, with his locks of beautiful white hair which caused him to resemble the elder statesmen of a former day, nor do we hear the soft tones of his silvery voice. He has joined the invisible, voiceless assembly of the other living whom we commonly call the "dead", and we shall not see or hear him again until we, too, answer to the roll call which summoned him away. We are reminded of the exclamation of Charles XII of Sweden at the tomb of Sobieski, at Cracow: "What a pity that so great a man should ever die." And we reply: "He has not died, nor shall we ever die, for the human soul is immortal and we live forever."

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by Hon. WILLIAM H. DIETERICH, Senator from the State of Illinois, in memory of Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY, former Speaker of this House:

During the early part of August this day was determined upon as a day of homecoming in honor of HENRY T. RAINEY, then Speaker of the National House of Representatives.

His friends and neighbors looked forward to this day as the time when they could meet and, by their presence, express their appreciation of the services he was rendering and had rendered to the people not only of this Twentieth Congressional District and the State of Illinois but the people of the Nation.

By his untiring effort, by his constant attention to the duties of the office he had been honored with, he had so impressed himself upon his colleagues in the Congress that in recognition of his energy, his ability, his character, and his worth, they had elevated him to the highest position within their gift.

This man of yesterday, whose childhood was spent around these scenes, whose character was formed amid these people, had risen to a position of power and influence second only to that of the Chief Executive of the Nation.

He reached those heights not by the chance of fortune, not by the utterance or act of a moment as some are raised to sudden prominence, but by faithful, loyal service he slowly climbed to the pinnacle, step by step.

And so HENRY T. RAINEY, while his friends were busy planning for this day in his honor, was called from his field of labors, and his friends are denied the privilege of his presence.

His passing was tragic; he was called at the high noon of his life's activities, when he was most needed and could least be spared.

But thus it ever is with all human plans and schemes, with all human aspirations and dreams; all are subject to the will of Him who rules the universe and holds in His hands the destinies of men and nations.

However uncertain human life may be, however bitter the disappointments and sorrows that we meet, the good we do continues and carries on, and so today the memory and the works of HENRY T. RAINEY are still a living force in the constitutional government with whose legislative activities he had been so long and intimately associated.

This day was to mark the beginning of a campaign in this congressional district for the advancement of those principles championed by HENRY T. RAINEY during the long years of his life, which principles had caused his fellow citizens to send him as their Representative to the Halls of the American Congress for so many years.

Nothing that I can say here today will add honor to his memory. The life he lived, the principles for which he fought, the things he achieved have done him honor far beyond any measure that could be expressed in language.

While his passing at this particular time, when new and untried policies of government were meeting the first test, the first expression of approval or disapproval from the citizenship of this Nation was tragic, and in such passing those principles and policies that he had fought so long to bring about lost a great champion, a fearless defender, he passed with a confidence that his friends would carry on and that the citizenship would approve.

HENRY T. RAINEY lived a full and useful life, his activities began at an early age and continued past the allotted time of 3 score years and 10. His work was energetic and incessant; he was blessed with good health up to the time that death touched his heart, 1 day short of the seventy-fourth anniversary of his birth.

No greater student of not only this Government but the governments of the world ever sat in the Halls of Congress.

No greater champion of the rights of the people to govern themselves and to set up those institutions whereby their will could be translated into law and policies of government ever held a seat in any legislative body.

He was a believer in that Government established by the fathers as expressed in the Constitution of the United States. He jealously guarded its various provisions and fought against all infringement by which the rights of the people might be destroyed.

He was ever an advocate of progressive legislation to meet the changing conditions of human activity.

He was a progressive in the true sense of progressiveness—that is, he was not a theorist—when change in human invention, in mechanisms, in the arts, and the sciences took place, when improved methods were adopted, he ever stood for those reasonable changes in those laws directing the manner in which the people's Government should be administered to meet those changes.

For more than a quarter of a century, a quarter of a century that marked the greatest advancement in inventive science, when transportation, communication, and mechanical production were entirely revolutionized, and when those improvements could be employed to bless or oppress mankind, HENRY T. RAINEY stood in the Halls of Congress fighting against monopoly and battling for the people's rights.

HENRY T. RAINEY was a legislator in the true sense of the word; he knew his Government, its people, and their problems; he was acquainted with the activities of the citizens, and he was ever watchful that the doors of opportunity were kept open to all the people.

He was more than a legislator, he was an expert; his long service on the Ways and Means Committee of the House, which had to do with the expenditures of the Federal Government, familiarized him with every detail of governmental activity.

He was recognized as an authority on tariffs; he had a more intimate knowledge of the ability to produce, the quantity produced, and the cost of production of every import that found its way to our ports of entry than any other Member of the Congress. This knowledge enabled him to determine intelligently the proper tariffs to be levied in order to enable our own industries to meet the competition and yet not oppress the consuming citizenship.

He took his place as Speaker of the National House of Representatives better equipped for the duties of that office than any predecessor since the founding of the Republic.

He presided over that body during the most critical peace-time period in the Nation's history.

As such Speaker he had more to do with carrying out the legislative program of the administration than any other Member of either legislative branch.

He not only had to do with carrying out the legislative program but he was in almost daily conference with the President and the Cabinet in formulating the legislation to be presented to the Congress.

Franklin D. Roosevelt had no stronger supporter of his policies and no more loyal friend than the late Speaker of the National House of Representatives.

When President Roosevelt laid down his work and took up his journey from Washington to Carrollton to be present at the funeral, he did so not only to pay the Nation's respect to the memory of the deceased but to pay his personal tribute and respect to one who had been his loyal friend and adviser.

While his public life and character are the inspiration of much eulogy, and the memory that in the performance of his public service he was not wanting is a consolation to his friends, his private character known only to those with whom he was the more intimately associated leaves the tenderest memories.

He was everything that you could admire in a friend. He had every attribute that endeared him to his associates.

He was the soul of honor and integrity. He had more virtues and less vices than perhaps any man in public life.

He appreciated and enjoyed the association of his friends, he was companionable and courteous, at times careless about his own but ever thoughtful of the welfare of those who by the ties of friendship had claims upon him.

And so today when we meet to pay our tribute of respect to his memory we are happy in the thought that this community and the Nation have been enriched by his life, that he has contributed his full share to human advancement and the sum of human happiness.

That while the ideals for which he fought have lost a leader, those ideals will live on and will find expression in the future policies of government.

By his death progressive government has lost a champion, the Nation has lost a leader, the State a servant, and the district a friend.

He sleeps amid the scenes of his childhood, by the side of those he loved, near the people he served.

Mr. MEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I became acquainted with HENRY T. RAINEY in 1902, during his first campaign for Congress. This acquaintance continued uninterrupted until his death. I probably knew him longer than any other Member of this House. In order to understand any public career, one must know much of the factors influencing the formative years. I do not think HENRY T. RAINEY's career can be clearly understood without such knowledge.

He was born at Carrollton, Ill., county seat of Greene County, a little city now with a population of about 3,000. His parents were pioneers of that region, and aided materially in its development. For a time he practiced law. The courthouse stands in a public square, such as is found in many midwestern counties. It is a two-story building, where folks of the town and countryside come to hear the important happenings in the general vicinity, a place where almost everybody knows everybody else, and calls them by their first names. There is little of the conventional about the associations of the people in that country.

The congressional district he represented so many years was a long time regarded as the most reliably Democratic of any in Illinois. He served it continuously from the beginning of his first term, in the Fifty-eighth Congress, until his death, with the exception of one term. I think I am responsible for the first mention of his name as Speaker of the House of Representatives. It was in 1928 during an address I delivered at Jacksonville, the largest city of his district. I urged the importance of his reelection because I thought that, with his continuance in office, he had the best chance of becoming Speaker of any man in the Middle West. He was on the platform. In a few days I received from him a note of thanks for coming into his district and speaking so kindly of him.

For some years he and I served together as trustees of Illinois College, the oldest in Illinois, located at Jacksonville. This institution is an offshoot of Yale, and its founders made history in Illinois and the Nation. Its first president was Edward Beecher, a brother of Henry Ward Beecher, of pulpit fame throughout the world. One of the earliest graduates was Richard Yates, war Governor of the State when Lincoln was President. His son, Richard Yates, Jr., was later Governor and Representative at Large from Illinois to the Congress. Stephen A. Douglas, known as the "Little Giant", and a great rival of Lincoln, practiced law in Scott and Morgan Counties in Mr. RAINNEY's district. There are many reminiscences and traditions of these great men still circulating in this territory. The district he represented lies in that portion of southwestern Illinois where the great prairies merge into the extensive timber section of the southern part of the State. Through it flows the Illinois River to the Mississippi, upon both of which came the Jesuit explorers who gave a color of romance to the history of their discoveries. In the vicinity of Carrollton was timber with fertile bottoms bordering the smaller streams, flowing toward the Illinois and westward, other streams making their way into the Mississippi. From his home he could see across the valley of the Illinois and by a short journey could easily reach the Mississippi. Settlers came into this country from Kentucky, Ohio, Virginia, and other States of that general region—hardy pioneers who planted civilization in that historic land.

Much of the urban population is in small towns and cities. Jacksonville, the largest, a center of learning and culture, has a population of some 17 or 18 thousands. A people, sturdy, fearless, determined, honest, and progressive, carved their homes out of this country. They were not accustomed to the artificialities of life, or of the means of making a livelihood, other than the essential implements of labor. The greatest industry, of course, then as now was agriculture. Carrollton is on the main highway leading from Chicago south through Springfield, the capital, to St. Louis. The town was proud of its most eminent citizen. At its four entrances, made by two improved highways through it, was a large sign bearing the inscription, "Home of HENRY T. RAINNEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives." A mile or so off the junction of these highways was the imposing home where he spent the last years of his life, except when in Washington or in travel. Knowing him and his home, one can easily understand how they were adapted to each other. It is a farm of some 500 acres with majestic trees spreading their branches about the house and other buildings. The mansion is of brick, large and commodious, and seems to extend a friendly and cordial welcome to those who call. It bespeaks the occupant as an influential character in community life. It was at Carrollton where RAINNEY spent his life, except the years at Amherst College, of which he was an alumnus, the period of his law studies, and subsequent years of service for his people in Washington.

Such surroundings, such distances, such unobstructed outlooks give men broad views. They come to maturity in full activity without the restrictions imposed upon them in densely populated centers. There was plenty of room, air, and the gifts of nature all about to provide him space in which to move and grow and to become acquainted with the world and its people. There is something about spaces of land, streams, and bountifulness of a rich country which inspires man's vision. It was from this kind of environment that he came to Washington to spend 30 or more years in the House of Representatives, and in which he was to rise to its highest place of influence and power, the Speakership. He came as a man with strong views, aggressive and militant in spirit in defense of them. To his mind there was a strong natural appeal of his constituents as he knew them in the broad expanses of southwestern Illinois. He came to the Capital of his country as a crusader, his soul attuned to the hopes and aspirations of his neighbors on the prairie lands of his native State. He raised his voice in their behalf. He fought his way into the notice and respect of his colleagues. They discovered he was honest and rugged, that he had a point of view, that he was fearless, that he was for his constituents always, but nonetheless for the whole country. The oldest of his colleagues watched his growth through the years. He strengthened as the oak resists and battles the elements. He stood erect against all storms, all attacks, and never faltered in his attitude toward what he considered the right. His was the tongue of HENRY T. RAINNEY; the thoughts and sentiments were those of the people on the broad ranges of his district. He never forgot them.

He traveled much, but never forgot the intimate touch of the country of his birth and life. He was unspoiled by strange and artificial contacts. To all who lived in the region he served he was a neighbor, known to them always as HENRY T. RAINNEY. The outlook of his youth and early manhood never lost its influence upon him. He became one of the country's famous men, but never ceased to be a friend and neighbor among those whence he came. All these things shaped and influenced the course of his life. They inspired him in the course he pursued. Like Joan of Arc, he never forgot those voices. They came to him wherever he was and moved him to action in the forum of the Nation.

The story of his life is not complete without including something of his faithful wife, Ellen McBride Rainey, associated with him not only in early manhood but throughout all official life. Official Washington knows of the devoted and faithful efforts she joined to his. The extent of help she gave him during all the years she was his companion cannot be fully appreciated. Hers was a life of unselfish devotion and labor. Her life is the kind which makes a story in which the mutual cooperation of one man and one woman leads to sublime heights. It was as if they were engaged in a joint enterprise of mutual endeavor, with their goal the attainment of a greater and more useful purpose. I could not close this brief narrative without this tribute to her. I cannot express all that is due to her efforts in the notable career of this man, which has become a part of her own, justice giving her an ample share. She now occupies the home at Carrollton, where the neighbors came, where the neighbors' children came, to enjoy the pleasures provided for them during his life.

He lies at rest in the town cemetery along the great highway between Chicago and St. Louis upon an eminence overlooking the countryside he knew so well as a boy and young man, and from which came much of the spirit directing most of his life's course. There came to his funeral in the summer of 1934, the President of the United States and many other notables, men and women from various parts of the land, and most impressive of all, there came many thousands of his neighbors and friends to say farewell.

The records disclose his official acts. I trust this brief narrative throws light upon some of the reasons of such acts.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, on August 19, 1934, the soul of our beloved colleague and friend, Hon. HENRY T. RAINNEY, Speaker of the House of Representatives, passed into the Great Beyond. His sudden death brought a great shock, much grief, and sorrow not only to the great State of Illinois, which he served but also to the entire Nation.

I shall not undertake to dwell upon the educational accomplishments and the legislative achievements of the late Speaker RAINNEY. That has been well stated by other speakers, and his claim to fame is written in the legislative records of the Congress of the United States.

But I wish to say that from the day I became a Member of the House of Representatives I loved and respected HENRY RAINNEY. He impressed me as a gentleman of the highest character. His unimpeachable integrity, sublime courage, and sincerity of purpose were known to every colleague with whom he served. He was a lover of truth, a statesman in the finest and technical sense of the word, and it can be truthfully said that he never deserted a friend or struck foully at an enemy. His record of service is unapproachable and will live forever in the annals of American history.

He was truly the leading spirit of the memorable Seventy-third Congress, and most of the credit of achievement in that Congress is due Mr. RAINNEY.

Though he has left us, may we with the poet say:

There is no death! What seems so is transition;
This life of mortal breath
Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
Whose portal we call Death.

In the words of Speaker RAINNEY, uttered at the bier of his late colleague, the Honorable Edward W. Pou, I say with fondest memories, "Good-bye, old friend, and farewell."

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, as an intimate social friend and close political associate of the late Speaker, HENRY T. RAINY, I count it a privilege to contribute a few words at this time that may endear his memory.

In the belief that this purpose will in no manner be better served, I desire to offer the appended from the pen of Mr. King Hostick, Mr. RAINY's influential friend and my friend:

Even as President Roosevelt has his stamp albums that he may turn to during the few quiet moments that he may chance to get, so had the late HENRY T. RAINY, who was considered the second most important man in the land, something to which he might turn, relieving and refreshing his mind, so troubled with affairs and cares of state.

It may well and truly be said that Speaker RAINY had many hobbies, but narrowing the field, I think, the most outstanding to him were his home and his collection of Currier & Ives prints.

Of the home alone, nothing short of a large volume could be written. Practically every piece of furnishing in the home itself had its own personal story. The clock in the hall entrance . . . why that was in historic Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson in "ole Virginia." Notice the little desk. It was used by that eminent son of Illinois, "Stephen A. Douglas" . . . and the chandelier in the front reception room . . . it is magnificent . . . why to be sure, it came from none other than the White House, removed from there in remodeling by Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt . . . a chest, also in the front room, magnificently bound in beaten brass, picked up by the Speaker on his historic visit to Russia a few years ago . . . a huge plaque, bearing the seal of the United States, in fact the very one which hung on the inaugural stand when the oath of office was administered to Franklin D. Roosevelt . . . a painting here and there showing the stately Speaker with his snowy white locks, adding dignity and strength to the portraits . . . the next room to the north is the dining room, neatly adorned by a framed caricature of Mr. RAINY on the floor of the House . . . close by hangs a framed symbol of the Rainey coat of arms . . . and countless other articles too numerous to mention . . . it was here in these rooms that Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President of the United States, came to Carrollton to pay silent tribute to HENRY T. RAINY, in death.

His home could not be mentioned without note being made of his reindeer. The Speaker had a large penned enclosure provided for them to the east of Walnut Hall, in which he kept these pet deer, a small species known as "Japanese deer." He spent many restless minutes, turning to hours, with these pets.

The garden, just west of the home, could well be elaborated on also, with its beautifully shrubbed paths and pedestals mounted with bits of unique statuary, occasionally a basin with the water therein literally bronzed with goldfish. Who could but want to spend his entire time out here with God!

Probably the interest closest the Speaker's heart was his Currier & Ives print collection. Some 50 of these covered two sides of Mr. RAINY's bedroom. Here in the quietness of his own room, away from rushing people, the Speaker was able to enjoy these prints.

It was my favor and pleasure to visit the Speaker in his bedroom a number of times, where I listened to him tell again and again, about this print or that print, and the particular significance of certain ones. Some of them were rare. Nearly all were collected from old homes the Speaker and Mrs. Rainey visited during their travels throughout the country.

Here, too, in Mr. RAINY's bedroom still stands another piece of furniture worth note, a full-length golden mirror, at the top of which are 13 tiny balls, representing the Thirteen Original States of the Union. One finds upon closer inspection that it bears a tiny plate engraved stating the mirror was presented to Martha Washington, wife of the Father of Our Country at the inaugural ball held in New York City. In the Rainey home, yet today, this magnificent piece of craftsmanship still stands in as fine condition as the day it was presented, truly a fine symbol of the birth of our Government.

HON. ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed grateful for this opportunity to raise my voice in brief tribute to the life, character, and public service of my warm friend and colleague the Honorable ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, late a Representative from my State of New York. No words of mine can adequately and fully describe the high esteem in which our departed colleague was held by all who knew him. It is said the richest possession a person may acquire is the confidence, respect, and esteem of our friends and acquaintances. He had all of these, and his memory is enshrined in the hearts of the people of his district, his former colleagues in this House, and his host of friends in Washington and throughout the country.

He was earnest, eloquent, and convincing in debate, possessing a good stock of sound, common sense, and was a fine judge of human nature.

Congressman GRIFFIN was an able lawyer, statesman, writer, and soldier. He left a record behind which any man could be proud of. To his friends he was affectionately known as "TONY" GRIFFIN.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the Honorable ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN was a Member of Congress and a member of the Committee on Appropriations at the time I entered Congress. It was my privilege to work beside him for 12 years. He was a man of great sincerity of purpose and a prodigious worker. He gave the best that was in him to the problems of the country.

He was always especially interested in the human side of things and was probably responsible more than anyone else for the investigation that was conducted into the submarine situation after the sinking of a submarine off Portsmouth several years ago. The result of that investigation has been the development of many devices for the protection of those who are operating submarines. In the last session of Congress he performed notable service during consideration of the permanent appropriations bill, and the confidence in which he was held by the House was indicated by the fact that not a single vote was cast against the bill when it came to passage.

Mr. GRIFFIN will be greatly missed and our sympathy goes out to his family.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN died January 13, 1935. He had been in public life for many years, serving his district in the New York State Legislature and then as a Member of this body since the Sixty-fifth Congress. This brief statement shows that he was an unusual man. But, Mr. Speaker, he deserved this recognition at the hands of his fellow men, by the faithful manner in which he discharged his duties.

The position which he held on the Committee on Appropriations for so long is ample evidence of his great ability in handling intricate problems of legislation. He was held in high esteem by the Membership of the House and his views on public matters were greatly respected.

During the Spanish-American War he served with honor and distinction as a captain in Company F, Sixty-ninth New York Regiment, and during his many years in public life he endeared himself to the veterans of this country through his tireless efforts in behalf of their welfare.

I feel that I have lost a very dear personal friend in ANTHONY GRIFFIN. I knew him for many years and served with him in the Senate of the New York State Legislature as well as the Congress of the United States. Through our many years of personal friendship and close association, I learned on countless occasions the true warmth of his heart and the kindness of his spirit.

Our friend and colleague has passed on to a better world. He was a good man, a good citizen, a loyal friend, and an able legislator.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, on Friday, January 18, 1935, on a hillside in beautiful Arlington Cemetery, facing the Capitol, the scene of his principal life's work, we laid to rest the mortal remains of our dear friend and colleague, ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN.

My first acquaintance with him dated back some 20 years when we served together in the Senate of the State of New York. I can well remember during those years the same indefatigable industry and close conscientious attention to his legislative duties that were always characteristic of him. On every question presented he gave careful, conscientious study, and his vote on its passage was always dictated alone by the merits of the proposition. He was considered one of the outstanding members of the senate.

The acquaintanceship formed at our capital city, Albany, N. Y., continued during the years until we found ourselves working together in the Congress of the United States.

We were both assigned to the important Appropriations Committee. I can truthfully say from my experience that no man on that committee gave more attention to the study of the departmental estimates presented to us than he did. He was peculiarly equipped for this work owing to the fact that he held a degree not only in law but also in engineering.

We are all familiar with his work during the last 3 years of his life in regard to the permanent Appropriations Committee. Only last year the House unanimously passed the bill bearing his name restoring to the Congress the right to make annual appropriations for many items instead of permitting them to be covered in permanent appropriations. I do not think there is another man in the House who would have given these matters the time and study that he did.

Our colleague was noted for his brilliant accomplishments as a citizen, a soldier, an editor, an engineer, a lawyer, a legislator, and a statesman. In his passing his home State of New York lost a devoted son, and the Nation an able and accomplished legislator whose work will long be remembered by his colleagues.

Peace be to his soul, rest to his ashes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, my friend and colleague, ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, has gone, but not gone out of the memory of his colleagues and friends who loved him as I did.

I did not know him when he was a senator in the State of New York, but I first met him in the New York State Constitutional Convention of 1915, and I know what men, like Mr. Elihu Root, president of that convention, and Mr. Alfred E. Smith, its outstanding personality, thought of my friend. TONY GRIFFIN was not a politician. He hated the lowliness of politics, as that word is popularly interpreted. Nor was he ever a demagogue. He had a mind of his own and took orders from no boss and from no group. His votes proved that.

As one of the leading members of the important Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives of the United States, he had found his place in the sun. No Member of the House worked harder or for longer hours during 2 decades than he. He was servile to his duty but to nothing else.

With his lovely wife, he spent a worth-while life, loved by his friends and sought for his intelligent contributions to any gathering.

Tony had his hobbies as all great men have. Astronomy was his chief one. He not only studied it but wrote about it, not in an amateurish but in a scientific manner.

In the Congress of the United States, Representative GRIFFIN, of New York, has left his mark, which can never be eradicated. If it were only for his work as Chairman of the Committee on Permanent Appropriations, in which tireless task he was responsible for saving to his Government hundreds of millions of dollars every year, his name and fame will survive in the annals of his Government, which he not only loved but served.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I can add but little to the tribute that has been paid by my fellow Members to the memory of my departed friend and colleague, ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN.

Born in New York City, Representative GRIFFIN was admitted to the bar in 1892, served as a soldier during the Spanish-American War, was elected to the New York State Senate in 1910, and was a Member of the House of Representatives from 1918 until his death on January 13, 1935.

It would be impossible here to present in more than briefest outline the principles which guided and controlled the conduct of our late comrade in both his public and private life. The excellencies of mind and heart which characterized him in his more intimate personal relations were truly reflected in his larger relation as a public man and servant of the people. Loyalty, not only to friend and fellow man but to ideal and conviction, was the great directing force of his energies. He was a man of lofty ideals, competent to resist evil in the restricted sphere of his private dealings and relations, and was able to cope with the far more complex forces which beset a man in public life and too often tempt him to sacrifice honest conviction to political expediency. On every hand we hear that good men are prone to be weak in the open advocacy of that which they truly believe to be right, and that the bold and courageous efforts of men are most frequently directed to the service of quite selfish ends.

Mr. Speaker, as a complete refutation of this notion, so often expressed nowadays, that the man in public life must run counter to his own truest thought and conviction, let me point to the life of our departed friend, replete as it was with good deeds performed for the public welfare under conditions requiring the exercise of moral courage of the very highest order. Here was a man who never compromised the truth as he saw and believed it, and never did he enlist his splendid talents in a cause that did not command his truest thought and sympathies.

From early manhood his naturally combative mind had been trained in that severest of all forensic schools, the courtroom; and when he reached the House of Representatives, he was an intellectual foeman worthy of the most seasoned debater's steel. To him political virtue consisted in something more than mere subscription to the tenets of his party's faith; to him it meant action—ceaseless and dynamic action—to bring his fellow men the actual and present realization of the blessings of good government; to him it meant the putting on of the full armor of righteousness and uncompromising warfare on the cohorts of special favor and privilege. Public office and station represented something more to him than the mere realization of personal ambition; it represented to him opportunity to serve his fellow men, and I need not say how well that opportunity was improved.

May the breezes of summer blow softly where the remains of my dear friend, ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN, lie buried in the National Cemetery at Arlington; may the snows of winter be light on his grave; and over his last resting place may the birds sing their sweetest songs.

May God, in His mercy, command that his soul be received by the holy angels and be conducted to Paradise.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN has been gathered to his fathers. A lovely and charming personality, he was a Member of this body since March 5, 1918. Always in the forefront of the active workers of this House, he served on the most imposing committees of the House of Representatives, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations and Chairman of its Subcommittee on Permanent Appropriations.

ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN was a lawyer of standing and his eminent legal ability served him in good stead in the transaction of his official duties in this House, where legal ability is so greatly desired. He also was an experienced legislator before he came to this House, having served in the State senate for 4 years and being actively engaged in promoting important legislation in the State of New York, including the final draft of the law organizing the new municipal court of the city of New York, which almost revolutionized the practice before that tribunal, and made the municipal court of the city of New York a model for other courts throughout the United States for the trial and settlement of "small causes", and also established a norm for legal procedure in the "poor man's court."

ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN was also a member of the constitutional convention of the State of New York held in 1915, and as such pledged a draft of the judiciary article of the State constitution, which in due course became enacted into law.

We mourn the loss. He was one of the most outstanding Members of this House, and through the charm of his personality and the sweetness of his life endeared himself to each Member of this body, and he will long be remembered, and his memory will always remain green with us.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, once again death stills the hand and mind of one of the most beloved members of the New York delegation, and my cherished friend and colleague, ANTHONY J. GRIFFIN—affectionately known to his legion of friends as "Tony"—has been called to render an account of his stewardship. Words are mere phrases and meaningless to me in attempting to say that which comes to my heart in the death of him whom I have known most intimately for many years.

It was my privilege to serve with TONY GRIFFIN as a member of the Senate of the State of New York for two terms—1910–14. Our legislative paths again crossed in the National House of Representatives, to which he was elected in 1918.

As a member of the New York State Senate, TONY GRIFFIN displayed the same untiring energy and devotion which characterized his service to the Nation during his 17 years as a Member of the House of Representatives, a devotion to duty which in a large measure contributed to his passing on before his time. During his service as senator he sponsored much legislation for the betterment of the people of the State of New York; following his retirement from the senate he continued his interest in civic affairs, and among his greatest achievements and accomplishments was his service on the widows' pension fund commission, which drew up the widows' pension law now on the statute books of New York State.

On his work here in Congress there is no need for me to dwell. We are all familiar with his untiring energy, his fine grasp of legislative procedure, his devotion to the principles of his party, and his ever-constant desire to do that which would be for the betterment of mankind.

Soldier, lawyer, statesman; in time of war he served his country with distinction and honor on the field of battle; in time of peace, he died in the service of his country, leaving to those who mourn him the record of a distinguished legislator and the memory of a lovable character; he was a man's man. It was an honor and privilege to know him and call him "friend."

To his good wife who was his companion and helpmate for so many years, we offer our loving sympathy and extend our condolence. In our prayers let us beseech for her that full measure of strength and fortitude necessary to bear her loss, in the spirit in which he would have her bear it, until such time as she may be called to join him in the Great Beyond and share with him that eternal reward vouchsafed to those who follow in the footsteps of the Lord.

Green be the turf above you,
Friend of my better days!
None knew thee but to love thee,
None named thee but to praise.

AFTER RECESS

At the conclusion of the recess the Speaker called the House to order, and then, pursuant to House Resolution 201, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, declared the House adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), in accordance with its previous order, the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 22, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, May 21, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

JOINT MEETING OF TWO HOUSES

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. the Senate proceed in a body to the Hall of the House of Representatives pursuant to Concurrent Resolution 22.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INCREASE OF NATIONAL REVENUE

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is an Associated Press report which has come to my attention, published in today's Washington Post, relating to the increase in internal-revenue receipts. The article referred to is headlined:

Tax income up $549,150,374 in 10 months—$2,664,853,327 collected in internal revenue, says Treasury.

The article then proceeds:

The Treasury last night reported internal-revenue collections of $2,664,853,327 during the first 10 months of the fiscal year, an increase of $549,150,374 over the same 1934 period.

In April, the tenth month, $194,083,458 was received. This was $40,719,662 more than in April 1934.

Agricultural adjustment taxes continued to lead the way in showing gains, both for the month and for the year. April's income of $46,889,684 was 35 percent more than April of last year, swelling the 10-month total for this class of revenue to $453,007,693, or an upturn of 57 percent over 1934.

Miscellaneous internal revenue collections jumped 24 percent in April to $122,808,927, bringing the year's total to $1,389,339,257, or 14 percent greater than last year. This main classification included $33,249,450 in liquor taxes collected during April and $333,517,841 received during the 10-month period, representing a gain of 70 percent over 1934.

Income taxes have produced $822,506,376 thus far in the year, to run 35 percent ahead of 1934.

The Treasury statement showed 10,696,782,123 small cigarettes were sold during April, an increase of 1,400,000,000 over the same month of last year.

This statement, Mr. President, which it is assumed is correct, shows the marked increase in the revenues of the Government. It indicates very clearly and forcefully, in spite of the contentions to the contrary made in this Chamber from time to time by Members of the Senate, that the country is well on the road toward recovery. An increase of $549,000,000 plus in the income taxes shows a rapid growth in income or in earnings.

I do not care to consume time of the Senate; but, before taking my seat, let me state that under the order of the Senate, at the hour of 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., this body will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to attend the joint session provided for in House Concurrent Resolution 22.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, LEGISLATIVE ESTABLISHMENT (S. DOC. NO. 63)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the legislative establishment, pertaining to the Architect of the Capitol, for the fiscal year 1936, in the sum of $42,650, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Assistant to the Secretary of Labor, reporting, pursuant to law, that there is in the files of the Department of Labor an accumulation of miscellaneous documents and papers which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. WALSH and Mr. BORAH members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the board of directors of the Los Angeles (Calif.) Chapter of the National Association of Cost Accountants, signed by its president, Thomas D. Lindholtz, transmitting a proposed draft of an amendment, relative to the extension of credit, to section 206 of pending legislation known as the "Banking Act of 1935", which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a petition signed by the president and members of the Capital City Townsend Club, Lansing, Mich., praying for the inclusion in pending social-security legislation of the so-called "Townsend old-age revolving pension plan", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the prompt enactment of the so-called "Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a memorial from William J. Wheeler, of Ottawa, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 2796) to provide for the control and elimination of public-utility holding companies operating, or marketing securities, in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, to regulate the transmission and sale of electric energy in interstate commerce, to amend the Federal Water Power Act, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from several citizens of the United States, praying for the enactment of the so-called "Patman bonus bill", which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution endorsed by the Kings County District Council, Steuben Society of America, Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the prompt adoption of the so-called "Ludlow amendment to the Constitution", to the effect that before any declaration of war shall be made by Congress the people of the country shall have an opportunity to declare by referendum their decision on the question, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Women's Republican Club, of College Point, N. Y., favoring the adoption of the so-called "equal-rights amendment" to the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Pulaski, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation proclaiming October 11 in each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented petitions of Local Union No. 4, United Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steam Fitters, of Worcester, and the Central Labor Union, of Haverhill, both in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation imposing a graduated tax on cigarettes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Lady Garfield Council, No. 3, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of Springfield, Mass., protesting against the passage of the so-called "Kerr bill", pertaining to deportation of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented the petition of David W. Wright Lodge, No. 549, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Engineers, of Greenfield, Mass., praying for the enactment of pending legislation extending the effective period of the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act for 1 year, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying that the Supreme Court of the United States grant a rehearing in the so-called "Railroad Retirement Act case", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of the so-called "Patman bonus bill", which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of several citizens of St. Petersburg, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation to control the medium of exchange and regulate the value thereof, and to pay all debts and obligations of the Government with legal tender, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. FLETCHER presented a letter from B. E. Squires, assistant secretary, Control Committee Florida Celery Industry, Sanford, Fla., with accompanying resolutions signed by about 140 farmers of Seminole County, Fla., which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures attached, as follows:

SANFORD, FLA., May 21, 1935.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Attached is a resolution with reference to the A. A. A. amendments about to be voted on.

You will find that this list represents about 140 actual dirt farmers of Seminole County. These growers represent approximately 75 percent of the vegetables grown in this county.

You will receive a similar resolution from growers from the Sarasota and Manatee sections.

We urge your support of these amendments and also request you to communicate the information herein to the other Florida Congressmen.

Farmers and producers throughout the country are keeping a watchful eye on the activities of their representatives with reference to agricultural legislation.

Trust you advise us results of the vote on these amendments as soon as possible.

Very truly yours,

B. E. SQUIRES, Assistant Secretary.

Whereas we are about to complete marketing and distributing this season's celery crop, which, in our opinion, has been the most profitable and successful deal we have experienced in the past several years; and

Whereas all shippers and growers have been operating under Agricultural Adjustment Administration marketing agreement no. 42, license no. 51, we feel that a large share of the credit for our success should be passed on to the effectiveness and control of the marketing agreement and license: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the undersigned growers, hereby urge each of you to support the amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program which will come to your attention in the near future for final action; be it further

Resolved, That we urge the incorporation of the licensing of all parties who are not actual parties to the agreement.

We further urge your cooperation and support of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program in full for the benefit of growers and producers of agricultural commodities throughout the country.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2811) to authorize and adopt certain public-works projects for controlling floods, improving navigation, regulating the flow of certain streams of the United States, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 644) thereon.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 2405) to provide for a special clerk and liaison officer, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 645) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 136) relative to gratuities charged in settlements with the Eastern and Western Cherokee Indians, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 647) thereon.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1521. A bill to provide funds for cooperation with Harlem School District No. 12, Blaine County, Mont., for extension of public-school buildings and equipment to be available for Indian children (Rept. No. 648); and

S. 2094. A bill to provide funds for cooperation with the school board at Medicine Lake, Mont., in construction of a public-school building to be available to Indian children of the village of Medicine Lake, Sheridan County, Mont. (Rept. No. 649).

REGULATION OF TRAFFIC IN FOOD, DRUGS, AND COSMETICS

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a revised report, which I now submit from the Committee on Commerce, may be printed in the stead of and substituted for the report (Rept. No. 361) previously submitted by the committee to accompany Senate bill 5, the food, drugs, and cosmetics bill.

I am asking this permission because all those actively concerned in the debate on the bill are now united in certain amendments, which will be offered at the appropriate time in the hope that the bill may be passed; and the new report (Rept. No. 646) is to cover the bill as we hope it will be enacted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COINAGE OF MEDALS—BILL RECOMMITTED

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business 619, being the bill (S. 1874) to provide for the coinage of medals to be presented to Senator A. Harry Moore, certain officers of the New Jersey National Guard, Capt. John Bogan, Sr., and the members of the crew of the fishing boat Paramount, be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce. The author of the bill, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], is anxious that the bill shall be returned to the committee for certain purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill is recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 21st instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 1803) to authorize the Secretary of War to pay certain expenses incident to the training, attendance, and participation of the equestrian and modern pentathlon teams in the Eleventh Olympic Games.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McADOO:

A bill (S. 2880) to authorize and approve the donation to the State of California, the city of Los Angeles, and the county of Los Angeles, by the organizing committee of the Olympic Games held in California in 1932, of moneys derived from said games free of Federal taxes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BURKE:

A bill (S. 2881) creating the Decatur-Onawa Bridge Board of Trustees and authorizing said board and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River between the towns of Decatur, Nebr., and Onawa, Iowa; and

A bill (S. 2882) to create the South Sioux City Bridge Board of Trustees and to authorize said board and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River between the cities of South Sioux City, Nebr., and Sioux City, Iowa; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 2883) to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 2884) giving superintendents at classified post-office stations credit for substitutes serving under them; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. BYRD:

A bill (S. 2885) for the relief of Capt. Karl Minnigerode; to the Committee on Claims.

REFUNDING BONDS OF GOVERNMENT OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior dealing with proposed legislation relating to Puerto Rico, together with a bill which he has asked that I introduce and which I introduce at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the letter and bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter presented by Mr. TYDINGS is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 22, 1935.

The Honorable MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Chairman Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: I am enclosing a draft of a bill temporarily to exempt refunding bonds of the government of Puerto Rico from the limitation of public indebtedness under the Organic Act.

Section 3 of the Organic Act for Puerto Rico, the act of Congress of March 2, 1917, as amended by the act of March 4, 1927, limits the public indebtedness of the insular government to an amount not in excess of 10 percent of the aggregate tax valuation of its property. The insular bonded indebtedness is now very close to the limit, partly because of shrinkages in the tax valuation of property during the present depression and since the two terrific hurricanes that visited the island, one in 1928 and the other in 1932. It is desirable at this time to refund a number of insular bond issues which have not yet matured, but are callable, and bear relatively high rates of interest. Puerto Rico's credit stands very high, and the time seems opportune to refund its bonds at lower interest rates in order to lighten its tax burden.

However, since the present outstanding indebtedness of the insular government is so close to the limit permitted by the Organic Act, some question appears to have been raised of its legal power to carry through such refunding of its bonds because it would necessarily entail an apparent increase of the total authorized public indebtedness for a brief period of time, pending the call and actual retirement of the old bonds. The enclosed bill is drafted with a view to obviating any such question. Its passage will not result in really increasing the public indebtedness of Puerto Rico in any way. The money received as the proceeds of sales of refunding bonds from time to time will, of course, be used only for retiring bonds to be called in the refunding operations, and for which the refunding bonds will be substituted. The bill has no purpose other than to facilitate refunding outstanding insular government bonds at lower interest rates.

Its early favorable consideration is recommended.

Sincerely yours,

T. A. WALTERS,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

The bill (S. 2886) temporarily to exempt refunding bonds of the government of Puerto Rico from the limitation of public indebtedness under the Organic Act was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any bonds or other obligations of Puerto Rico hereafter issued for the purpose of retiring previously outstanding bonds or obligations shall not be included in computing the public indebtedness of Puerto Rico under section 3 of the Organic Act approved March 2, 1917, as amended, until 3 months after their issue.

AMENDMENT OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. BYRD submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1807) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. POPE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7672, the naval-appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 52 to insert, after the first complete paragraph, the following paragraph:

"That none of the appropriations provided by this act or by later acts shall be available for the expenses of any naval missions to foreign countries or of any person acting as a teacher or instructor in foreign countries."

Mr. BONE submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7672, the naval-appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 54, line 2, after the word "plants", to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: "it being the intent and purpose of such acts that the Government shall, insofar as practicable, develop its navy yards, arsenals, and other plants and facilities, to the end that it may—"

"(a) At all times hereafter be able to construct, maintain, and repair its authorized vessels and naval equipment;

"(b) As speedily as possible become self-sufficient in time of war; and

"(c) Insofar as may be possible, eliminate private profit in war and in the preparation therefor."

On page 43, line 6, of H. R. 7672 as reported to the Senate, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That not less than 25 percent of each succeeding lot of aircraft, including the engines for such aircraft, the procurement of which is authorized by this act and hereafter undertaken, shall be constructed and/or manufactured in Government aircraft factories and/or other plants or factories owned and operated by the United States Government.

"The foregoing proviso is subject to the further condition that if it shall be determined by the President that present plants, factories, and equipment owned and operated by the Government are not such as to permit the construction and/or manufacture of the said aircraft and/or engines in such Government plants and factories in the proportions therein specified and required, then and in that event the President may by proclamation suspend such requirement in whole or in part, to the extent that capacity in such plants, factories, and equipment is insufficient to meet such requirement.

"Whenever any such proclamation is made the President shall, at the opening of the next succeeding session of the Congress, submit to the Congress a detailed estimate of (1) the expansion of existing plants, factories, and facilities owned and operated by the Government, and (2) the increase in personnel required to operate the same, necessary for the meeting of the requirement specified in the foregoing proviso. The funds necessary for the enlargement and expansion of existing plants and facilities owned by the Government, for the construction and acquisition by condemnation or otherwise of plants, factories, facilities, and equipment, for the construction and manufacture of naval aircraft, and for the personnel required to operate the same, are hereby authorized to be appropriated."

ACADIA NATIONAL PARK, MAINE

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, on the last call of the calendar on May 20 there was passed Senate bill 1148, to authorize the transfer of the Green Lake Fish Cultural Station in Hancock County, Maine, as an addition to the Acadia National Park.

The bill involves the transfer of certain lands in the State of Maine from the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce to the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. Later on in the same day the House passed a similar House bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which Senate bill 1148 was passed may be reconsidered and that the House bill, being the bill H. R. 6954, of similar title, may be presently considered.

The bill (H. R. 6954) to authorize the transfer of the Green Lake Fish Cultural Station in Hancock County, Maine, as an addition to Acadia National Park, was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and lays before the Senate House bill 6954.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6954) to authorize the transfer of the Green Lake Fish Cultural Station in Hancock County, Maine, as an addition to the Acadia National Park, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer to the control and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior as an addition to the Acadia National Park, established under the act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. 1178), and acts supplemental thereto, all that tract of land containing 820 acres, more or less, with improvements thereon if any, comprising the abandoned Green Lake Fish Cultural Station, in Hancock County, Maine, said tract being no longer needed for fish-cultural purposes: Provided, That such action shall be in full recognition of any outstanding lease, license, or permit affecting said land.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 1148 will be indefinitely postponed.

IMPROVEMENT OF NEW YORK STATE BARGE CANAL

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to note a brief observation in the RECORD.

The President's Advisory Committee on Allotments issued a newspaper release on May 17, 1935, reading, in part, as follows:

Under date of May 16, 1935, the Advisory Committee on Allotments approved the allotment of $112,186,500 to the following 47 river and harbor projects from the funds provided in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935.

Among the 47 projects thus listed is the following:

New York State Barge Canal, dredging and bridge alterations, Oswego to Hudson River section, $5,000,000.

I wish very respectfully to call the attention of the President's Advisory Committee on Allotments to the Rivers and Harbors Act of July 3, 1930, which, in respect to the Erie and Oswego Canals, among other limitations in respect to their development, contained the following language:

Provided further, That no project for the widening or deepening of these canals, or for the elevation of bridges in connection therewith, shall proceed without subsequent authorization of Congress.

Mr. President, I respectfully call the attention of the President's Advisory Committee on Allotments to the fact that it probably is violating the law in connection with this particular allotment. I make no point, at the moment, of other limitations in the act of 1930 in respect to the Erie and Oswego Canals, intended to require general federalization of the canals prior to any Federal investment in them. I point only to the specific prohibition in the law of 1930 which seems to be ignored by the proposed allocation.

ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY AT DEDICATION OF POST OFFICE, MONTICELLO, N. Y.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a notable speech made by the Postmaster General at the dedication of the post office at Monticello, N. Y., on May 20, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

My friends and fellow citizens, I desire first of all to express my appreciation of the privilege of participating with the people of Monticello in the dedication of their new post office—the first to be erected by the Federal Government in Sullivan County.

This occasion not only inspires patriotic remembrances of the past but it inspires us to renew our allegiance to our common country. We here dedicate ourselves once more to the great principles of liberty for which the founders of your community so valiantly fought and so nobly sacrificed. This Federal post office erected by all the people, for the use of all the people, stands as a memorial to their courage and virtue.

The name "Monticello" is a most fitting one. Here you have the "heavenly hill", the magnificent valleys and picturesque streams which combine to make this locality one of scenic grandeur. It was pleasing to me to learn that the founders of Monticello desired to honor the immortal Jefferson and named their new village after his beautiful Virginia home.

Those were the stirring times, when men contended with each other to do honor to that great Democrat who laid down as his political platform:

"Equal and exact justice to all men of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political; peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none; the support of the State government in all their rights; the preservation of the established government in its whole constitutional vigor; a jealous care of the right of election by the people; absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority; the supremacy of the civil over the military authority; economy in the public expense; the honest payment of our debts, and sacred preservation of the public faith; encouragement of agriculture and of commerce; freedom of religion; freedom of the press; and freedom of person."

As Jefferson truly said, the wisdom of our sages and the blood of our heroes have been devoted to the attainment of these principles. They should be the creed of our political faith; the text of civic instruction, and the standard by which to try the services of those we trust.

The postmasters of Monticello have always been your representative citizens. Their very names tell of the sturdy Knickerbocker and New England families from which they originated.

Samuel F. Jones, the first one, established the office in his store early in 1811. He was succeeded March 31, 1813, by his brother, John Paul Jones. These men, who named your town, were the sons of a soldier of the Revolution and admirers of Thomas Jefferson. John Paul Jones served for over 29 years, the longest term of any of your postmasters. The election of the Whig candidate, President William Henry Harrison, in 1841, brought about his displacement.

Harrison Beecher served the next longest term, from 1898 to 1915. Mrs. Amanda Quinlan was the only woman to hold the office, which she did from 1885 to 1890. Prominent newspapermen also served as postmasters—Frederick A. DeVoe in 1853 and 1856, and John Eldridge Quinlan in the late 1850's.

Such prominent family names as Bennett, St. John, Burnham, Hamilton, Waller, Terwilliger, Allen, Hammond, Oakley, Niven, Stratton, and Kelly are numbered among your postmasters. William W. Carpenter, your present postmaster, has served you since May 19, 1924.

In 1811 Monticello received its mail on a route from Newburg to Chenango Point, now Binghamton. Chester Clark, of Kingston, was the contractor. One hundred years ago business had greatly increased, and there was a daily service started in four-horse post coaches between Newburg and Monticello. There was also weekly service on a route to Delhi, on another to Wawarsing, and another to Goshen. Rural mail service was established November 12, 1912, and city delivery service October 1, 1920.

There have been many changes from those times when mail was carried by foot and horse to the little store and post office to now when it is carried by steam, gas, and electricity through the air, sea, and land to your new post office.

It gives me no little satisfaction to have been connected with the first Government-owned post office in your town, and I have been interested in seeing the happy result. The site cost $20,000 and the building $46,460, allotted November 18, 1933.

The Corrado Co., of Newark, who erected the building, and all the workmen who were associated with them are to be congratulated on their good work.

I have no doubt that you are proud of this handsome structure which has been erected with such careful attention to the handling of the mails. As a matter of fact, the Government did you no favor in putting up this building to keep pace with the industrial progress that is so closely related to the volume of the mail. The people of the United States insist, and have a right to insist, that their Government shall function efficiently. They have a right to be impatient at delays in delivery and other slipshod things that interfere with effective service. Consequently, the Government is forced to keep pace with progress and, as experience teaches what is necessary and what falls short of speed and convenience in handling the mails, it becomes its duty to build post offices that meet the growing needs of communities and that embrace all the facilities requisite for the business.

I speak of it as a business, because it is really the biggest business in the world—the handling of mail for 130,000,000 people.

I think that the Post Office Department, ever since the day of the first Postmaster General of the United States, has given more general satisfaction than any department in the Government. Of course, there have been times when the service has not been all that it should have been, but, by and large, your letters have been carried safely and efficiently. This was true when the post office was in the little shop around the corner and one boy and a pony was all the force required to move the letters of the people of Monticello to the next point. It was true later on when the four-horse post coaches carried your mail to Newburg and brought the incoming mail there, and it was in response to the demands of your forefathers that weekly side routes were established to neighboring towns. It is true today, I hope, in this era of granite and marble post offices and the transmission of mail across the continent between daylight and dark.

There is no department of the Government which comes into such intimate contact with the people. Indeed, I should say that 100,000,000 out of the 130,000,000 people of this country have no direct contact with any Government official other than the postmaster and his representative, the carrier. It is my belief that the progress of the country has been more influenced by the post office than by any other branch of the Government. In the old days when everybody had to call at the post office for their mail, that post office became the common meeting place for every community. There was an almost daily convention of neighbors in these stations. There the policies that were finally enacted into law had their birth. People voiced their approval or disapproval of everything the Government did or thought of doing. It speaks well for the character of men who were appointed to handle the mails in each town and city that from these early gatherings, over which the postmaster unconsciously presided, developed the principle that the postmaster should be eminent in his own community and not infrequently the leader of its political thought. I know, of course, there is a theory that the postmasters are appointed merely as a matter of political expediency. Actually a large proportion of them come from the civil-service rolls, and the others must be recommended by people of standing in their communities before their names are considered.

At this time I want to pay tribute to one of the sons of Sullivan County, who for 45 years served ably and well in the Postal Service. I find he is well known throughout the United States by all postal men and women. The last 35 years of his career he served as a post-office inspector, loved by all good people within and without the Service with whom he came in contact, feared by all who violated the people's mail. I refer to your fellow townsman, Moses C. Durvea. I wish for him happiness and contentment in his retirement.

It gave me a great deal of pleasure some months ago to appoint as a post-office inspector Harold A. Urban, also of your county. He served in the Liberty office for a number of years. I hope he will keep up, as he now bids fair to, the good record made by Mr. Durvea, who recommended him.

My friends, I cannot tell you how good it is to be back in New York State and meet with people who truly support the Government, people whose thoughts are what they can do for it rather than what they can get out of it.

There is grave danger of forgetting what the American people are really thinking when one stays in Washington and listens to the barrage from special interests and organized minorities.

The people as a whole have no paid lobbyists. They must depend upon their elected Representatives to protect the public. Government officials must be honest and able and their courage must rise above pettiness and vote catching. In their work for you they should be constructive rather than critical, helpful rather than obstructive.

There are many lobbyists and powerful influences to mislead legislators and circumvent the interests of the people for the benefit of the few. There are but few to speak in the interests of economy in Government expenditures; few to speak in the interests of the people.

For instance, when I first stated my policy of establishing the Post Office Department on a business basis and wiping out the postal deficit, I was surprised to be informed by some that the way to become a popular Postmaster General was to spend the peoples' money and not to save it.

Well, regardless of this advice, we wiped out the tremendous postal deficit the first full year of President Roosevelt's administration. It was wiped out without sacrificing the job of a single regular postal employee. It was wiped out without impairing the service to the people. And today we have a highly efficient Service with a minimum of complaints.

You must understand that in reckoning a post-office surplus I refer only to the actual balance between what it costs to handle and carry the mails and what the people pay for postage. This is outside of matters in which the Post Office Department is merely the disbursing agent of the Government—such as ship and air subsidies, awarded by acts of Congress for the encouraging of the merchant marine and the development of aviation. These are things over which the Postmaster General has neither authority nor discretion.

I shall endeavor to continue to give the people an efficient and economical administration. I shall endeavor to carry it on without any deficit. Careful management and increasing receipts will, I trust, enable us to balance the postal budget again this year. Holding public office, I expect criticism, but I am willing to take my chances with the American people in being criticized for saving their money.

Fortunately, or unfortunately, under our two-party system it is accepted that the function of the party out of power is to find fault with the current administration. Far be it from me to complain of that habit, even where it goes beyond the bounds of honest criticism. The opposition party feels bound to find an unworthy motive for everything that is done. In every situation it resolves all doubts against the Government. It is trying, of course, for a Government official to be accused of all manner of evil where no evil exists, by all manner of irresponsible people, but after all this is part of the game of politics, and he must grin and bear it, I suppose. In some aspects it is a healthy thing for those entrusted with the conduct of the people's affairs to know that they are under surveillance all the time. It keeps us on our toes, and it does not take long in the Government service for an official to learn to avoid even the appearance of anything questionable, because he soon finds out that the worst interpretation will be placed on his every act by his political foes. This goes for everybody from the President down, and I would urge on every postmaster to keep the fact in mind.

We have tried to give, and are trying to give, the humble citizen without wealth and without individual influence a fair chance to make a decent living. This administration has boldly taken the stand that when private agencies and local governments have proved unable to meet the dire problems of an unparalleled depression, that the Federal Government must assume the duty of saving multitudes from starvation until such time as industry can again absorb the unemployed.

Of course, everybody is not satisfied with the measures necessary toward progressing to this goal. Certain interests clamor that they are getting the worst of it in this period of readjustment. We all know that at no time in our history has this class of people failed to protest every measure of popular progress. It kicked at the income-tax law. It kicked at the Sherman Antitrust Law; it kicked at the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission; it kicked at the Federal Reserve System, which has been our salvation in many fiscal crises. For that matter, we can go way back in our history and find it vehemently declaring that the country was going to the dogs because Andrew Jackson refused to stand for the domination of our finances by a Philadelphia banker. So it is perfectly understandable that we should find this same group calling every measure that has to do with the welfare of the plain citizen, communistic, socialistic, and anarchistic.

Despite the croakings of those who prophesy chaos with the advent of anything new in legislation or administration, this country is steadily getting back to normal conditions. On every side we see the evidence of business recovery, which means, of course, the increasing welfare of the working people as well as the employers. It is rather amusing to hear the reactionary noise-makers charging the administration with being hostile to big business while their Republican spokesmen are insisting that the emergency bureaus are crushing the small dealer and favoring the big ones. Obviously, if there was any truth in one of these absurd charges, there must be utter falsity in the other. We have come a long way since the 4th of March 1933, when President Roosevelt had to close all the banks in order to save our whole financial and industrial structure from collapsing in ruin. The balance sheets of every business in the country record the difference between that day and this. How has the change been brought about? It was brought about through the courage, the wisdom, and the far-sightedness of Franklin D. Roosevelt, beginning with the day when he took over the helm of the Ship of State from the hands of the wavering, wobbling administration which had permitted us to drift into the worst economic catastrophe in all our history. I have said before, and I repeat now and here, that the one great fault of the emergency measures is that they were inaugurated 3 years too late. Had the course on which we embarked with the advent of the Roosevelt administration been undertaken in 1929 we would not be worrying today about the size of the relief roll or the number of unemployed.

The past 2 years have been years of tremendous strain. The administration of the public service has required resourcefulness and intelligence. But greater than that has been the patience in adversity required of the people of the United States. With sublime faith in the soundness of their Government and the permanency of their institutions, they have stood united.

We have seen dictatorships throughout the rest of the world with riots, revolutions, and all their attendant evils. But our own country has steadfastly adhered to the principles of democratic government. Our revolution has been a peaceful one. We have returned to the fundamental principles of Jefferson and Lincoln so long forgotten.

The post office we are dedicating today is your local monument to the leader who got this country off of the reefs of despondency and disaster and is steering it toward the final haven of prosperity. We are still among the shoals, of course. Economic illness comes suddenly. Recovery is always slow. But I think you will agree with me that the genius of our great President, who has led us so far out of the swamp of depression, will carry us the rest of the way.

In closing I want to tell you once more how good it has been to be with you. Your kindness and your friendship will long be remembered. Not the least of the things that give me satisfaction is that I am a citizen of New York State and a near neighbor of the people of Sullivan County.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, sometime ago I presented to the Senate a report as a member of the special commission investigating conditions in the Philippine Islands. That report has been the subject of editorial comment in the Philippine press. As showing the Philippine view, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial which appeared in the Philippine Herald.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philippine Herald]

TALKING PLAINLY

Senator GIBSON's report to Congress, while written from the perspective that the United States should retain the Philippines, gives both sides of his Government's case in a frank and honest spirit. He tries to hide nothing in an effort to go straight to his point.

He holds, to begin with, that the Philippines is acquired territory, the United States paying $20,000,000 at the Treaty of Paris for the transfer of sovereignty from Spain. "The right", he maintains, "of Congress to alienate sovereignty of the United States over land and peoples to which it has become attached is extremely doubtful."

Against this claim of the inalienable position of the Philippines as a possession of his people, Senator GIBSON offers the testimony of America's Chief Executives who have maintained at least the implied obligation of the American Nation to prepare the Filipinos for self-government and eventually withdraw from this country.

Senator GIBSON is frank in stating that America should remain here. In so stating his point he does not commit the usual hypocrisy of stating it all as a proposition of altruism. He declares that the islands constitute a very rich spot of the earth—"the land of opportunity."

Among the facts he brings out are that the Philippines ranked ninth in importance as a market for American goods in 1933—"60 percent more important as market for American textiles than Cuba, 30 percent more important than Belgium, and more important than Argentina, Colombia, and Mexico combined." He adds: "Only eight countries purchased more of our products than the Philippine Islands."

Senator GIBSON further points out that the industrialization of such vast countries as India and China will inevitably create higher purchasing power and thus allow them to increase their demands for cotton, wheat, and foodstuffs. "The United States", he holds, "should be in a position to claim its share in their markets. The Philippine Islands hold the key to our Pacific trade."

It is not, as will be seen, a one-sided proposition. Senator GIBSON presents the selfish aspect of the question with admirable frankness and he cannot therefore be called a biased thinker on the Philippine problem. He is not only entitled to his views but he persuades us to ponder the points he brings out in his report, where those points involve our security in the international scheme of the Pacific area.

The geographical situation of the Philippines, in his view, places them between Japan and Britain "contending for the trade of the Orient and athwart the lanes of trade which supply the needs of more than half the peoples of the world." Whether we like it or not, that is the plain fact. Now, it is entirely up to us to appreciate or not to appreciate the value of American influence in our favor in the midst of such cross-purposes.

Again, whether we like it or not, severance of relations with the United States will compel us to look for other markets for our products, which have heretofore enjoyed free entry into the United States. "In securing these markets", says Senator GIBSON, "the Filipinos must compete with other oriental countries where the scale of living is much lower and the prices paid for labor only a fraction of that now paid in the Philippines."

What would it profit us to dismiss these questions with a shrug of the shoulder? Nothing. And would it be enough to say that we will face these facts courageously, that we are not the people to run away from danger? That would be but one dimension of our historic attitude in the face of our international problems; the other dimension is action dictated by a policy of long-range vision and practical statesmanship.

The flaw in Senator GIBSON's thesis is the hopeless picture it conjures up for an independent Philippines. Such a picture should not discourage us, but we should do something more than merely be enthusiastic; we must know now definitely what we want and concentrate all our energies upon it. An independent Philippines, on intimate terms with the United States, is within the range of possibility. It is the one practical goal to which we should direct our undivided efforts.

HISTORY OF THE ADJUSTED-SERVICE COMPENSATION

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, Mr. Harold D. Hantz, of the library staff, under the direction of the Senate librarian, Mr. James D. Preston, has compiled a history of the adjusted-service certificate legislation, which I think will be found very valuable to Members of the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HISTORY OF THE ADJUSTED-SERVICE COMPENSATION OR BONUS

1920 (66TH CONG., 2D SESS.)

H. R. 14157. To provide adjusted-compensation for veterans of the World War; to provide revenue therefor, and for other purposes.

Provided for—

1. Adjusted-service pay at rate of $1 a day for service in United States and $1.25 for overseas service, with a maximum of $500 for home service and $625 for overseas service to be paid in 10 equal quarterly installments if more than $500 or in quarterly installments of $50 if less than $500.

2. Or the veteran may accept an adjusted-service certificate. Face value determined by increasing adjusted-service pay 40 percent, carrying 4¼-percent interest for 20 years.

3. Or the veteran may receive vocational-training aid.

4. Or the veteran may accept farm or home aid.

5. Or the veteran may receive land-settlement aid.

6. Revenue provided by victory taxes: Additional surtax on incomes; stock and bond tax; produce-exchange tax; real-estate tax; tax on cigars, tobacco, and manufactures thereof.

Introduced by Representative Fordney. Passed House 289-91, May 29, 1920. Referred to Senate Finance but not reported back.

1921 (67TH CONG., 1ST SESS.)

S. 506. To provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War and for other purposes.

Provisions the same as H. R. 14157 above with the tax provisions omitted. Senator McCumber in his speech of June 23, 1921, said that there would be adequate revenue from the interest on the debts of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium alone to cover the necessary appropriations.

Introduced by Senator McCumber. While the bill was before the Senate, President Harding appeared before the Senate July 12 urging that the bill be not passed. Accordingly the bill was recommitted July 15, 1921—yeas 47, nays 29.

1922 (67TH CONG., 2D SESS.)

H. R. 10874. To provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes.

Provided—

1. Adjusted-service certificate determined on basis of $1 for home service and $1.25 for overseas service with $60, the amount paid the soldiers when leaving the service, deducted and a credit of 25 percent added instead of 40 percent, as in the two previous years. If adjusted-service credit $50 or less, it was to be paid immediately; for a greater amount the 20-year-endowment policy was given.

2. Veteran may borrow up to 50 percent from bank until September 30, 1925, at rate of 2 percent, or borrow 85 percent from the Government after September 30, 1925.

3. Provided also the vocational education, etc.

Introduced by Representative Fordney March 13, 1922, and passed House 333 to 70 March 23, 1922. Passed Senate 47 to 22 August 31, 1922. Vetoed by President Harding September 19, and House overrode veto 258 to 54 September 20. Senate sustained veto 44 to 28 September 20.

1924 (68TH CONG., 1ST SESS.)

H. R. 7959. To provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes. (Public, No. 120.)

Provided—

1. Payment in cash to veterans with adjusted-service credit of $50 or less.

2. The issuance of an endowment insurance certificate to the veterans applying, this being equivalent to a paid-up 20-year policy for the amount of the adjusted-service credit plus 25 percent and interest at 4 percent compounded annually.

3. The privilege to borrow after 2 years, the interest not to be higher than 2 percent more than Federal Reserve rate.

4. In case of death before the 20 years the veteran's beneficiary received the full value of the policy.

5. Authorized annual appropriations for a fund to provide for payment of the policies in 1945.

Introduced by Representative Green of Iowa, March 15, 1924. Passed House, 355 to 54, March 18. Passed Senate, 67 to 17, April 23. Vetoed by President Coolidge on May 15. Passed House over veto, 313 to 78, May 17. Passed Senate over veto, 59 to 16, May 19.

1926 (69TH CONG., 1ST SESS.)

H. R. 10277. To amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act.

This is a clarifying act in regard to negotiation of loans and payment of service credits on death of veteran before applying for certificate.

Introduced by Representative Green of Iowa, March 12, 1926. Passed House 291 to 138, July 1. Passed Senate viva voce, July 3. Approved July 3, 1926.

1927 (69TH CONG., 2D SESS.)

H. R. 16886. To amend the World War Adjusted Compensation Act. (Public, No. 762.)

Provided for loans on certificates from the United States Treasury in same manner as loans from banks.

Introduced by Representative Green of Iowa, February 2, 1927. Passed House viva voce, February 7, 1927. Passed Senate, 75 to 0, February 23, 1927. Approved March 4, 1927.

1931 (71ST CONG., 3D SESS.)

S. 5060. To provide for the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates.

Introduced by Senator Caraway but not reported from Finance. One of the first bills providing for immediate payment of face value of present certificates.

H. R. 17054. To increase the loan basis of adjusted-service certificates, or the emergency adjusted compensation act, 1931. (Public, No. 743.)

Provided that the loan basis be increased to 50 percent of the face value of the certificate.

Introduced by Representative Hawley, February 12, 1931. Passed House, 363 to 39, February 16. Passed Senate, 72 to 12, February 19. Vetoed by President Hoover, February 26. Passed House over veto, 328 to 79, February 26. Passed Senate over veto, 76 to 16, February 27.

1932 (72D CONG., 1ST SESS.)

Twenty bills providing for immediate payment of the face value of the certificates were reported adversely. Among these was Representative PATMAN's first bill; however, it received the following action:

1932 (72D CONG., 1ST SESS.)

H. R. 7726. To provide for the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates.

Introduced by Representative PATMAN January 14, 1932. Reported adversely, but passed House 211 to 176 June 15. Failed in the Senate—yeas 18, nays 62, June 17.

1933 (73D CONG., 1ST SESS.)

Senator Robinson of Indiana offered the immediate payment of the face value of the adjusted-service certificates as an amendment to the inflation amendment of Senator THOMAS of Oklahoma, to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, April 27. Senator Robinson's amendment was rejected 28 to 60, April 28.

1934 (73D CONG., 2D SESS.)

H. R. 1. To provide for controlled expansion of the currency and the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of the adjusted-service certificates.

Introduced by Representative PATMAN March 9, 1933. Petition filed with 145 signatures in House February 20. Motion to discharge committee from further consideration passed 313 to 104 March 12. Passed House 295 to 125 March 12. Not reported from Senate Finance committee.

In the Senate immediate payment of the bonus was offered three times in the form of amendments:

1. Senator Robinson of Indiana, as an amendment to the monetary bill, but amendment rejected without record vote January 27, 1934.

2. Senator LONG, as an amendment to the independent offices appropriation bill, and the amendment was rejected 24 to 64 February 27, 1934.

3. Senator SHIPSTEAD, as an amendment to the silver bill, but the amendment was rejected 31 to 51, June 11, 1934.

1935 (74TH CONG., 1ST SESS.)

H. R. 3896. To provide for the immediate payment of World War adjusted-service certificates.

Introduced by Representative VINSON of Kentucky, January 14, 1935, and reported in the House March 13. The Patman bill, providing for payment through the issuance of non-interest-bearing Treasury notes, was accepted as a substitute amendment, 207 to 204, March 22. Patman bill passed House 318 to 90, March 22.

In the Senate the Harrison bill, in the nature of a compromise, was reported from the Finance Committee as a substitute for the Patman bill, April 25. The Vinson bill was then substituted for the Harrison bill 54 to 30, May 7. The question was then whether the Vinson bill should be substituted for the Patman bill, and on the vote the yeas were 35, the nays 52, this vote thus leaving the Patman bill as the question before the Senate. The Patman bill then passed the Senate 55 to 33, May 7.

On May 22 President Roosevelt vetoed the bill and established a precedent by reading his message before a joint session of the Congress. The House then overrode the veto 322 to 98, May 22; but the Senate sustained the veto 54 to 40, May 23.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate is to proceed in a body to the Hall of the House of Representatives at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., I think we should have a quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON. I rose for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum, and I now make that suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Robinson
Austin	Costigan	Logan	Russell
Bachman	Couzens	Lonergan	Schall

Mr. DIETERICH. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The hour of 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m. having arrived, the Senate will proceed in a body to the Chamber of the House of Representatives.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by the Sergeant at Arms, the Vice President, and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Senate having returned to its Chamber (at 1 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.), it reassembled, and the Vice President took the chair.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Reynolds

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ARE THE VETERANS WORTHY OF THEIR HIRE?

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, when the President demands of Congress a lump sum of $5,000,000,000 subject to his own allocation for work relief and vetoes the demand of Congress to cash an outstanding debt of $2,200,000,000 to the veterans for war service at less than half the minimum wage for workers in other fields, these questions naturally arise before the minds of the American people:

First. Are the veterans who fight for Uncle Sam, and drafted by the Government to fight for allied powers in Europe, worthy of their hire?

Last week the carpenters of this Capital City received an allowance of $1.37½ an hour for future work, or $11 a day. Why is not the veteran who lay in the trenches and faced the shells of the enemy worth at least, including so-called "bonus", a wage of $2.25 a day, or one-fifth of a carpenter's pay and less than half the minimum wage of common labor?

Second. What can we say of the sincerity of an Executive who demands $5,000,000,000 for his campaign emergency of 1936 under the pretext of work relief and then vetoes an act of Congress to afford relief to 3,500,000 veterans for work done 17 years ago and still half unpaid?

Third. Why must veterans only among those who serve the Government have to wait till 1945, when most of them will then lie in Flanders' fields?

Did Vincent Astor, the President's rear admiral of the Nourmahal, have to wait till 1945 to collect his $1,000,000 a year in war profits in the years 1915 to 1919, inclusive?

Have we heard the international bankers and their organs complain about the violation of contracts, by which American investors were swindled of billions, and the administration lifting not a hand to adjust these foreign investments, notwithstanding the Security Act of 1933, in which Congress, under title II thereof, directed the President to create a commission for collection of these international debts to American investors?

Where is the sincerity of an administration pretending that the veterans are bound by a 1945 contract, to which they were not a legal and willing contractual party, and then lifting no voice against the defalcation by foreign powers of $12,000,000,000 due the Treasury and $15,000,000,000 due American investors?

If contractual relations bother the President, what about the 70 cash loans made to France since the war and the total $5,000,000,000 of principal and interest on which France has defaulted without a protest from the White House?

The President has no contractual basis for that $5,000,000,000 subject to his allocation. He simply demanded it, and a party majority granted it. Unless Members of Congress granted the White House demand, their elections were imperiled in the national campaign of 1936.

If Congress is not a free agent to do justice to its veterans, if it is not free to pay a debt owed since Armistic Day 1918, if Congress is not a free agent to authorize a currency issue, let us ask ourselves this question:

Under what provision of the Constitution, which in article I places the purse strings of Government in congressional control, does Congress get the power to delegate the allocation of that $5,000,000,000 to the Executive during the period of the next Presidential campaign?

Did Barney Baruch, Wall Street contact man, whose income from war was so large that he had the Government record thereof suppressed, have to wait till 1945?

Did Baruch's assistant, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, who directed the Wall Street lobby to draft the 4,000,000 young men into European service, have to wait for his till 1945?

Did the Allied Powers who defaulted on their Treasury debts have to wait for their $12,000,000,000 till 1945?

Did the international bankers, who fleeced American investors of the major part of $15,000,000,000, have to wait for theirs till 1945?

Did any of the war profiteers—the 3 members of the Astor family, the 3 Rockefellers, the 5 Du Ponts, the Vanderbilts, and the rest of the $1,000,000-a-year income class, and the 20,000 new millionaires created by the World War—have to wait for their pay for patriotic service till 1945?

Did any of the salaried army of Government and corporate propagandists opposing this just measure have to wait for their salary checks till 1945?

Did any of the tax-exempt bondholders and coupon shearers now opposing this currency issue—which weans a few of them from the Federal cow—have to wait for their $112,000,000 a year at 4 percent till 1945?

Fourth. What is the validity of that alleged "1945 contract" forced upon the veterans by a lobby of bondholders and life-insurance companies and war profiteers—that hold-up agreement in which 99 percent of the veterans had no voice, and few or none of them a willing voice, or even a definite knowledge?

Have we heard this administration complaining about violation of contract in connection with the default of European war powers on their debts to the United States Treasury?

In looking for the contractual mote stuck in the veteran's eye by the coupon shearers, let not Candidate Roosevelt forget the $5,000,000,000 beam in his own eye, placed there at his own command.

If sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, then $5,000,000,000 of sauce for Roosevelt in his campaign emergency should at least warrant that less than one-half a minimum common-labor wage amounting to $2,200,000,000, now in justice due for 16 years, should be paid to 3,500,000 national relief workers on the battlefield.

Where is the justice in tossing out $5,000,000,000 in one lump sum to the Executive, and further billions to his alphabetical bureaus, and denying the doughboys their petty wage for service and sacrifice?

There is no argument in the mooted inflationary propaganda about the effects of a currency issue. Government high authorities—Jones, the head of R. F. C., and Eccles, Governor of the Federal Reserve—have blown that stuff to the winds.

The statement of the statesman who was Secretary of the Treasury during 6 years of the Wilson Administration, the distinguished junior Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo], killed that Wall Street propaganda in one sentence, when he declared that the issuance of new currency to pay the certificates would have about as much of an adverse effect upon national credit as a spadeful of sand thrown upon the beach would influence the incoming tide.

During the 6 years when the junior Senator from California was Secretary of the Treasury, Franklin D. Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy. By what subsequent experience has Franklin D. Roosevelt become a greater authority on national finance than the man who was Secretary of the Treasury for 6 years, or than the man who is now head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and, furthermore, than the Governor of the Federal Reserve System, and all these trained financiers combined?

On what hath this our Assistant Secretary of the Navy fed, that he has grown so great as a financier? Is it his financial record as Governor of New York? What Franklin Roosevelt did to the finances of New York State is not a record of which New York is proud. I may be deemed guilty of the crime of lese majesty when I allude to it. It is a subject which is no longer deemed fit for publication. I am told by New York authorities that the mountain of public debt piled up by this political financier in 4 years as Governor has no parallel, except only the new deal debt of $15,000,000,000 piled up here since March 4, 1933, for bold experiments.

Neither his New York record as Governor, nor his new-deal record here—his demonitization of gold, his knocking the gold dollar down to 59 cents, his financial irresponsibility in demanding billions and still more billions to put over his bold experiments, his world record in creating Treasury deficits and piling up mountains of peace-time debt—is sufficient to entitle our one-time Assistant Secretary of the Navy to a financial standing greater than that of the 6-year Secretary of the Treasury, the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and all these three trained financiers combined.

If there is anything in the financial record of Franklin D. Roosevelt to warrant his veto of a financial measure of justice to our 3,500,000 veterans, it is time for those sustaining the veto to point it out.

As a dramatic figure on the screen, as a star actor in political hullabaloo, he is an outstanding authority. His executive staff of 600 news reporters appointed by him to the alphabetical bureaus, his White House staff of newspapermen supplemented by Charles Michael, of the Democratic National Committee, and Raymond Moley, of the brain trust, make him an excellent publicity authority; but as a national financier, qualified to tell Congress how to handle the purse strings, his bold experiments with the public funds, with the legislative powers of Congress, with the Budget and the Constitution, are sufficient in themselves to destroy his claim to financial responsibility.

Among the wild inconsistencies of the White House during the two years of its new deal in finance, we are confronted with the following faux pas:

First. Half the measures of the 1933 session were proclaimed from the White House, both in press notices and in messages to Congress, as "inflation" or "reflation" measures to boost the price level and the purchasing power of the country. Both the A. A. A. and the N. R. A. and the gold bonus of $35 an ounce, and the devaluation of the dollar to 59 cents, were advertised far and wide as price-boosting "inflationary" measures, and now we find that the chief argument of the administration against the Patman bill is that it is inflationary.

Second. The new deal has forced a bond inflation of $15,000,000,000—a kind of inflation which Thomas Jefferson denounced as "ruinous"—and the administration guilty of this bond inflation of $15,000,000,000 denounces this reduction of $2,200,000,000 in veteran debt as an inflation fraught with national peril to Government credit. It is fraught with peril only to a small bunch of coupon clippers.

Third. The demonitization of gold and withdrawal of $8,000,000,000 from circulation was the greatest monetary contraction in world history. The restoration of $2,200,000,000 in currency meets only a little over one-fourth of the amount of monetary contraction by gold withdrawal.

Fourth. How can the administration claim with any degree of financial responsibility that the payment of $2,200,000,000 to meet the veteran debt is unsound finance in the face of its Treasury daily statement of May 14 that the total emergency funds for new-deal experiments aggregated $17,671,000,000?

The astounding financial record of new-deal experiments—now aggregating $17,671,000,000—is nearly nine times the full amount voted by Congress to wipe out the veteran debt.

The Treasury tells us that over $3,000,000,000 for emergency has been expended in the present fiscal year, 1935.

The Treasury tells us that over $6,000,000,000 was expended for emergency in the fiscal year 1934 and prior thereto.

The Treasury tells us that $8,423,000,000 of emergency funds are still unexpended, including $3,488,000,000 of funds unallocated by the President.

How can $2,200,000,000 to take up the veteran debt prove a danger to national credit, demanding a White House veto, in the face of these repeated White House demands, resulting in the wholesale dysentery of bond inflation and deficits and doles spread all over the national barnyard and pasture to a height of $17,671,000,000—a world record in financial stench and discredit?

This $2,200,000,000 of currency to take up the veteran debt and save the taxpayers future interest burdens aggregating over $1,000,000,000 by 1945 is, in fact, the most conservative and constructive recovery act during the 2-year history of the new deal.

We know that it will reduce by $2,200,000,000 our mountainous interest-bearing public debt; and God knows that debt reduction must begin soon to save the national credit and cut down the chief obstacle to business expansion.

We know that it will cut off $112,000,000 a year in interest coupons and taxes, or more than $1,000,000,000 by 1945.

We know that direct currency payment of $2,200,000,000 to 3,500,000 veterans and dependents will stimulate the local trade of 48 States and 3,000 counties, help the farmers and country stores, pay the doctors and drug stores, the local landlords and the country banks, and help pay the delinquent taxes in every State, county, town, and school district, and eventually come back to the Treasury in part as revenue to the Federal Government.

These $2,200,000,000 in greenbacks, which go in the first instance to the veterans and their dependents, then to the stores and banks, then to the farms and factories, then to the tax-collection districts and unpaid teachers, then again to the stores and banks, will be liberating frozen assets all through the home trade of the Nation, restoring closed banks to solvency, giving employment in every local industry, and before a year of this daily circulation has expired the aggregate volume of its debt-paying and trade-revival service will amount to billions beyond computation. It may reach, in total circulation transactions, $5,000,000,000, or $10,000,000,000, or even $20,000,000,000, in the aggregate of its stimulating volume of home trade.

It will bring joy to every nook and corner of the Republic. It will help trade and employment and build up public hope and public confidence in every hamlet in the land. It will save 3,500,000 patriotic citizens from despondency and increase their faith in Uncle Sam. Moreover, it comes with no taint of partisanship and campaign politics in 1935, a year before the elections, and has the support of the majority of all political parties represented in Congress; for I have no doubt the President is irked at having it paid now, but next year it will be O. K., for then it will accrue to his campaign and reelection. If passed over his veto, it will be the first positive and real recovery step of a new deal which thus far has experimented and struck down industrial production and trade with no tangible result, except a mountain of debt and taxes.

Instead of cutting down both agricultural and industrial production, this veteran act will stimulate all industry. It will thaw frozen assets. It will add to country-wide productive employment.

In April 1935 the American Federation of Labor found 11,500,000 unemployed against only 7,000,000 in April 1932—a 3-year unemployment gain of 4,500,000, due to crack-down experiments with productive industries employing labor.

This veteran currency issue may be the first true and positive national recovery step aiding employment and wages in all local industries, which are the natural feeders to the large industries engaged in interstate and foreign commerce.

In the end this currency issue to the veterans may largely come back to the Federal Government in numerous ways—by increase of Federal revenue, by reducing the number of 22,000,000 people on Federal doles, by aid in balancing the Federal Budget, by reducing interest payments on the adjusted-service certificates, and by economies in the expenditure of the 27 emergency funds, now rising to the alarming total of nearly $18,000,000,000.

It is financially conservative and sound. It is constructive in its economic stimulus. It will reduce outstanding debt and future taxes. It will strengthen the faith of the people in Uncle Sam. It will help everybody, including every branch of Government, from the school district up to the great Federal machine.

Moreover, it is justice. It tells the boy who fights for Uncle Sam that God and the Government are behind him, and will not forget him in the day of his emergency, when he returns home in rags and with shell shock from the battlefield where he fought to save democracy. He will know that he is worthy of his hire, even though a private in the ranks under the flag of Uncle Sam.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GIBSON in the chair). The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, line 4, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$510,000" and insert "$511,500", so as to read:

Provided, That no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the expense of any naval district in which there may be an active navy yard, naval training station, or naval operating base, unless the commandant of the naval district shall be also the commandant of one of such establishments: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $511,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Naval Research Laboratory", on page 5, line 7, after the name "Secretary of the Navy", to strike out "$310,000" and insert "$210,000"; in line 9, after the word "That", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$20,000"; and in line 16, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$120,000" and insert "$90,000", so as to read:

For laboratory and research work and other necessary work of the naval research laboratory for the benefit of the naval service, including operation and maintenance of a laboratory, additions to equipment necessary properly to carry on work in hand, maintenance of buildings and grounds, temporary employment of such scientific and technical civilian assistants as may become necessary, and subscriptions to technical periodicals, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, $210,000: Provided, That $20,000 of this appropriation shall be available for the temporary employment of civilian scientists and technicians required on special problems: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $90,000, in addition to the amount authorized by the preceding proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Bureau of Navigation—Training, education, and welfare, Navy", on page 7, line 21, after the name "Rhode Island", to strike out "$103,059" and insert "$115,559", so as to read:

Newport, R. I., $115,559.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 25, after the word "than", to strike out "two" and insert "five", so as to read:

Instruction: For postgraduate instruction of officers in other than civil government and literature, and for special instruction, education, and individual training of officers and enlisted men at home and abroad, including maintenance of students abroad, except aviation training and submarine training otherwise appropriated for, $178,000: Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for or on account of any expense incident to giving special educational courses or postgraduate instruction to officers with view to qualifying them or better qualifying them for the performance of duties required to be performed by or in pursuance of law by officers of the Supply Corps, Construction Corps, or Corps of Civil Engineers, except present students and except such officers who are commissioned in such corps or who have not been commissioned in the line of the Navy more than 5 years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 4, after the word "for", to strike out "$55,000" and insert "$58,000", so as to read:

Libraries: For libraries, professional books, textbooks, religious books, periodicals, and newspaper subscriptions for ships and shore stations not otherwise appropriated for, $58,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 12, after the word "prescribe", to strike out "$279,000" and insert "$282,200", so as to read:

Welfare and recreation: For welfare and recreation of the Navy, including periodicals and newspaper subscriptions, and not exceeding $2,400 for care and operation of schools at naval stations at Guantanamo Bay and Tutuila, for the children of naval and Marine Corps commissioned, enlisted, and civilian personnel, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, under such regulations as he may prescribe, $282,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 2, after the name "Navy", to strike out "$1,510,122" and insert "$1,528,622", and in line 12, after the word "Libraries", to strike out "$22,000" and insert "$24,000, so as to read:

In all, training, education, and welfare, Navy, $1,528,622: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department, exclusive of temporary services, shall not exceed the following amounts, respectively: Naval War College, $77,000; naval training station, San Diego, $7,500; naval training station, Newport, $10,000; naval training station, Great Lakes, $14,500; naval training station, Norfolk, $5,500; instruction, $26,000; libraries, $24,000; welfare and recreation, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ocean and lake surveys, Bureau of Navigation", on page 12, line 13, after the word "assigned" to insert "to", so as to read:

For hydrographic surveys, including the pay of the necessary hydrographic surveyors, cartographic draftsmen, and recorders, and for the purchase of nautical books, charts, and sailing directions, $70,000, of which $8,000 shall be available immediately: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department shall not exceed $27,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Naval Reserve", on page 14, line 14, before the word "officers", to strike out "twenty" and insert "nineteen"; in line 16, after the word "respectively", to insert "the pay and allowances of their grade"; in line 19, after the word "duties", to strike out "and/or" and insert "and"; and in line 20, after the word "duty", to insert a comma "and other officers above such grades employed on such class of active duty shall not be entitled to be paid a greater rate of pay and allowances than authorized by law for a lieutenant of the Navy or a captain of the Marine Corps entitled to not exceeding 10 years' longevity pay" so as to read:

For expenses of organizing, administering, and recruiting the Naval Reserve and Naval Militia; pay and allowances of officers and enlisted men of the Naval Reserve when employed on authorized training duty; mileage for officers while traveling under orders to and from training duty; transportation of enlisted men to and from training duty, and subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; subsistence of enlisted men during the actual period of training duty; subsistence of officers and enlisted men of the Fleet Naval Reserve while performing authorized training or other duty without pay; pay, mileage, and allowances of officers of the Naval Reserve and pay, allowances, subsistence, and transportation with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof of enlisted men of the Naval Reserve when ordered to active duty in connection with the instruction, training, and drilling of the Naval Reserve; pay of officers and enlisted men of the Fleet Naval Reserve for the performance of not to exceed 48 drills per annum or other equivalent instruction or duty, or appropriate duties, and administrative duties, exclusive, however, of pay, allowances, or other expenses on account of members of any class of the Naval Reserve incident to their being given flight training unless, as a condition precedent, they shall have been found by such agency as the Secretary of the Navy may designate physically and psychologically qualified to serve as pilots of naval aircraft, $7,352,825, of which amount $122,306 shall be available immediately; not more than $150,000 shall be available for maintenance and rental of armories, including pay of necessary janitors, and for wharfage; not more than $81,000 shall be available for employees assigned to group IV (b) and those performing similar services carried under native and alien schedules in the Schedule of Wages for Civil Employees in the Field Service of the Navy Department; not less than $2,277,945 shall be available, in addition to other appropriations, for aviation material, equipment, fuel, and rental of hangars, and not more than $397,914 shall be available, in addition to other appropriations, for fuel and the transportation thereof, and for all other expenses in connection with the maintenance, operation, repair, and upkeep of vessels assigned for training the Naval Reserve, and of such total sum $5,062,396 shall be available exclusively for and on account of Naval and Marine Corps Reserve aviation: Provided, That no appropriation contained in this act shall be available to pay more than 19 officers of the Naval Reserve and 1 officer of the Marine Corps Reserve above the grade of lieutenant or captain, respectively, the pay and allowances of their grade for the performance of active duty other than the performance of drills or other equivalent instruction or duty, or appropriate duties, and the performance of 15 days' active training duty, and other officers above such grades employed on such class of active duty shall not be entitled to be paid a greater rate of pay and allowances than authorized by law for a lieutenant of the Navy or a captain of the Marine Corps entitled to not exceeding 10 years' longevity pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Naval Academy", on page 15, line 12, after the word "than", to strike out "$22,800" and insert "$25,100", so as to read:

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina permit this amendment to go over until other committee amendments have been acted on?

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over, and the clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 24, after the word "vessels", to strike out "heretofore authorized and herein or heretofore appropriated for in part" and insert "which have been, or may hereafter be authorized", so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That of the appropriations contained in this act under the head of "Increase of the Navy", there shall be available such sums as the Secretary of the Navy may from time to time determine to be necessary for the engagement of technical services, and the employment of personnel in the Navy Department and in the field, the purchase of plans, drafting and other supplies, and the expenses of printing and travel, in addition to those otherwise provided for, owing to the construction of vessels which have been, or may hereafter be authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 21, after the word "category", to insert "except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier", so as to read:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for the salary or pay of any officer, manager, superintendent, foreman, or other person or persons having charge of the work of any employee of the United States Government while making or causing to be made with a stop watch or other time-measuring device a time study of any job of any such employee between the starting and completion thereof, or of the movements of any such employee while engaged upon such work; nor shall any part of the appropriations made in this act be available to pay any premiums or bonus or cash reward to any employee in addition to his regular wages, except for suggestions resulting in improvements or economy in the operation of any Government plant; and no part of the moneys herein appropriated for the Naval Establishment or herein made available therefor shall be used or expended under contracts hereafter made for the repair, purchase, or acquirement, by or from any private contractor, of any naval vessel, machinery, article or articles that at the time of the proposed repair, purchase, or acquirement can be repaired, manufactured, or produced in each or any of the Government navy yards or arsenals of the United States, when time and facilities permit, and when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy, such repair, purchase, acquirement, or production would not involve an appreciable increase in cost to the Government; Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as altering or repealing the provisos contained in the acts to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels, approved February 13, 1929, and March 27, 1934, which provide that the first and succeeding alternate vessels in each category, except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, upon which work is undertaken, together with the main engines, armor, and armament shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards, naval gun factories, naval ordnance plants, or arsenals of the United States, except such material or parts as are not customarily manufactured in such Government plants.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 6, to increase the appropriation for personal services in the District of Columbia under the Bureau of Aeronautics, Navy Department, from $282,660 to $337,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, at the end of line 7, to increase the total appropriation for personal services in the District of Columbia under the Navy Department from $3,840,799 to $3,895,139.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Printing historical and naval documents", on page 57, line 23, after the numerals "1935", to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$20,000", so as to read:

For continuing the printing of historical and naval documents, including composition, clerical copying in the Navy Department, and other preparatory work, in accordance with the provisions of the appropriation made for the commencement of this work as contained in the Naval Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935, $20,000, together with the unexpended balance for this purpose for the fiscal year 1935.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments, with the exception of the reservation made by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 61, after line 7, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

Sec. 3. During the fiscal year 1935 and thereafter, the words "permanent change of station" as used in section 12 of the act approved May 18, 1920 (41 Stat. 604), as amended, shall be held to include the home of an officer or man to which he is ordered in connection with his retirement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I am under obligation, in view of the fact that there is but one committee amendment left to be acted on, of suggesting the absence of a quorum, since I know there are other Senators who desire to be present when that amendment is considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

EXTENSION OF THE N. R. A.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, for just a moment before proceeding to the consideration of the pending appropriation bill I should like to call attention to certain facts which are of considerable interest in light of the persons who are visiting Washington today who are calling upon Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, urging them unqualifiedly to support a 2-year extension of N. R. A.

The N. R. A. records reveal that Mr. George J. Lincoln, Jr., of Philadelphia, is the executive secretary of the paper-disk milk-bottle-cap industry, drawing from that industry and its code authority a salary of $9,000 a year; that he is the executive secretary of the cylindrical liquid type paper container industry, paying him a salary of $9,000 a year; that he is the manager of the sanitary milk-bottle-closure industry, paying him a salary of $6,000 a year; that he is the executive secretary of the paper-napkin division of the paper and pulp industry, paying him a salary of $9,000 a year; that he is manager of the crepe-paper division of the paper and pulp industry at a yearly compensation of $6,000; and, in addition, he directs the activities of the National Association of Drinking Straw Manufacturers at a yearly compensation of $9,000. The total salary paid to this man by reason of the operation of these codes is $48,000 per year.

This man, Mr. Lincoln, is in Washington today attending the conference which, it is expected, will urge upon Congress the great importance of continuing for 2 years this racket—for racket it is.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I revert to the committee amendment on page 49 of the bill, which the chairman of the committee consented should go over. That committee amendment, which appears under the head of "Increase of the Navy", is as follows:

And in addition $11,690,000 in the aggregate of the unobligated balances on June 30, 1935, of the appropriations "Maintenance, Bureau of Yards and Docks, 1934", "Ordnance and ordnance stores, Bureau of Ordnance, 1934", "Construction and repair, Bureau of Construction and Repair, 1934", "Engineering, Bureau of Engineering, 1934", "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, 1934", "Construction and repair, Bureau of Construction and Repair, 1933", "Pay, subsistence, and transportation, Navy, 1933", "Fuel and transportation, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, 1933", and "Aviation, Navy, 1933", are hereby reappropriated and made available for the purposes of this paragraph, and the total sum herein made available shall—

Originally, the Appropriations Committee of the House provided in its bill this $11,000,000 additional for construction in the Navy. The House struck out the provision. The Senate committee has written it back in the bill. If there were no better reasons than those which were afforded by Members of the House for striking out that $11,000,000, I should surely feel that the representation had been adequate. It seems to me no further reasons than were there given are required for striking the item from the bill.

Next year will witness the expiration of the naval treaty. There is not a soul here, there is not a soul within the ranks of our Army or our Navy, who will today undertake to say what the need is going to be in the way of naval construction after that treaty shall have expired.

Mr. President, I have just been advised that the House of Representatives has overridden the President's veto by a vote of 322 to 98; and I wish to serve notice now that if there is any desire on the part of the leaders to lay aside the pending business in order to consider the President's veto, I shall be glad to stand aside.

Mr. BARKLEY. The subject is not before the Senate, because the veto has not as yet been transmitted to the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the fact that the veto has not as yet been transmitted to the Senate.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I understand that it has not been transmitted to the Senate and is not officially before us; but I assumed that the leaders might wish to speak upon the subject this afternoon.

I repeat that there is no one within the Army or the Navy who will undertake to say what our needs after the expiration of the present treaty are going to be; yet we are appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars for construction which will be undertaken now, and which cannot possibly be completed in anything short of 3 or 4 or perhaps 5 years. I do not see why we do not exercise now the same concern about balanced budgets that we have exercised in considering appropriation bills for other departments of the Government, and trim down, so far as we can, the pending appropriations calling for naval construction during the next fiscal year.

Day before yesterday I was undertaking to lay before the Senate my views concerning the madness which at the present time is upon the world—ourselves included—for larger armaments. I said, if I remember correctly, that the world had never witnessed in peace times any such armament race as is under way today. Sixteen brief years after the war to end wars we find ourselves participating in a way which is calling for treble the appropriations in preparation for more wars that were occasioned in preparation for war the year before we entered the World War.

Our appropriations for the Army and Navy for the next year call for more money than it cost to run every department of Government, including the Army and the Navy, in 1914; yet, as I previously said, some of us have the audacity at times to rise in our places and remark upon the great misfortune that the other nations of the world do not follow our example in the cause of peace.

I said day before yesterday that the madness which is upon the world and upon our own country and people is occasioned in no small part by the fact that there are industries and there are individuals who have come to learn that there is tremendous profit in programs of preparing for war.

The World War created in America alone 22,000 new millionaires, men and women who could not have had their millions except as men were giving their lives and giving of their blood upon fields of battle, upon fields of honor. It is not surprising that people who learned that there was much profit in the last war should be among those who today are found saying that perhaps what our country now needs in order to overcome the depression is another little war. They learned that there was much profit and no depression for them during our participation in the World War.

That there is profit in preparing for war I think is best revealed by a statement attributed by Mr. Eugene Schneider, the head of the great Schneider-Creusot Munitions Works, who last year, in addressing the annual meeting of stockholders of his company, eloquently portrayed the great income which his company had enjoyed during the year, and then concluded his report with the remark:

The defense of our country has brought us satisfactions which cannot be ignored.

So long as men will look upon national defense and the defense of their country as a cause which is holding rewards for those who are in the position of producing and selling what a nation needs in the way of national defense, so long, I suppose, will we have upon us these annual urges for larger and larger and ever larger and more adequate national defense.

The facts are that, though we are today spending three times as much in the name of national defense as we were spending the year before we went into the World War, we have no more adequate defense today than we then had. Why? Simply because others against whom we have been preparing to defend ourselves are providing a defense for themselves; and I think today it may fairly be said to those who are constantly cautioning us to be on our guard and to be looking out for Japan that among those so urging are American merchants and manufacturers who are producing munitions of war and selling them to Japan and prevailing upon the people of Japan at one and the same time to believe that Japan has got to look out for the United States and be more adequately prepared for the war that is coming to them. We need but revert to statistics which are a matter of record to discover that during the years of the depression there has been one American business that has increased its domestic and foreign trade, and that business is the business of manufacturing and selling munitions of war.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did the Senator from Texas understand correctly the Senator from North Dakota to say that there are certain American citizens who are carrying on propaganda in Japan to create the impression in Japan that the Japanese must arm as against the United States?

Mr. NYE. I am saying that citizens of the United States who are among those warning us to look out for Japan are largely the ones who are selling to Japan American-made munitions of war. Our statistics of exportations today reveal larger exports of munitions to Japan than have ever before gone forth from our shores.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator another question. Did not the Senator furthermore say that they were selling goods to Japan and at the same time were creating the impression in Japan among her people that they should arm against the United States?

Mr. NYE. No; I do not think I said anything of that kind.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to have the Official Reporter read the notes.

Mr. NYE. I am perfectly willing that they be read.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to be informed, because, if the Senator has information of that kind—

Mr. NYE. I might say to the Senator, however, that there would not be anything unusual about it if such an assertion were made.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from North Dakota has information of that kind about citizens of the United States, he ought to give it to the Senate; he ought to give their names to the Senate, so that they could be placarded somewhere as enemies of their own country for gain. I think the Senator ought not to make a general statement such as that unless he has the information.

Mr. NYE. I will say to the Senator that I do not think I made any such statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. NYE. I think if the Senator will read the RECORD he will find that I have not made any such statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator denies it, I accept the denial.

Mr. NYE. There would not be anything surprising if a statement of that sort should be made here, because American manufacturers of munitions are engaged in other lands, notably in South America, in stirring up one nation against another, one people against another, selling them both the same identical machinery of national defense and profiting by reason of the fear and hate and suspicion they can engender.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. That may be true. I hold no brief for any munitions maker. Personally, I think the Government of the United States ought to make its own munitions.

Mr. NYE. I am delighted to hear the Senator's statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. It ought to make its own armor plate, in order to dissociate itself absolutely from any profit so far as the manufacture of munitions is concerned; but the statement of the Senator does not present a parallel. He says the munitions makers are selling munitions to South and Central America and are inciting those people one against the other. What I understood the Senator to say was that American citizens, for profit, were selling munitions to Japan, and were impressing among the Japanese people the idea that they, in turn, must arm against the United States. That is treason, if I understand what treason is; and if the Senator has such information, the names of those "patriots" ought to be placarded somewhere, in order that the Congress of the United States might enact legislation, if need be, to stop that kind of thing. I think if we had more legislation on munitions and less talk about the subject we would be better off.

Mr. NYE. I have heard the Senator previously make that statement. I am delighted to hear him make the statement this morning that he is one of those—and their number is growing—who believe that the proper thing is for the Government to manufacture its own national-defense machinery.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NYE. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has not undergone any change of mind on that subject; he has always favored such action.

Mr. NYE. Nor did I say that the Senator from Texas had undergone any change of mind. It seems to me that the Senator from Texas is overly sensitive today about some matter or other.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. If being sensitive to the interest of one's own country, and having a mind to bring about peace between it and other countries is oversensitiveness, then I plead guilty to the charge. The Senator from North Dakota, according to my understanding, was making a very grave and serious charge, and naturally the Senator from Texas was sensitive and wanted to know if the charge is true. If it be true, he thinks the Senator from North Dakota ought to tell the Senate about it.

Mr. NYE. I hope the Senator and I are going to continue to move in the same direction in remedying conditions which we seem to be in agreement are wrong.

The Senator from Texas awakens a thought which I think ought to be represented in the Senate, the thought which was involved in the campaign of one American munitions firm which had its salesmen work in South America for years. Sensing that there might be a better market for the moment in Cuba this American company sent its representative, Mr. Frank Jonas, to Cuba with instructions to sell its munitions to the rebels who were trying to overthrow the Cuban Government, and for all he sold to the rebels the company paid him a very handsome commission; but when the same salesman sold the same company's supplies to the Cuban Government, which was trying to put down the rebellion, the company paid him a little higher rate of commission; and this particular salesman, Mr. Jonas, when he was before our committee, was made to reveal that there was a time when he thought that he was engaged, to use his own expression, in "one hell of a business." One perhaps would be apt to forget that story were it not for the fact that our Government is in cooperation, in partnership, aiding wherever it can American munitions firms in their sales of munitions in other lands.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in connection with the Cuban exhibit which the Senator has just presented, I think it is particularly important that he should emphasize the fact that at the very moment when the representative of this American munitions firm was dealing, first, with the Cuban rebels and then with the Cuban Government, it was at the moment when the Platt amendment was still in effect, and the Government of the United States was virtually responsible for the maintenance of peace in Cuba.

Mr. NYE. Which, in the minds of some Senators, constitutes treason.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is a pretty good parallel.

Mr. NYE. The fact of the matter is, Mr. President—

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Who was it who said it constituted treason?

Mr. NYE. I did not understand the Senator's question.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from North Dakota stated that some Senator thought that the action he described constituted treason. I might not have been paying close attention, and will inquire what Senator so stated.

Mr. NYE. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] alluded to activities of the kind as constituting treason; and I quite agree with him.

Mr. LONG. I am glad it was the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana what his remark was?

Mr. LONG. I just said, having been informed that it was the Senator from Texas who thought it was treason, that I was glad it was the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Louisiana will find that the sentiments of the Senator from Texas on matters of that kind are usually sound.

Mr. LONG. In this instance they are sound.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, of course, we are now engaging in a wild shipbuilding program in the name of national defense. We always had national defense, but we must have more ships; and yet today there are no military or naval authorities in our land who would undertake to say how many ships America needs in order, in their opinion, to provide an adequate national defense. There is no limit. There seems to be no knowledge—at least, no will—on the part of military authorities to say how many men we must have in our Army and how many ships we must have in our Navy before we can feel thoroughly secure in our national defense.

If America were to be content strictly with an adequate national defense in name and in every particular, I dare say we could have such national defense for hundreds of millions of dollars a year less than we are now spending in the name of national defense. Today the plans of the American military experts are calling, not for battles at home or in our own waters or on our own shores, but for the transportation of 3,000,000 men across thousands of miles of ocean. If it were left to the people of America to determine the question, I am satisfied that to the extent of nearly 100 percent they would say that never, never again, in the light of past experience, should we ask our men and our boys to leave their own waters or their own shores to engage in war. But these are the kinds of plans upon which we base our annual appropriations in the name of national defense.

There are those who are wont to say that, while it is nice to contemplate strictly a national defense which would contemplate only war near to our shores or upon our own land, there might easily arise an occasion which would find us very regretful that we did not have that larger ability to go a long distance away from home in order to chastise people who in some manner or another might have insulted our flag or challenged our rights upon the high seas.

The question is asked, What would we do if, in the event of an engagement between Germany and France, the German submarines should espy out on the Atlantic a vessel carrying an American cargo of munitions of war destined to France, Germany's enemy? What then, spying it, if Germany sank that vessel and sent to the bottom, along with this American merchantman and its cargo, valued at perhaps at $25,000 or $50,000, the American flag? Would not we then wish for the adequacy of so-called "national defense and preparation" that would let us go a long distance from home to do honor to the flag, to show our resentment to an insult which had been inflicted upon it and upon our country? I presume that would be the reaction here at home, because it is our policy to defend our rights upon the high seas wherever our merchantmen may go, in whatever time they go, quite irrespective of war zones. But I have always thought that simply because that has been our policy and may be our policy today is no good reason why we should continue to embrace that sort of policy forevermore, especially when, with ease and with honor, we may change that policy simply by providing that it shall be unlawful for the American flag to be flown on any cargo whose destination is a nation engaged in war. By the adoption of such policy or law we would say to belligerents, "While we are ready to sell you anything you want, from now on you are going to have to come and get it and take your own chances of getting it to where you want it."

It seems to me the most sincere advocate of national defense would at once, in the event of another outburst upon this earth such as occurred 20 years ago, become an advocate of a stronger, stricter neutrality than that which then prevailed.

The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and I have sponsored and have pending before the Foreign Relations Committee at this time what we consider to be a well-rounded program looking to the strengthening of our neutrality laws. For the purpose of identity, the three resolutions are known as Senate Joint Resolutions Nos. 99, 100, and 120. One of the three resolutions does precisely what I have just outlined and might be an advantageous policy for our Government to adopt.

A second resolution has to do with the strict regulation of the exportation of contraband from our country to nations engaged in war.

A third, which I consider the most important of all, is a joint resolution forbidding the issuance of any credit or the making of any loan by any American individual or corporation to any belligerent or the nationals of any belligerent in time of war. That, it seems to me, would constitute at once not only a program insuring more adequately against our being drawn into other peoples' wars but, at one and the same time, a more adequate national defense, because it would more strictly confine our needs for preparation for wars in the future.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator's joint resolution contemplate the prohibition of loans after war begins?

Mr. NYE. It does.

Mr. BORAH. And only that?

Mr. NYE. No; there is authority provided for restricting loans even before the war is begun.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator will recall that prior to the beginning of the great World War heavy loans had been made by firms and business associations of this country to foreign governments, or to their nationals, which went to foreign governments. Those parties were most active in urging the United States to enter the war. In other words, the obligations had been created, their interest had been created, and they were already interested in drawing the Nation into war before the United States entered into war. Does not the Senator think that kind of condition ought to be dealt with?

Mr. NYE. That condition would be dealt with by the particular joint resolution to which I have referred, because once a nation goes to war, whether with us or with anyone else, such loans and credits are at once estopped.

Mr. BORAH. But the difficulty is that loans have already been made prior to the time of belligerency. Loans have already been made before we enter war or before any other nation enters the war. They were made, in the instance of the World War, for the preparation of war upon the part of foreign nations. The first money we obtained after we began to sell Liberty Loan bonds was to pay off some of the obligations to those people who had made loans to foreign governments.

Mr. NYE. Exactly; but would the Senator say that at this time we should stop loans to any one particular country because it might some day in the future be going to war or might be using part of what we are loaning in preparation for war?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know just exactly how to reach the matter, but I am clear upon the proposition that if we prohibit loans and the prohibition takes place alone after the war starts, after belligerency exists, we have not met the real evil, and that is the preparation for war or loans for the purpose of preparing for war loans which create an interest upon the part of people in this country to draw us into war. That is the situation which, to my mind, is just as serious as any that can arise after war begins.

Mr. NYE. I quite agree with the Senator. The joint resolutions to which I have referred have contemplated a situation like that which existed in 1914, 1915, and 1916. Had those joint resolutions been in effect then they would have prevented loans which I agree with the Senator were largely responsible for our being finally drawn into the conflict as we were.

National defense, shipbuilding in the name of national defense, more men for the Army in the name of national defense, a ship subsidy in the name of national defense! We have seen appropriations for national defense mount from $340,000,000 in 1913 up to a round $1,000,000,000 now, and yet those who constantly are urging a more adequate national defense are no more satisfied with the adequacy of our defense of today than they were satisfied with the defense of 1914 and 1915, which was then available to us.

There is profit in the game of preparing for war, and those who profit from it have made national defense a racket—a racket that is international in its scope; a racket that finds munitions makers with understandings the world over; understandings which accomplish the division of territory so that they are not stepping upon each other's toes in a competitive way; understandings which actually afford a division of profits among these racketeers of the world, regardless of which one of them may sell a particular order of munitions.

This kind of racket—and there is nothing at all new about it; it is as old as war itself—leads to but one thing. There never has been a mad race in armaments that has not been followed by war. History does not record a single instance where these mad races have led to other than war.

During the years preceding the World War there was at work abroad a man who rather stumbled by accident upon a discovery which made him a very wealthy individual. He discovered upon one occasion that by selling one submarine to Greece today, tomorrow he could sell two submarines to Turkey, and the following day he could go back to Greece and sell two more submarines there, because Greece never would countenance Turkey moving ahead of her in the possession of submarines. Learning this, he extended his operations into all fields of munitions sales. He extended his field of operations to all Europe, and was arming all Europe with the same identical instruments of warfare.

That man was Sir Basil Zaharoff. His program, or a program in which he had so leading a part, made him, as I have said, the richest man in all Europe. It led to war. Strangely, after the war was over, every crowned head in Europe paid tribute to Sir Basil Zaharoff for his great service, pinned badges upon his breast, decorations for his marvelous service to the cause of one country and to the cause of another country; and for the sake of the Record let it be known that the President of the United States publicly paid tribute to Sir Basil Zaharoff. His work led—if it can be said that the work of any one man led to it—to the 4 years of conflagration in which we participated for 2 years.

We like to say that we are fortunate in not having in this country men like Sir Basil Zaharoff. I venture to say that we have some who come very close to rivaling Sir Basil Zaharoff in ability to sell to both sides engaged in conflict, or to both sides preparing for conflict against one another. But, be that as it may, Sir Basil Zaharoff—with whom, we say, we should be happy that we do not have to deal—is, or was until very recently, a stockholder in the business of manufacturing American munitions, taking his profit when his company or companies sold to the American Government those things called for in the way of national-defense machinery; taking his profit when his American company or companies sold the same kind of supplies to other countries, including those most apt to be our foes in the event of another war.

International is this racket in almost every particular; and it is only fair to anticipate that the men who find large profit in these mad programs of preparing for war are going to be the first and foremost in insisting constantly in every land that there is an inadequacy of national defense.

When these rackets get into our blood, when these national-defense calls take hold of us, civilization seems to open up its purse and shut its eyes to all costs and all consequences, with a result which is reflected today in what I like to picture as being our Uncle Samuel stretched out across a barrel, his pockets turned inside out, and shipbuilders and other munitions makers looting him to the last penny, always in the name of national defense.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House, having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 3896) to provide for the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates, for controlled expansion of the currency, and to extend the time for filing applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, and for other purposes, returned by the President of the United States, with his objections, to the House of Representatives, in which it originated; it was Resolved, That the said bill pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES VETO MESSAGE

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, do I understand that I have the floor if a quorum is called?

Mr. BYRNES. I understood that the Senator from North Dakota was yielding to me solely for the purpose of making the point of no quorum.

Mr. NYE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Robinson
Austin	Costigan	Logan	Russell
Bachman	Couzens	Loneragan	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Long	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Dickinson	McAdoo	Sheppard
Barbour	Dieterich	McCarran	Shipstead
Barkley	Donahey	McGill	Smith
Bilbo	Duffy	McKellar	Steiwer
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Frazier	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Borah	George	Metcalf	Townsend
Brown	Gerry	Minton	Trammell
Bulkeley	Gibson	Moore	Truman
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Tydings
Burke	Gore	Murray	Vandenberg
Byrd	Guffey	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Walsh
Caraway	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Carey	Hatch	Overton	White
Chavez	Hayden	Pittman
Clark	Johnson	Pope
Connally	Keyes	Radcliffe

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The Chair lays before the Senate the veto message of the President of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is the veto message a privileged matter?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A second parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Can the Senator from North Dakota be taken from the floor without his consent for the consideration of the veto message?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He cannot be.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that the veto message be laid before the Senate at 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, pending action on the request of the Senator from Oklahoma, I should like, with the indulgence of the Senator who has the floor, to make a brief statement.

Mr. NYE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. A number of Senators who desire to vote on this subject, many who expect to support the veto, many who expect to pursue a contrary course, have inquired whether a time can be fixed for a vote on the issue. I think it would serve the convenience of Senators if an arrangement could be effected definitely fixing a time for a vote. I would not object to proceeding at the time suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma to consider the veto message, provided a definite time could be fixed for the vote. Otherwise, I should think that the Senate must retain the right to proceed whenever it chooses.

I invite an expression of opinion from the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] on the subject.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I had cherished the hope that we might proceed with the consideration of the veto message this afternoon, and dispose of it. The request of the Senator from Oklahoma is a reasonable one, and I should not object to it, but I concur in the view of the Senator from Arkansas that some definite time, some reasonable hour, should be fixed for taking a final vote. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether that could be arranged.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Speaking for no one excepting myself and for those with whom I have conferred, I think I should advise the Senate that the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo] will probably desire to occupy some time in discussing the veto message and the subject of the message, as will also the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Idaho. I think I shall take some little time myself, but no unusual length of time.

I think perhaps if we can agree to have the matter set for 12 o'clock tomorrow, and let the debate proceed for 2 or 3 hours, then, so far as I am concerned, I should be only too glad to try to fix a time for a vote. Speaking for no one but myself, I could not at this time agree to fix any time at which a vote should be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well, Mr. President. In view of the statement of the Senator from Oklahoma, I think I shall want to reserve the right to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the message.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Might not the matter be adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned by agreeing to take the message up tomorrow at 12 o'clock and pursue the subject to its conclusion tomorrow?

Mr. ROBINSON. The only difficulty about that is that I have been advised by two or three Senators that they wish to be absent part of tomorrow. I do not see any reason why we should not proceed at once, if the Senator from North Dakota is willing to yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the veto message being laid before the Senate at this time, except that I understand there are those who are urgently hoping that there be no decision on the issue today.

Mr. ROBINSON. There are others who hope there will be a decision on the issue today. That is the difficulty under which some of us labor. Always, when questions of this kind are presented, we have the difficulty of trying to reach an agreement about them. If the Senator will yield for that purpose, I will make a motion.

Mr. NYE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed now to consider the veto message.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which is a highly privileged matter, if the Senator from North Dakota will yield.

Mr. NYE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the message be dispensed with and that the message be printed in the RECORD without being read. I make this request because the Senate has already heard the message read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Constitution provides that the message shall be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, no purpose will be served by forcing this matter upon the Senate this afternoon. It is unreasonable, in my judgment, to expect the Senate to proceed to the consideration of matters contained in a veto message which took upwards of an hour to read, without any opportunity to study the message. There are substantial matters in the veto message which should be considered by the Senate, especially in the light of the vote heretofore had upon the bill disapproved by the President, and I think I make no unusual request when I ask that the consideration of the message go over until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, because no good purpose can be served by forcing the matter at this time, and if a motion to proceed to the consideration of the message is urged by the Senator from Arkansas, I hope it will be voted down. I object to the request made by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not wish to get into any controversy about the matter.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Senator will get into one if he insists on proceeding now.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator need not proceed in that spirit. If he does, of course, we can have a controversy. But I am not proceeding in a controversial spirit, and I hope the Senator so understands. Quite naturally, a number of Senators come to me and submit suggestions and requests, and always it is my purpose to try to serve their convenience.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes tomorrow it proceed to the consideration of the veto message, and that at the hour of 3 o'clock on Friday the Senate proceed to vote on the subject.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that if he will fix a definite hour tomorrow I think the Senator from Oklahoma and others will probably agree. I suggest 5 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall speak on the subject at all, but I do not desire to have a definite time fixed. I am perfectly willing that debate be limited and that the time each Senator may consume shall be limited.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 12 o'clock noon tomorrow the Senate proceed to the consideration of the veto message, and that after that hour no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the veto message.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, speaking for only one Senator who has spoken to me, this particular Senator wants 45 minutes. I think that if a limitation of 45 minutes were agreed to, perhaps only one or two would occupy that much time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion to both the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Oklahoma. We can agree not to vote on the message today. There will be only a couple of hours remaining during the session today, and the Senator from North Dakota is making a speech which he desires to complete. Let us simply agree that we will not vote today but take the measure up and go along with it, instead of limiting time for one and not limiting it for others.

I am not so sure that we will not decide, before we get through today, that we are willing to vote this evening. I disagree with my colleague in this matter. I do not see any use in prolonging it. However, there are others who might not look at it that way, who want to study the message. Why not let us take the matter up and go along with it from now on?

Mr. ROBINSON. That was my suggestion originally.

Mr. LONG. I think the Senator is right for once.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I was warned by the Senator from Oklahoma that I would get into trouble if I did that.

Mr. LONG. We will not vote today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It seems to the Chair that the parliamentary situation is different from the way Senators understand it. Under the Constitution the Senate shall proceed to reconsider the bill. The Senator from Mississippi has asked unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the message. This is all by unanimous consent. The Chair is compelled to lay the message before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; let the message be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Is there objection to my unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ROBINSON. There was objection.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Oklahoma object?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Unless we can have consideration of the whole matter postponed to 12 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw the request, in order that the message may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Mr. Speaker, Members of the House of Representatives, 2 days ago a number of gentlemen from the House of Representatives called upon me and, with complete propriety, presented their reasons for asking me to approve the House of Representatives bill providing for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates. In the same spirit of courtesy I am returning this bill today to the House of Representatives. As I told the gentlemen who waited upon me, I have never doubted the good faith lying behind the reasons which have caused them and the majority of the Congress to advocate this bill. In the same spirit I come before you, dispassionately and in good faith, to give you, as simply as I can, the reasons which compel me to give it my disapproval.

And I am glad that the Senate, by coming here in joint session, gives me opportunity to give my reasons in person to the other House of the Congress.

As to the right and the propriety of the President in addressing the Congress in person, I am very certain that I have never in the past disagreed, and will never in the future disagree, with the Senate or the House of Representatives as to the constitutionality of the procedure. With your permission, I should like to continue from time to time to act as my own messenger.

Eighteen years ago the United States engaged in the World War. A nation of 120,000,000 people was united in the purpose of victory. The millions engaged in agriculture toiled to provide the raw materials and foodstuffs for our armies and for the nations with whom we were associated. Many other millions employed in industry labored to create the materials for the active conduct of the war on land and sea.

Out of this vast army, consisting of the whole working population of the Nation, four and three-quarter million men volunteered or were drafted into the armed forces of the United States. One-half of them remained within our American continental limits. The other half served overseas, and of these, 1,400,000 saw service in actual combat.

The people and the Government of the United States have shown a proper and generous regard for the sacrifices and patriotism of all of the four and three-quarter million men who were in uniform no matter where they served.

At the outbreak of the war the President and the Congress sought and established an entirely new policy, in order to guide the granting of financial aid to soldiers and sailors. Remembering the unfortunate results that came from the lack of a veterans' policy after the Civil War, they determined that a prudent and sound principle of insurance should supplant the uncertainties and unfairness of direct bounties. At the same time their policy encompassed the most complete care for those who had suffered disabilities in service. With respect to the grants made within the lines of this general policy, the President and the Congress have fully recognized that those who served in uniform deserved certain benefits to which other citizens of the Republic were not entitled, and in which they could not participate.

In line with these sound and fair principles, many benefits have been provided for veterans.

During the war itself provision was made for Government allowances for the families and other dependents of enlisted men in service. Disability and death compensation was provided for casualties in line of duty.

The original provisions for these benefits have been subsequently changed and liberalized many times by the Congress. Later generous presumptions for veterans who became ill after the termination of the war were written into the statute to help veterans in their claims for disability. As a result of this liberal legislation for disability and for death compensation, 1,140,000 men and women have been benefited.

During the war the Government started a system of voluntary insurance at peace-time rates for men and women in the service.

Generous provision has been made for hospitalization, vocational training, and rehabilitation of veterans. You are familiar with this excellent care given to the sick and disabled.

In addition to these direct benefits, Congress has given recognition to the interest and welfare of veterans in employment matters through veteran preference in the United States civil service, in the selection of employees under the Public Works Administration, through the establishment of a veterans' employment unit in the Department of Labor, and through provisions favoring veterans in the selection of those employed in the Civilian Conservation Corps. Many States have likewise given special bonuses in cash and veterans' preferences in State and local public employment.

Furthermore, unemployed veterans as a group have benefited more largely than any other group from the expenditure of the great Public Works appropriation of $3,300,000,000 made by the Congress in 1933, and under which we are still operating. In like manner the new $4,000,000,000 Work Relief Act seeks to give employment to practically every veteran who is receiving relief.

We may measure the benefits extended from the fact that there has been expended up to the end of the last fiscal year more than $7,800,000,000 for these items in behalf of the veterans of the World War, not including sums spent for home or work relief. With our current annual expenditures of some $450,000,000 and the liquidation of outstanding obligations under term insurance and the payment of the service certificates, it seems safe to predict that by the year 1945 we will have expended $13,500,000,000. This is a sum equal to more than three-fourths of the entire cost of our participation in the World War, and 10 years from now most of the veterans of that war will be barely past the half-century mark.

Payments have been and are being made only to veterans of the World War and their dependents, and not to civilian workers who helped to win that war.

In the light of our established principles and policies let us consider the case of adjusted compensation. Soon after the close of the war a claim was made by several veterans' organizations that they should be paid some adjusted compensation for their time in uniform. After a complete and fair presentation of the whole subject, followed by full debate in the Congress of the United States, a settlement was reached in 1924.

This settlement provided for adjustment in compensation during service by an additional allowance per day for actual service rendered. Because cash payment was not to be made immediately, this basic allowance was increased by 25 percent, and to this was added compound interest for 20 years, the whole to be paid in 1945. The result of this computation was that an amount two and one-half times the original grant would be paid at maturity.

Taking the average case as an example, the Government acknowledged a claim of $400 to be due. This $400, under the provisions of the settlement, with the addition of the 25 percent for deferred payment and the compound interest from that time until 1945, would amount to the sum of $1,000 in 1945. The veteran was thereupon given a certificate containing an agreement by the Government to pay him this $1,000 in 1945, or to pay it to his family if he died at any time before 1945. In effect, it was a paid-up endowment policy in the average case for $1,000 payable in 1945, or sooner in the event of death. Under the provisions of this settlement, the total obligation of $1,400,000,000 in 1924 produced a maturity or face value of $3,500,000,000 in 1945.

Since 1924 the only major change in the original settlement was the act of 1931 under which veterans were authorized to borrow up to 50 percent of the face value of their certificates as of 1945. Three million veterans have already borrowed under this provision an amount which, with interest charges, totals $1,700,000,000.

The bill before me provides for the immediate payment of the 1945 value of the certificates. It means paying $1,600,000,000 more than the present value of the certificates. It requires an expenditure of more than $2,200,000,000 in cash for this purpose. It directs payment to the veterans of a much larger sum than was contemplated in the 1924 settlement. It is nothing less than a complete abandonment of that settlement. It is a new straight gratuity or bounty to the amount of $1,600,000,000. It destroys the insurance protection for the dependents of the veterans provided in the original plan. For the remaining period of 10 years they will have lost this insurance.

This proposal, I submit, violates the entire principle of veterans' benefits so carefully formulated at the time of the war and also the entire principle of the adjusted-certificate settlement of 1924.

What are the reasons presented in this bill for this fundamental change in policy? They are set forth with care in a number of "whereas" clauses at the beginning of the bill.

The first of these states as reasons for the cash payment of these certificates at this time: That it will increase the purchasing power of millions of the consuming public; that it will provide relief for many who are in need because of economic conditions; and that it will lighten the relief burden of cities, counties, and States. The second states that payment will not create any additional debt. The third states that payment now will be an effective method of spending money to hasten recovery.

These are the enacted reasons for the passage of this bill. Let me briefly analyze them.

First, the spending of this sum, it cannot be denied, would result in some expansion of retail trade. But it must be noted that retail trade has already expanded to a condition that compares favorably with conditions before the depression. However, to resort to the kind of financial practice provided in this bill would not improve the conditions necessary to expand those industries in which we have the greatest unemployment. The Treasury notes issued under the terms of this bill we know from past experience would return quickly to the banks. We know, too, that the banks have at this moment more than ample credit with which to expand the activities of business and industry generally. The ultimate effect of this bill will not in the long run justify the expectations that have been raised by those who argue for it.

The next reason in the first "whereas" clause is that present payment will provide relief for many who are in need because of economic conditions. The Congress has just passed an act to provide work relief for such citizens. Some veterans are on the relief rolls, though relatively not nearly as many as is the case with nonveterans. Assume, however, that such a veteran served in the United States or overseas during the war; that he came through in fine physical shape, as most of them did; that he received an honorable discharge; that he is today 38 years old and in full possession of his faculties and health; that like several million other Americans he is receiving from his Government relief and assistance in one of many forms—I hold that that able-bodied citizen should be accorded no treatment different from that accorded to other citizens who did not wear a uniform during the World War.

The third reason given in the first "whereas" clause is that payment today would lighten the relief burden of municipalities. Why, I ask, should the Congress lift that burden in respect only to those who wore the uniform? Is it not better to treat every able-bodied American alike and to carry out the great relief program adopted by this Congress in a spirit of equality to all? This applies to every other unit of Government throughout the Nation.

The second "whereas" clause, which states that the payment of certificates will not create an additional debt, raises a fundamental question of sound finance. To meet a claim of one group by this deceptively easy method of payment will raise similar demands for the payment of claims of other groups. It is easy to see the ultimate result of meeting recurring demands by the issuance of Treasury notes. It invites an ultimate reckoning in uncontrollable prices and in the destruction of the value of savings, that will strike most cruelly those like the veterans who seem to be temporarily benefited. The first person injured by skyrocketing prices is the man on a fixed income. Every disabled veteran on pension or allowance is on fixed income. This bill favors the able-bodied veteran at the expense of the disabled veteran.

Wealth is not created, nor is it more equitably distributed by this method. A government, like an individual, must ultimately meet legitimate obligations out of the production of wealth by the labor of human beings applied to the resources of nature. Every country that has attempted the form of meeting its obligations which is here provided has suffered disastrous consequences.

In the majority of cases printing-press money has not been retired through taxation. Because of increased costs, caused by inflated prices, new issue has followed new issue, ending in the ultimate wiping out of the currency of the afflicted country. In a few cases, like our own in the period of the Civil War, the printing of Treasury notes to cover an emergency has fortunately not resulted in actual disaster and collapse, but has nevertheless caused this Nation untold troubles, economic and political, for a whole generation.

The statement in this same second "whereas" clause that payment will discharge and retire an acknowledged contract obligation of the Government is, I regret to say, not in accordance with the fact. It wholly omits and disregards the fact that this contract obligation is due in 1945 and not today.

If I, as an individual, owe you, an individual Member of the Congress $1,000 payable in 1945, it is not a correct statement for you to tell me that I owe you $1,000 today. As a matter of practical fact, if I put $750 into a Government savings bond today and make that bond out in your name, you will get $1,000 on the due date, 10 years from now. My debt to you today, therefore, cannot under the remotest possibility be considered more than $750.

The final "whereas" clause, stating that spending the money is the most effective means of hastening recovery, is so ill-considered that little comment is necessary. Every authorization of expenditure by the Seventy-third Congress in its session of 1933 and 1934 and every appropriation by the Seventy-fourth Congress to date for recovery purposes has been predicated, not on the mere spending of money to hasten recovery, but on the sounder principle of preventing the loss of homes and farms, of saving industry from bankruptcy, of safeguarding bank deposits, and, most important of all, of giving relief and jobs through public work to individuals and families faced with starvation. These greater and broader concerns of the American people have a prior claim for our consideration at this time. They have the right-of-way.

There is before this Congress legislation providing old-age benefits and a greater measure of security for all workers against the hazards of unemployment. We are also meeting the pressing necessities of those who are now unemployed and in need of immediate relief. In all of this every veteran shares.

To argue for this bill as a relief measure is to indulge in the fallacy that the welfare of the country can be generally served by extending relief on some basis other than actual deserving need.

The core of the question is that a man who is sick or under some other special disability because he was a soldier should certainly be assisted as such. But if a man is suffering from economic need because of the depression, even though he is a veteran, he must be placed on a par with all of the other victims of the depression. The veteran who is disabled owes his condition to the war. The healthy veteran who is unemployed owes his troubles to the depression. Each presents a separate and different problem. Any attempt to mingle the two problems is to confuse our efforts.

Even the veteran who is on relief will benefit only temporarily by this measure, because the payment of this sum to him will remove him from the group entitled to relief if the ordinary rules of relief agencies are followed. For him this measure would give, but it would also take away. In the end he would be the loser.

The veteran who suffers from this depression can best be aided by the rehabilitation of the country as a whole. His country with honor and gratitude returned him at the end of the war to the citizenry from which he came. He became once more a member of the great civilian population. His interests became identified with its fortunes and also with its misfortunes.

Some years ago it was well said by the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho that—

The soldier of this country cannot be aided except as the country itself is rehabilitated. The soldier cannot come back except as the people as a whole come back. The soldier cannot prosper unless the people prosper. He has now gone back and intermingled and become a part of the citizenship of the country; he is wrapped up in its welfare or in its adversity. The handing out to him of a few dollars will not benefit him under such circumstances, whereas it will greatly injure the prospects of the country and the restoration of normal conditions.

It is generally conceded that the settlement by adjusted-compensation certificates made in 1924 was fair and it was accepted as fair by the overwhelming majority of World War veterans themselves.

I have much sympathy for the argument that some who remained at home in civilian employ enjoyed special privilege and unwarranted remuneration. That is true—bitterly true—but a recurrence of that type of war profiteering can and must be prevented in any future war.

I invite the Congress and the veterans with the great masses of the American population to join with me in progressive efforts to root a recurrence of such injustice out of American life. But we should not destroy privilege and create new privilege at the same time. Two wrongs do not make a right.

The herculean task of the United States Government today is to take care that its citizens have the necessities of life. We are seeking honestly and honorably to do this, irrespective of class or group. Rightly, we give preferential treatment to those men who were wounded, disabled, or who became ill as a result of war service. Rightly we give care to those who subsequently have become ill. The others—and they represent the great majority—are today in the prime of life, are today in full bodily vigor. They are American citizens who should be accorded equal privileges and equal rights to enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—no less and no more.

It is important to make one more point. In accordance with the mandate of the Congress our Budget has been set. The public has accepted it. On that basis this Congress has made and is making its appropriations. That Budget asked for appropriations in excess of receipts to the extent of $4,000,000,000. The whole of that deficit was to be applied for work relief for the unemployed. That was a single-minded, definite purpose. Every unemployed veteran on the relief rolls was included in that proposed deficit and he will be taken care of out of it.

I cannot in honesty assert to you that to increase that deficit this year by $2,200,000,000 will in itself bankrupt the United States. Today the credit of the United States is safe. But it cannot ultimately be safe if we engage in a policy of yielding to each and all of the groups that are able to enforce upon the Congress claims for special consideration. To do so is to abandon the principles of government by and for the American people and to put in its place government by and for political coercion by minorities. We can afford all that we need, but we cannot afford all that we want.

I do not need to be a prophet to assert that if these certificates, due in 1945, are paid in full today every candidate for election to the Senate or to the House of Representatives will in the near future be called upon in the name of patriotism to support general pension legislation for all veterans regardless of need or age.

Finally, I invite your attention to the fact that solely from the point of view of the good credit of the United States, the complete failure of the Congress to provide additional taxes for an additional expenditure of this magnitude would in itself and by itself alone warrant disapproval of this measure.

I well know the disappointment that the performance of my duty in this matter will occasion to many thousands of my fellow citizens. I well realize that some who favor this bill are moved by a true desire to benefit the veterans of the World War and to contribute to the welfare of the Nation. These citizens will, however, realize that I bear an obligation as President and as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy which extends to all groups, to all citizens, to the present and to the future. I cannot be true to the office I hold if I do not weigh the claims of all in the scales of equity. I cannot swerve from this moral obligation.

I am thinking of those who served their country in the Army and in the Navy during the period which convulsed the entire civilized world. I saw their service at first-hand at home and overseas. I am thinking of those millions of men and women who increased crops, who made munitions, who ran our railroads, who worked in the mines, who loaded our ships during the war period.

I am thinking of those who died in the cause of America here and abroad, in uniform and out; I am thinking of the widows and orphans of all of them; I am thinking of 5,000,000 of Americans who, with their families, are today in dire need, supported in whole or in part by Federal, State, and local governments who have decreed that they shall not starve. I am thinking not only of the past, not only of today, but of the years to come. In this future of ours it is of first importance that we yield not to the sympathy which we would extend to a single group or class by special legislation for that group or class, but that we should extend assistance to all groups and all classes who in an emergency need the helping hand of their Government.

I believe the welfare of the Nation, as well as the future welfare of the veterans, wholly justifies my disapproval of this measure.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I return, without my approval, House of Representatives bill no. 3896, providing for the immediate payment to veterans of the 1945 face value of their adjusted-service certificates.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 22, 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should prefer to proceed with this matter now and reach a conclusion, but in view of what has been stated I believe it is practicable to enter into an agreement. I therefore submit the following request:

That when the Senate meets tomorrow it resume consideration of the veto message and that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the subject matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that when the Senate meets tomorrow the discussion of the veto message be resumed and that after the meeting of the Senate tomorrow no Senator shall be permitted to speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the subject matter. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? I do not want to be an obstructionist in this situation, but is there any probability of reaching an agreement to vote on Friday? I can state to the Senator frankly what my difficulty is. Sometime ago—

Mr. ROBINSON. I am apprised of the difficulty of the Senator from New York and had that in mind when I made the suggestion that a definite time be fixed to vote on Friday, but I find that such an agreement cannot be entered into.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I was just wondering if the Senator from New York and myself, being on opposite sides of the question, might both absent ourselves; I just making a swap with him and we both leave?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want, Mr. President, to leave the Senate in any mystery as to what my difficulty is.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, under the arrangement of pairs, I will say to the Senator from Louisiana, that the Senator from Louisiana counts only a half vote, strange as it may seem to him; it will require a pair of one to two.

Mr. LONG. I did not remember as to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRISON. May I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow? It may be that we then would get through in time to accommodate the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Frankly, that would not help me, because I have accepted an invitation to address a very large gathering. My embarrassment is that I accepted the invitation sometime ago for tomorrow at 5 o'clock in New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I inquire, informally, would there be objection to meeting in the morning at 10 o'clock, with a limitation of 30 minutes on debate? I think that that would afford the Senator from New York an opportunity to keep his engagement.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, is it understood that we are going to have the usual recess this afternoon, or is there going to be an effort to accomplish the final passage of the pending naval appropriation bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. I assume that we will proceed until the usual hour of recess.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that when the Senate concludes its labors today it take a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning; that upon assembling tomorrow the Senate proceed with the consideration of the veto message to its final disposition, and that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the subject matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its work today it take a recess to meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning; that at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the veto message to its final disposition; and that thereafter no Senator shall speak oftener than once or more than 30 minutes. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous-consent agreement was reduced to writing and entered, as follows:

Ordered, That at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. today the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock a. m. tomorrow (Thursday, May 23); that at said hour the Senate resume the consideration of the veto message on H. R. 3896, the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, and continue same to its final disposition; and that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the subject matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I should like to suggest, in all seriousness, that if we were to proceed this afternoon with such amendments as individual Senators are prepared to offer to the naval appropriation bill the session would undoubtedly run over until after the usual hour of taking a recess.

Mr. President, I inquire what is the pending matter before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the veto message of the President of the United States is before the Senate. The provision of the Constitution is that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the veto message.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. Would not the unanimous-consent agreement just entered into supersede the constitutional provision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement, as the Chair understands it, was that the Senate should proceed to the consideration tomorrow of the veto message, but there was no inclusion of an agreement not to consider the veto message this afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in good faith, I think it was understood that it was not expected that the veto message should be considered this afternoon. I should like to have it known that in all my service here no sharp practice has ever been indulged. I ask unanimous consent that the veto message be temporarily laid aside and that until the hour of 5 o'clock the Senate proceed with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, at which hour it shall take a recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the veto message be temporarily laid aside and that until the hour of 5 o'clock—

Mr. ROBINSON. Not later than the hour of 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that until not later than the hour of 5 o'clock the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of the naval appropriations bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHEELER. I inquire if the Constitution of the United States may be set aside by a unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Montana that, of course, the Constitution of the United States may not be set aside by unanimous consent, but under the precedents in both the Senate and the House that provision of the Constitution which requires consideration of the veto message is met by action taken in having the message read and an agreement entered into for its consideration.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business. The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, when I was interrupted in my remarks upon the naval appropriation bill, I was about to suggest how easy it is for civilization, when it is stirred up by the thought that it is without adequate national defense to embark upon large military and naval expenditures. Yet I think no one will deny the part which war has played in this depression. I think it is practically universally agreed that the present difficulties, in an economic way, in this world, are traceable to the 4 years of the World War. We have had depression in one degree or another ever since that war. In more recent years we have been striving to conquer the depression by large appropriations in the name of national recovery, and in the effort to accomplish a restored economic balance, we have poured millions, yea, billions of dollars into channels which we hoped would accomplish reemployment and bring back something resembling the economic balance we had prior to the war.

Speaking of the strange things that happen when a nation fears that its national defense is not adequate, let me remark that in our national recovery program we conceived that the thing to do, among other things, was to appropriate billions of dollars for public works, which, it was presumed, would afford employment for men without employment. Congress provided for the public-works program; and the very first allocation of money from the public-works fund was in the sum of millions of dollars for the United States Navy with which to build more ships.

Let us have this clearly in mind. The public-works program was designed to accomplish recovery from the depression caused by the war. Then the very first dollars of public-works money expended were given to the Navy for use in building more ships in order to get ready for more war, so we could have more war, to be followed by another depression, as war is always followed by a depression; so we may have another national-recovery program, another public-works program, to get more money to build more ships to get ready for more war. Senators may smile, and yet I have not exaggerated what are the facts in every particular.

When we plunged into this gigantic naval building program, what did the shipbuilders think of it? What did the shipbuilders call it? What did those who profit from these mad armament races say about this program? I think one agent, representative of the Westinghouse Co., spoke the mind of the entire industry very definitely when he referred to the public-works money for naval building as "plunder"—"p-l-u-n-d-e-r!" In writing to another one he referred to it as such "plunder" and made reference in his letter to how the shipbuilders were here "with their tongues hanging out waiting for their share of the 'plunder.'" "Plunder" is what it was in many respects as regards the shipbuilding program.

There is good reason to believe that the shipbuilders knew before the Congress knew that there was going to be a public-works program which was going to afford funds for shipbuilding.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I have not the figures in mind, and desire to ask a question for information. What amount was taken out of the appropriation of $3,300,000,000, which Congress provided for the purpose of relieving unemployment, and used for military and naval purposes? Speaking for myself, if not for others, when that stupendous appropriation was made I did not understand that any considerable amount from that fund to relieve unemployment was to be diverted in order to build up a navy or contribute to the Military Establishment of the Government.

Does the Senator know, and, if so, will he advise me, as to the amount which was taken from the $3,300,000,000 and appropriated for military and naval purposes, and how much it is contemplated will be taken from the $4,000,000,000 fund, notwithstanding the enormous appropriations which we are called upon to make to be utilized for naval purposes and for maintenance and for expansion of the Army?

Mr. NYE. I should not want to undertake to be accurate without the figures being available, but it seems to me there was a total of something like $400,000,000 of the entire public-works allocation given to the Army and the Navy. As to the present public-works effort, I think there has been a pretty definite understanding accomplished in a legislative way that there is to be no shipbuilding provided by the new public-works appropriation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I can give the Senator from Utah certain accurate information in connection with his inquiry. As of December 31, 1934, or New Year's Day of this year, a total allocation of $277,409,459 had been made to the United States Navy out of the employment fund. That was for the Navy.

I do not have the accurate figures in respect to the Army, but I share the opinion of the Senator from North Dakota that the grand total then becomes about $400,000,000.

If the Senator from North Dakota will permit me while I am on my feet, it is interesting to note, and it should be noted for the purposes of the Record, that when we survey the extent to which the naval shipbuilding jobs were completed or rather were not completed on last New Year's, it becomes immediately evident that the use of these funds did not contribute primarily to meeting the unemployment problem, but contributed in paramount degree to the building of the Navy.

I invite attention to the fact that as of January 1, 1935, for example, the two aircraft carriers, contracts for which had been awarded in 1933, were only 24 percent completed; that the light cruisers ordered in 1933 and being constructed by the New York Shipbuilding Co. were only 14 percent completed. The figures run all the way from 14 percent to the highest efficiency, which was 76 percent in connection with two submarines; but I should say that the average completion was not more than 30 percent at the end of more than a year when the funds were originally dedicated by Congress to the relief of unemployment. Yet when diverted to naval construction—and I do not use the word "diverted" invidiously, because there was warrant of law for it—the funds ceased to function in any major fashion for the purpose for which they were originally dedicated by Congress and functioned in major fashion only for the purpose of building up the Navy outside of and beyond the regular naval appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield further?

Mr. NYE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that we may scarcely defend the action of Congress or of the executive department, when appropriations are sought for the relief of unemployment, based upon the alleged hunger and poverty of the people, in diverting any part of such appropriations to the Navy or to the Army. I think not only honesty but frankness compels us, when we build up the Army or the Navy, to avow the purposes for which we are making the appropriations before indicating the amount we intend to appropriate for the Army and for the Navy. To use funds for the Army and for the Navy which have been appropriated for unemployment may not be defended, whether that action be by the Congress or by the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Utah. He overlooks the fact, however, that there was tremendous pressure on the part of the shipbuilders to afford employment in their yards, to swell their own bank accounts, and that when they stressed the importance of a more adequate national defense—and if I speak with some sarcasm the Senator will forgive me—it was reasonable to expect that when we could accomplish national defense by satisfying the shipbuilders at the same time, that was the way to spend our public-works money.

There is no doubt that, with the public-works money available, the shipbuilders of the country put their heads together, took out their pencils, compared their accounts, and jobbed the United States Government, kiting the prices on the Navy. I am satisfied in my own mind that the Navy itself knew and realized that it was being jobbed.

Mr. A. R. Homer is a representative in Washington of a number of the shipbuilders. Less than 2 weeks after public-works began to take shape, on March 14, 1933, to be accurate, Mr. Homer wrote Mr. W. S. Newell, at Bath, Maine, the president of one of the large shipbuilding companies, as follows:

We are on our way and all of the nations had better watch their step because we have found ourself again.

He was referring in this letter to the public-works appropriation for shipbuilding.

From what I can gather we are going ahead to a full treaty strength Navy, and we are going to do it quick.

I think it would be very wise for you—

Said Mr. Homer in this letter to Mr. Newell—to come down to Washington in the near future and talk to the gang.

"Talk to the gang."

When Mr. Homer was before our committee under oath he was asked just whom he meant by "the gang." For a long time he hesitated, declined to answer, and answered finally only after he had had a chance to confer with his counsel; and when he did answer, he named as those to whom he referred as "the gang" admirals in the Navy Department here in Washington. Here he was, inviting the shipbuilders to come in and talk things over with "the gang"; he meant with the authorities in the Navy Department. Of course, the shipbuilders do not always refer to those who seem to cooperate with them as "the gang."

Mr. Bardo, the president of the New York Shipbuilding Co., after weeks—yes; months—here in Washington, getting his share of the plunder, or arranging for bids upon the ship contracts that were to be advertised, reported in June of 1933 what was to be expected in the way of awarding the contracts for shipbuilding by the Navy Department in a letter to the chairman of the board of directors of his corporation. I read but two paragraphs from his letter:

I know from my talks with some of the representatives of the Navy—

And it turned out that they were the same men to whom Mr. Homer referred as "the gang"—

I know from my talks with some of the representatives of the Navy, who are keenly interested in this work, that they are desirous of finding some substantial reasons for awarding this work to the largest possible extent to private yards upon whom they must rely for the necessary engineering to complete the ships.

There was also expressed to us the desire that the builders themselves should get together and agree, as far as we could, on what each would bid, and then bid on nothing else.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. In the polite vernacular of the Chicago underworld, that might be characterized as "taking the Government for a ride"; and I assume my friend from North Dakota will agree with me that that is just about what happened to our poor old Government. It was taken for a good ride by those gentlemen.

Mr. NYE. By those gangsters.

Mr. BONE. Well, I wanted to be restrained.

Mr. NYE. By those for whom we are now appropriating more money for building more ships, of course in the name of national defense. But the Senator from Washington has not forgotten, has he, this very letter by Mr. Bardo to the chairman of his board of directors, in which Mr. Bardo undertook to say just what ships would be awarded to the Newport News Co., just what ships would be awarded to the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Co., and just what ships would be awarded to the New York Shipbuilding Co., 10 days before the bids were opened? No, indeed; the Senator has not forgotten that, and none of us who sat and heard the testimony ever will forget it. Mr. Bardo did undertake to tell the chairman of his board of directors, 10 days before the bids were opened, just what ships each of these "big three" shipbuilders would get; and then, to make it clearer to his chairman, he undertook in the same letter to show what the break-down, the division between the three companies, would mean in dollars; and he said:

This new work would amount approximately to the following values:

Newport News—$30,000,000.

Bethlehem and New York Ship—$28,000,000 each, although the final estimates may slightly change these figures.

I defy any Senator, upon reaching his home tonight, to take a pie or a cake and cut it into three more equal parts than that pie or cake was cut into by the shipbuilders 10 days before the bids were opened; and when, 10 days later, the bids were opened, it was revealed that Mr. Bardo had not missed his guess by a single, solitary ship! To the last ship he knew which company was going to be awarded the contract.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, who was awarding the contracts?

Mr. NYE. The Navy Department.

Mr. LONG. Was that done under the P. W. A.?

Mr. NYE. That was done with funds allocated from the P. W. A. I am afraid the Senator from Louisiana was not here when I read the shipbuilder's reference to the men in the Navy who were responsible for awarding these contracts. Mr. Homer, the representative of some of these shipbuilders, wrote to the president of one of the companies on March 14, 1933, and said:

I think it would be very wise for you to come down to Washington in the near future and talk to the gang.

Mr. LONG. Why, sure!

Mr. NYE. And when he was asked who "the gang" was, he named the men in the Navy Department who had in their hands the granting of these contracts.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from North Dakota does not think those men could stay in the Navy and do this without some higher political influence allowing them to do it, or protecting them, does he?

Mr. NYE. The Senator from Louisiana will have to draw his own conclusions.

Mr. LONG. It would be mighty hard for anybody, unless he just put his head in a tow sack and refused to see anything, to think those men were doing that down there unless somebody higher up was protecting them. That sounds pretty natural to me. That sounds regular. Since I have looked into the Farley case, that sounds about like I should expect it to be.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. May I suggest to the Senator—and I think he will agree with me—that there is not anything novel in this idea. The suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana might have some weight if this had occurred only once, but this has occurred over a long period of years. The Government has been "trimmed" right along under this sort of a process.

Mr. LONG. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. I said this afternoon that poor old Uncle Sam was stretched across a barrel, and was being looted to the last penny in the name of national defense.

Mr. LONG. I hope the Senator from Washington understands that I did not intend to characterize this as anything new. It is just a little bit thicker than usual.

Mr. BONE. No; it is not a little bit thicker. The difference is not in kind, but merely in degree. There is merely a little better opportunity now to get a shovel into the United States Treasury, and take out everything that is loose.

Mr. LONG. That was about what they were doing—taking everything that was not nailed down.

Mr. NYE. The point of which I think most ought to be made is that this is the kind of men we are having to deal with, this is the kind of institutions we are having to deal with, when we are appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars for shipbuilding. I make that point because there are going to be offered here, as we proceed, amendments looking to the tightening-up of whatever possibilities the Government has of defending itself against those gangsters who are looting the Treasury in the name of national defense.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President—

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not hear all the Senator said upon that subject, but I understand he referred to a letter written by a man named Homer, in which he referred to certain officers of the Navy.

Mr. NYE. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. Were the names of the officers given in the letter?

Mr. NYE. They were, and they are now a matter of record.

Mr. BYRNES. Did the committee call the officers before it and give them an opportunity to say whether or not the statements made by this lobbyist or representative were true?

Mr. NYE. Yes; they were called and given that opportunity.

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to know what their response was.

Mr. NYE. And days and weeks in advance of their being called before the committee they were furnished with a transcript of all the hearings, and were asked to give heed to them, so that when they did appear before the committee they could give answer to any charges that had been made there. They came before the committee and said they had not read the record!

Mr. BYRNES. When it was read to them the Senator will certainly state whether they admitted or denied the statements made about them. Will the Senator be good enough to state whether they admitted or denied the statements?

Mr. NYE. Their whole answer was that they had not read the charges.

Mr. BYRNES. And the committee did not read the charges and ask the officers whether or not they were true? Did the committee allow the officers to come before the committee and say nothing other than that they had not read the charges?

Mr. NYE. I think I recall the committee having stated to the witnesses what had been charged, and asking what they had to say about it, and their answer was that they had not read the transcript.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator how long they had the transcript to read?

Mr. NYE. For a matter of weeks.

Mr. LONG. This matter of not having read the charges and not caring to answer the charges seems to be getting pretty well standardized here by this time. That was the same thing we got in the Farley case. It seems as if we are getting down to a regular standard in this country.

Mr. NYE. All these people who refer to themselves as coming here to Washington, when bids are being invited, as plunderers with their tongues out, as being in conference with "the gang", naturally resent any charge that they are taking an attitude and showing a spirit that is un-American. They would not for a minute plead guilty to a charge that they were unpatriotic. Indeed, there are those in the industry who are constantly striving to make a showing that their urge for a larger national defense, their urge for these governmental programs of more military strength, is a patriotic urge on their part, and that their institutions are patriotic alone by reason of being in a position to furnish what the Government needs in the name of national defense. The Senate ought never to forget, when it considers in the future appropriations for military supplies, that it is not always dealing with patriots; that in a very general way it can be said that the Government in those cases is dealing with men whose patriotism is measured by the dollars their patriotism will bring to them.

During the war, while the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tamm] and others were offering and giving their very all upon fields of battle, this Government of ours, through the War Department, went to the same New York Shipbuilding Co., which now pretends to be the great patriotic institution it would like to have us believe it is, and said, "We must have additional shipbuilding capacity. Outside of your door here are acres of vacant ground. We will buy or lease that ground from you. We, the Government, will furnish the money with which to build the additional capacity, but we want you to build it for us. We will reward you well for doing it. After that capacity is completed, we will pay you well for operating the additional capacity for the Government." The New York Shipbuilding Co. quibbled for weeks, in that urgent hour, about what their margin of profit would be for doing what the Government was asking them to do.

I do not want to measure the patriotism of men. I do not desire to undertake to declare the grade of patriotism that may be mine or that may be someone's else. But for weeks there sat before our committee the members of the Du Pont Corporation, burning under the accusation, smarting under the lash that was being administered to the effect that the profits they had made out of 4 years of war were unreasonable.

After paying larger salaries to their executives, after dividing about $15,000,000 among themselves in the form of bonuses during the war, there was still enough profit left to the Du Ponts from 4 years of war to represent a return of over 400 percent upon their invested capital. They do not like to have that 400-percent profit called "unreasonable"; they insist it was ability and efficiency which enabled them to make that profit.

One of them, Felix du Pont, in effect declared that if it had not been for the service of the Du Ponts which earned that money, if it had not been for their service to the cause of the Allies before and after the United States went into the World War, the United States today would be a German colony. And the sad thing about it, I want to say to the Senator from Maryland, was that as we sat there and looked at Mr. Du Pont we knew that in his heart and in his mind he meant what he was saying, and we sensed that he felt that somehow we could have saved ourselves from Germany without the men in the trenches, but that if we had not had the services of the Du Ponts, we should today be a German colony.

The Du Ponts, who saved us from becoming a German colony, are the same corporation to which the Government went during the war while men were giving their lives upon fields of battle. The Government went to the Du Ponts and said, "We are without capacity adequate to produce the powder we need, and we want an additional plant built. We will furnish to you, who know about powder-factory construction, the money with which to build it for us. We will reward you for doing that, and then we will pay you for operating the plant for us after it is completed." That was the "Old Hickory" powder plant.

For over 3 months, while we were at war—I remind the Senate—for over 3 months, the Du Ponts refused to do what their Government asked them to do. Why? One needs but to go to the records of the board of directors of the Du Pont Corporation to find the reason. We need but to go to the records of the War Department, the memoranda written by the Secretary of War, to find the reason.

After we had developed this case before our committee, we turned to Colonel Harris, of the War Department, whose help to the committee has been splendid all the way through, yet a man who entertains no such ideas as some of us entertain concerning nationalizing the munitions industry, certainly not a man who holds any grudge against the munitions makers. We turned to him, and we said:

Colonel, was there a time during all the war more critical than these particular times?

He replied:

It would be difficult to determine what was the most critical hour during the war, but surely there was none more critical than this.

Then to what one thing are we to attribute this refusal or delay on the part of the Du Ponts in responding to the request of their Government in time of war?

Colonel Harris without any hesitancy, in the presence of the Du Ponts, who never answered and who never denied what he said, replied:

Senator, it was a difference of opinion between the Du Ponts and the Government as to what the Du Pont margin of profit should be for constructing that plant and what the Du Pont margin of profit should be for operating the plant after it was constructed.

These, I remind the Senate again, are the people who saved us from becoming a German colony. It was they and they alone.

Are we to let them go on playing these games year in and year out, first building up a fear in the country that our defense is not adequate, then driving the appropriation bills through?

I have been in the Senate for 9 years, and I do not know of a single year that has not witnessed an annual scare about war with Japan. Those scares invariably arise in the fall, just before the appropriation bills are taking shape. The scares are dissipated immediately after the appropriation bills are passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I recall that when I was a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, from which I later resigned because of the jingoistic attitude of some members of the committee, though I do not want to appear to be critical, we were considering a certain appropriation bill. There was a determined effort to force through the 1916 naval measure, which called for the construction of battleships and battle cruisers which would have cost, when completed, together with the necessary auxiliary craft, more than $1,500,000,000.

For the purpose of inducing or frightening the committee into reporting the bill favorably, an admiral, an officer high up in the Navy, came before the committee and stated that the Navy Department had irrefragable proof that war with Japan was imminent, and that it was imperative, if that war was to be averted and our country was to be put into a position of defense, that we immediately pass the pending bill, which carried the enormous appropriation to which I have referred.

I am glad to say that Admiral Sims and Admiral Fullam—though the committee was considering the matter in executive session—failed to approve the position taken by the naval authorities to whom I have adverted.

Be it said to the credit of the administration of President Harding that they took the necessary steps to call an international conference, which has been known as the "disarmament conference", and, while it failed to accomplish all we had hoped it would accomplish, certainly it prevented the execution of the program which was then supported by the Navy and saved to the United States hundreds of millions of dollars.

I wish to pay tribute now to President Harding and to Secretary Hughes. While they have been condemned by many of the navalists and militarists for calling that conference, we can attribute to them whatever benefits—and there were some benefits—resulted from the disarmament conference held here in 1921 and 1922.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator. I think I am just as sincere in my belief in a national defense as is anyone else. I certainly do not want my country unprepared, so that in any emergency we should find ourselves unable to repulse a foe who might be so foolish as to make an attack upon us; but, Senators, those who are preaching national defense from the standpoint of the shipbuilders are preaching something which to them means a profitable racket. The wilder they can make the competition which makes one country feel that its defense is inadequate, and makes another country feel that its defense also is inadequate, or that one country is getting ready to make trouble for another, the greater the market they are creating for themselves; for without the hates and the fears and the suspicions thus engendered they would not have the lucrative market which is theirs.

To promote the ends of their racket, in the name of national defense they run all over the earth selling their wares here, there, and anywhere they can, stirring up hates and fears and suspicions, bribing where they have to, paying commissions to men who stand close to the public officials of one government and another, who must buy the national-defense machinery for their nation.

I do not know just what constitutes bribery or just where the line can be drawn. I have said repeatedly that I do not believe Members of Congress are submitting to any offers by shipbuilders or other munitions makers. We may as well face certain facts when we encounter them, and I am certainly ready to believe that a fact which I now wish to present is in nowise reflective of Congress as a whole, but it does indicate rather clearly some things which are going on.

One witness before our committee—I have forgotten who it was—made reference to the pleasure that was his, and that of his company, in granting requests or complying with recommendations which were made by members of committees of Congress dealing with military affairs. He said a request from a member of a committee in behalf of some constituent would get far quicker action than would be the case if a request came from a Member of Congress who was not a member of the Military or the Naval Affairs Committee, which may or may not mean anything at all. I think it does not mean much.

However, here is a letter written on the heels of the effort to accomplish this huge appropriation for shipbuilding—a letter written by a Member of Congress to the president of one of the shipbuilding yards. Similar letters were written by the same Member of Congress to the presidents of other yards. Of course, this Member of Congress had been a very ardent friend and a very ardent advocate of a large national defense and a greater shipbuilding program; but on October 11, 1933, this particular Member of the House of Representatives, who is no longer there, wrote to the president of one of the shipbuilding yards as follows:

Mr. WILLIAM S. NEWELL,

President Bath Iron Works, Inc., Bath, Maine.

DEAR Mr. NEWELL: As you perhaps know, a Congressman must derive some of his income from other sources than being a Member of the House, and in this connection I would like to bring to your attention the fact that my secretary and myself have a company in Philadelphia trading under the name of Edmonds & Heldler.

Incidentally, they were trading in those things which shipbuilders could buy. I do not know that there is any advantage in offering for the Record the name of that particular former Member of Congress, and I desire to repeat my conviction that this letter is not reflective of the Congress or of the Members of Congress, but does go to show that a reward is not always beyond reach, when a man is thus inclined, for favoring the mad competitive armament races which have us today spending what may constitute so great a burden that we shall not be able to bear up under it long enough to wait for the next war.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GUFFEY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NYE. I am delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Did the testimony before the committee disclose whether the proposal implied in the letter just read was accepted?

Mr. NYE. As nearly as we could ascertain, it was not accepted.

These racketeers in national defense maintain their lobbies all over the earth, in the capitals of the earth, watching, guarding against anything being done which is going to hurt their business. They maintain lobbies which have as their purpose the prevention of anything which is going to hurt the business of munitions production.

A year ago last February a resolution was offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and myself calling for the investigation of the munitions industry. The record of the inquiry now reveals letters written by the munitions makers to their lobbyists in Washington telling them whom to see and telling them what to do to prevent the adoption of that resolution calling for an investigation.

Likewise, the record reveals letters which the munitions makers have written to their representatives in Washington, their lobbyists in Washington, telling them what to do to prevent the imposition of embargoes against the shipment of their wares to other lands engaged in war, as in the case of the South American countries fighting in the Chaco region, where a year ago we were striving to prevent continued hostilities by withholding from them the implements of war.

In spite of opposition on the part of the munitions makers the embargo was imposed; but for a long while the gunmakers, and other munitions makers, got around the embargo and shipped the stuff they wanted to ship down there and obtained their profit from it. Then, when they had to cease making shipments of arms for fear of having their actions brought to light, they made propositions to the munitions makers over in Europe asking them to take over the Chaco field for the time being. They stated that the situation here was rather embarrassing, and they could not continue to fill the orders which they had from the South American countries.

The record reveals those propositions.

Of course, these merchants, shipbuilders, gunmakers, and what not, are all against war. Every one of them is opposed to war. They do not want any more war. They do not understand why anyone should want war. Mr. Eugene Grace, of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation and the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, before our committee, very seriously said he believed there was not a business man in the United States who was not wishing we could get out from under the terrible burden of armament. If only we could get out from under that burden, what a great relief it would be. These armament programs seemed to him so wasteful. He said he felt that way about it. Whereupon we asked him why it was that, feeling as he did, he undertook, through his corporation, to pay one-third of the cost of sending Mr. William Shearer over to Geneva some years ago to wreak destruction upon any effort to accomplish disarmament there. When these men talk of their desire for peace, and yet do that which has the world heading straight into the jaws of another war, why should we call them other than racketeers? Men who cannot resist the temptation of dollars of profit from the sale of guns or other arms which may some day be turned upon us, and which may some day be turned upon the very men who work in the factories which produce the guns and munitions sold elsewhere.

It will be remembered that Mr. Grace said that war was to him a very distasteful thing. His salary during 2 years of war was limited to $12,000 a year. Incidentally, in addition to that salary he had a bonus over those 2 years amounting, as I remember the figure now, to about $2,800,000. The man really felt badly about the part of that which the Government took away from him in the way of war-time taxes, leaving him a paltry $1,000,000 with which to try to get through 2 years.

I have talked about the munitions makers creating war scares in order to create a market for themselves. Do they do it? Assuredly they do. All over the world their agents engage in the program of stirring up strife, because that creates a market for their wares; and they do not overlook the people of the United States in their undertaking to create war scares here at home, so that there can be a response in Washington to the apprehensions of and demands from the country that will occasion larger shipbuilding programs, larger national defense programs.

The RECORD more recently was made to include exhibits which revealed one shipbuilder writing to newspaper publishers asking them to publish stories about the danger of war with Japan, so that there would be newspaper clippings to send to their representatives in Congress to indicate a large public demand for a larger shipbuilding program here at home.

There is not one particle of doubt, Senators, that a very large part of our effort in the direction of national defense is an effort of waste, is an effort intended alone—not by us, assuredly, but by those who urge it and sponsor it in its inception—to bring dollars into the pockets of men who can get those dollars only by keeping the world afraid of itself.

I think I have told the Senate of the man Jonas who insisted that his business, that of selling munitions of war, was "a hell of a business" because they had to depend upon the troubles of other people in order to make a living. A hell of a business! In this hellish business is your Government and mine, you and I, as the cooperators with or partners of the munitions makers, helping them sell their wares all over the earth, including those nations which some of us look upon to be most apt to be our foes in the event of another war.

Only a few years ago our American munitions makers went to work in Peru and caused the people of Peru to become much agitated about the inadequacy of their national defense. Peru turned to her good friend and adviser, Uncle Sam, and said, "Will you help us plan a national defense?" Good old accommodating Uncle Sam sent down to Peru a commission of naval experts who labored with the authorities down there, and finally came forth with the recommendation that Peru ought to have a fleet of destroyers and submarines to insure herself an adequate national defense. The orders for those destroyers and submarines were placed. It did not cause any weeping in American shipbuilding yards which received some of the orders, but when the submarines were delivered to Peru, her action was quite natural when she went out into her harbor and neighboring waters on parade with this new muscle of which she had just come into possession.

It cannot be proven that there were any munitions makers or salesmen from America in Colombia at the time, but it is a well-recognized fact that Colombia with a start awakened one morning to discover that she did not have an adequate national defense against Peru's new submarines. Colombia appealed to her good friend and neighbor, Uncle Sam, for cooperation in planning a national defense against Peru's national-defense submarines, and we sent some more experts down to Colombia to help Colombia plan a national defense against Peru's national-defense submarines which we had helped to sell to Peru.

Some day, just as surely as not, things being in the future as they have in the past, we are going to be called upon to send some ships, some men, some sailors, some marines down into troubled waters for creating which no one is more responsible than are we ourselves by these programs of helping American munitions makers and merchants to sell their wares all over the earth—always, of course, in the name of national defense.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall a number of years ago that we had upon the statute books—and I think it is still there—a law under the terms of which we could send, and under which we did send to many countries, naval and military officers for the purpose of training in the art of war the troops and the naval establishments of those nations. I introduced a bill in the Senate a number of years ago to repeal that law, but I could not obtain any affirmative action.

I denounced our policy then and I denounce it now. I think it is improper for our Government to send naval and military men to other countries to aid them in developing plans for war, whether upon land or upon sea. We ought to be more interested in sending representatives to promote peace than in sending representatives for the purpose of teaching the peoples of other countries the art of war.

Mr. NYE. I thank the Senator.

Continuing to show the urge that seems to be upon us as a Government to run all over the earth with our manufacturers of national-defense machinery and help them sell in other lands, there is one instance which might be recalled which would be amusing except as it reveals the folly of what is taking place in the name of national defense.

The Driggs Ordnance Co. some few years ago produced a brand new type of gun for mounting upon naval vessels, an unusually efficient instrument, a very heavy instrument. Our Navy thought so much of it that they bought enough to equip a number of our vessels. Following that time the Driggs Ordnance Co. sent its men to Europe to sell the same identical gun over there. Incidentally, the record also reveals that when American gunmakers have difficulty in selling their guns to the Army and Navy here, the Army and Navy authorities advise them to sell their guns in Europe first and then they will have a better chance of selling them here.

But in this case the Driggs Ordnance Co. sent its representatives to Europe after selling the gun to us, but Europe would not do business with its salesmen. They wanted guns badly enough, and if the gun was what it was said to be they ought to have it, but they would not buy without seeing what they were asked to buy. They would not buy without having a demonstration or seeing a sample at least. The result was that the salesmen could not do any business in Europe, and so they said in effect, "We will go down to Turkey. They are not so particular down there. We will sell guns to them down there."

Down to Turkey they went. Night after night those salesmen staged party after party for the admirals and generals of the Turkish Navy and Army, and for the minister of war of Turkey; but they could not break down the sales resistance. The Turkish authorities wanted improved guns more than they wanted anything else, but they could not spend public money for something they had not seen; so there was not any business to do with those Turkish authorities.

Of course, it is a stretch of the imagination, but a warranted one, to observe that one day, after they had given up hope of getting together and doing any business, down on the docks in Constantinople, were these salesmen from America, the admirals and generals of the Turkish Navy and Army, the Minister of War of Turkey, sitting there on the dock, kicking their heels against the posts underneath, consoling one another with the thought that they could not do any business simply for want of a sample or demonstrator. While they were thus consoling themselves, into the harbor came none other than the good American cruiser Raleigh, one of the very few American ships equipped with the new type of Driggs gun. Senators can imagine the surprise of those salesmen when they came to find this happening right before their eyes. The ship dropped anchor, sent a boat ashore, picked up the salesmen and the Turkish emissaries, and took them back to the good ship Raleigh, where they had a chance to see what the gun was, and the salesmen wrote out an order for the same kind of guns for the Turkish Navy.

If anyone can show me why our Navy in that and other instances which might be recited should be nothing more than a salesman's sample case, I should like to have the effort made. It is a pretty expensive type of sample case, but we go on building them year after year, always in the name of the national defense and not as sample cases.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate as I have and to the extent that I have because I desired the Senate to know what kind of folk we are having to deal with when we appropriate money for a larger naval strength or for national defense.

I desired, if it were possible for me to do so, to convey to the Senate the conviction which has become that of many of us that national defense in too many instances is what I have called it, a racket. We are appropriating at the present time, in the pending naval appropriation bill, hundreds of millions of dollars for new construction, more ships, more loot—no, not loot; that is not fair; they themselves call it "plunder"—more plunder for the shipbuilders.

When are we going to quit paying homage to that kind of a racket? How long are we going to keep up this mad race which finds us today, as a year or 2 years ago, authorizing an additional billion dollars to build up our naval strength, which was followed by an insanity in Japan which had the people of Japan wondering how in the world they could ever keep up with Uncle Sam if he insisted upon taking such long steps as a billion-dollar step? How long are we going to keep up these mad races? We might as well resign ourselves to them. Japan is going to keep up with us if that is what we are striving for. They will manage to keep up with us, and do without some of the barest necessities in order to do it. That is their patriotism, as we have and entertain our own patriotism.

It seems to me that the call is upon us now, first of all, to stop increasing appropriations for larger naval construction. Let us confine it to a reasonable level. When the House reduces the item for construction in the naval appropriation bill, let us uphold the hand of the House. The House did, in this bill, reduce the appropriation for increase of the Navy. The Senate committee has written back $11,000,000 of that increase. I should like—and I could be very sincere in proposing an amendment to that effect—to cut away far more than $11,000,000 for naval construction; but it seems to me it is wholly reasonable to ask, as I have asked, that this particular amendment restoring the $11,000,000 for increase of the Navy should be rejected by the Senate.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BONE. In view of its very frequent demands upon the Congress of the United States to quit spending money, I am wondering if there is any evidence that the United States Chamber of Commerce has asked the Congress to reduce the amount of military and naval appropriations, or if the Senator can advise me if that has ever been done? I myself am not aware of it; but in view of the fact that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has so urgently and insistently, in and out of season, yelled about the appropriations that were being made by Congress, I wonder if the United States Chamber of Commerce, of which the gentlemen whom the Senator has been discussing are members, has ever so much as come down here and asked us to trim or prune any of the naval or military budgets.

Mr. NYE. I have yet to find a single instance where those who have advocated, for example, great reductions in the appropriations for the State Department, the Department of Justice, the Department of Labor, this, that, and the other department, have ever asked for reductions in the Army and Navy appropriations. It has not been done.

Mr. BONE. Does the United States Chamber of Commerce want us to cut out appropriations provided for the purpose of feeding the hungry? The naval appropriation is probably the largest single appropriation outside of relief for the unemployed and the poor and the hungry. What does the United States Chamber of Commerce want us to cut out? Does it want us to reduce expenditures by lessening the amount that is to be contributed to the support of the poor and the hungry, or are we to prune some other of the items in our Budget? We are appropriating now close to a billion dollars for war, which is more than it cost us to run the entire Government a few years ago.

Mr. NYE. That is true. The only answer I can make is that we seem to be doing what they have been wanting us to do all these years.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. Gladly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Special Committee on Munitions, of which the able Senator from North Dakota is chairman, has its way, and we succeed in writing a formula which requires hereafter that we shall pay for wars as we fight them, instead of charging the bill to our grandchildren, is it not calculated that the net result will be to create a psychology in America which will sharply lessen the urge not only for war but for needless preparation in that direction?

Mr. NYE. I think the Senator's conclusion is inescapable, that if that sort of a program were enacted into law, we should be saved from much of the unnecessary urge which seems to be upon us and which is causing such burdens as we are trying to bear.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?
Mr. NYE. Gladly.

Mr. BONE. My brethren who served on that committee with me—the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]—will recall that at one stage of the inquiry Mr. Baruch, who was a witness before the committee, was asked if he did not deem it a possibility, if not a probability, that in the event of a declaration of war any of the legislation which the munitions committee might propose would be immediately repealed. The moment we hear the voices of the bugles and the tramp of feet, and see the waving of flags, and hear the martial music, another effort will be made to come down to Congress and remove from the statute books any of the legislation which we are now going to propose.

I think all Members of the Senate, or certainly some Members of the Senate, have seen what amounted almost to an intellectual lynching of men in public life who dared propose a thing which was very mild compared to the suggestion which the munitions committee is now tendering to the Senate in the form of legislation. At my right sits the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. His father, one of the most brilliant and able men who ever graced this body with his presence, knew what it meant even to suggest taxation which did not begin to approach the taxation which is to be proposed in the formula embodied in the munitions committee bill.

It will be recalled, I think, that Mr. Baruch's statement in answer to that question was that the interrogator did not have as much confidence in Congress as he had. I am frank to say that I do not have that much confidence in Congress. I think the same gentlemen who have come down here and put over this kind of a crooked program of what they themselves characterize as "plunder" would be able to create in this country such a psychology of bitterness and hatred toward this sort of legislation that they might be successful in sweeping it from the statute books in the event of war.

The Senator from North Dakota knows that the passions engendered by war are of such a character that it might be the easiest thing in the world to come here and find a flabby, spineless Congress that would be willing again to turn over this country to the 100-percent flag wavers whose only god is greed and who do not care anything more about the boys of the country than the average man does about a yellow cur dog of the streets, so long as they can make money out of war.

So I think we are confronting a serious situation, and one that may ultimately necessitate the preparation and submission of a constitutional amendment which will automatically clamp on taxes of this character in the event of war, and not leave the subject to mere legislation. I know perhaps my brethren on the committee do not share my fears in that respect; but I will say to my colleague from North Dakota that I have a very wholesome fear that in the event of another declaration of war we shall have a resumption of this intellectual lynching, if you please, this brutal assault upon men who dare propose the very thing we are now attempting to discuss on the floor of the Senate; that is, the seizure of these profits by taxation.

Mr. NYE. I am not in entire disagreement with the Senator from Washington. I see the ground, I see the reasoning which causes him, and at times causes me, to wonder what a Congress might do in the heat of another hour of war; but I think perhaps I am entertaining a little more confidence in the insistence of the American people in the event of another war, in view of the advantage of the experience they will have had by reason of the last war.

I do not think it would be the easiest kind of a matter for Congress to set aside a war-time tax program that was written in peace time. But suppose they should do it; would that excuse us from now making the effort to place upon the statute books the tightest kind of a law we could pass? Yes; if a constitutional amendment is necessary I will go with the Senator in trying to accomplish that sort of an amendment to our Constitution.

Mr. BONE. I think perhaps the Senator may have misunderstood the implication of my remarks. I am very heartily in accord with the proposal to clamp on these taxes.

Mr. NYE. I am sure the Senator is.

Mr. BONE. I would even go beyond that; I would make war so tragic in an economic and financial way that the people of this country would fully understand what war meant when it came. I certainly would put profiteering in the category of treason.

I am not certain that I would stop with mere taxation as affecting war profiteers, but I would give them the same dose we give the men who try to betray their country in time of war. I think my friends in the Senate can understand what I mean. I could make it very plain if there were need.

I think a man who would pile up vast profits out of war, out of the sacrifices of the boys who die on the field of battle, has the blood of treason in his veins, and he deserves the same treatment we would give to a man who would turn over supplies to the enemy. He would be shot without any hesitation.

If the son of any Senator were in the Army and were charged with giving away a pair of shoes to the enemy, they would take that boy out, stand him up against a stone wall, and shoot him. But, unfortunately, a man can remain here at home, lay a pipe line into the United States Treasury and siphon out, not a pair of shoes, but siphon out millions of pairs of shoes in the form of profits, and the gentleman is respected, he gets war decorations, and if he were in England he would be dubbed "Sir", be made a Knight of the Bath, or whatever is done in England to distinguish that type of citizen. It is perhaps unfortunate for those gentlemen who have appeared before our munitions committee that we do not have titles of distinction and nobility which we might confer over here so that we could give some of them titles and what not.

Mr. NYE. I assume the Senator from Washington would like to design their decoration.

Mr. BONE. I would like to design the decoration. I think I could get up a heraldic device that would last through all eternity.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NYE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Washington has referred, in connection with his remarks about intellectual lynching, to the distinguished father of the present able senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and I think I should like to say one thing which I never expected to say, but which I shall feel better for saying.

On the basis of information already possessed by our committee—and I leave the matter there, because I am not permitted to go into it—I venture the prophecy that when history shall have completely written the story of 1917 to 1918, in the light of all the disclosures, the position taken by the late Senator from Wisconsin, the father of my friend who sits across from me, will be substantially vindicated by the facts.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NYE. In conclusion, Mr. President, while we have diverted for the moment and dealt with the profits of war, the immediate urge is upon us to do something about the profits of preparing for war.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes will he yield to me?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator think it is a tragic anomaly that on the very day when the President of the United States delivers a message to the Congress in which he professes that it is impossible, without serious injustice or serious hazard to the credit of the United States, to pay the debts of the last war to the men who fought the war, the Congress of the United States has under consideration a bill to squander approximately a billion dollars for the purpose of starting another naval building race, which will simply encourage competition abroad in naval building, which can only result in further expenditures of that sort on our part?

Mr. NYE. Precisely.

Mr. CLARK. In other words, it seems to me that instead of squandering additional millions on preparation for another war, which can end only in disaster whether we win the war or lose it—and, of course, we will win it if we have one—this stupendous appropriation, which can only result in economic disaster, no matter what the result of a war might be, might well be postponed until the debts to the men who fought the last war, which have been overdue since 1918, have been paid.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, my reason for urging that the committee amendment on page 49 be rejected is my desire to strike out the increase of $11,690,000 which the Senate committee has written into the bill over the House provision for increase in the Navy. With this committee amendment out of the way, I wish to give notice that there are numerous amendments which are to be offered looking primarily to a control over the awarding of contracts and the paying by the Navy of money under contracts under the naval building program. I hope the Senate will reject the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONERGAN in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Robinson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 49 of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2311) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 378) for the relief of Gerald Mackey.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 2045. An act to set aside certain lands for the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 7131. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of certain lighthouse reservations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1384) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 82. An act to authorize the disposal of surplus personal property, including buildings, of the Emergency Conservation Work;

S. 1222. An act to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Garrison, N. Dak.;

S. 1342. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Board of County Commissioners of Itasca County, Minn., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the road between the villages of Cohasset and Deer River, Minn.";

S. 1680. An act to include within the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, certain public lands within the exchange boundaries thereof;

S. 1987. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr.;

H. R. 3975. An act to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station on the coast of Georgia, at or near Sea Island Beach;

H. R. 4005. An act to amend section 21 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, with respect to the time of making the annual report of the Interstate Commerce Commission;

H. R. 4239. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to convey to the city of Grand Haven, Mich., certain portions of the Grand Haven Lighthouse Reservation, Mich.;

H. R. 5444. An act to authorize the Department of Commerce to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes;

H. R. 5707. An act to ratify and confirm the corporate existence of the city of Nome, Alaska, and to authorize it to undertake certain municipal public works, including the construction, reconstruction, enlargement, extension, and improvement of its sewers and drains, fire-fighting system, streets and alleys, sidewalks, curbs and gutters, and a municipal building, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000;

H. R. 6021. An act to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes;

H. R. 6654. An act to increase the White House Police Force, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 249. Joint resolution to provide for participation by the United States in the Eighth International Congress of Military Medicine and Pharmacy to be held at Brussels, Belgium, in June 1935.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. DIETERICH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of William P. McDermitt, of New Jersey, to be United States marshal, district of New Jersey.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the following nominations:

William Gerig, of Arkansas, for appointment as a member of the Mississippi River Commission, as provided for by law, vice Charles H. West, deceased; and Albert L. Culbertson, of Illinois, for appointment as a member of the Mississippi River Commission, as provided for by law, vice Lawrence A. Glenn, resigned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Milburn L. Wilson, of Montana, to be Assistant Secretary of Agriculture.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee, O Lord, do we ascribe glory and honor, dominion and power, both now and forever. We wait to be guided by Thy presence, which invites the responsive melody of all hearts. We rejoice that the lights in Thy house are still kindled and shining upon the hilltops of life. In Thee we have a refuge, and not in our goodness nor attainments. Let everything that is selfish, proud, and impure be taken away from us. Give us a growing conviction of fairness and love for human life, however humble. As ours is a sacred ministry, pave the way and make the path plain.

With enthusiasm enable us to give ourselves wholly to Thee and to the truth. Direct us to do the things that love, justice, and patriotism inspire. Through Christ our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 22. Concurrent resolution relative to the meeting of both Houses in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, May 22, 1935, to receive such communications as the President shall be pleased to make to them.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6723. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Valdez, Alaska, to construct a public-school building, and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $30,000; and to authorize said town to accept grants of money to aid it in financing any public works.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6954. An act to authorize the transfer of the Green Lake Fish Cultural Station in Hancock County, Maine, as an addition to Acadia National Park.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6021) entitled "An act to provide additional home-mortgage relief, to amend the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and the National Housing Act, and for other purposes."

RECESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Speaker.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object—

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. RICH. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, that motion is not in order—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to interfere with the program today, but I want to suggest that the motion is not in order. However, I shall not insist on the Speaker's ruling on that point at this time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Speaker.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes had it.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Speaker.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

JOINT MEETING OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE

At 12 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. Joseph J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the House, the Chair appoints the following committee to conduct the President into the Chamber: Messrs. TAYLOR of Colorado, DOUGHTON, and SNELL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the part of the Senate, the Chair appoints as a like committee Senators ROBINSON, FLETCHER, and McNARY.

At 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. Joseph J. Sinnott, announced the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

The members of the Cabinet of the President of the United States entered the Chamber and took the seats reserved for them in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

At 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Senators and Representatives of the Seventy-fourth Congress, I have the distinguished honor and privilege of presenting to you the President of the United States. [Applause.]

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES— ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES (H. DOC. NO. 197)

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives, 2 days ago a number of gentlemen from the House of Representatives called upon me and with complete propriety presented their reasons for asking me to approve the House of Representatives bill providing for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates. In the same spirit of courtesy I am returning this bill today to the House of Representatives. As I told the gentlemen who waited upon me, I have never doubted the good faith lying behind the reasons which have caused them and the majority of the Congress to advocate this bill. In the same spirit I come before you dispassionately and in good faith to give you, as simply as I can, the reasons which compel me to give it my disapproval.

And I am glad that the Senate by coming here in joint session gives me opportunity to give my reasons in person to the other House of the Congress.

As to the right and the propriety of the President in addressing the Congress in person, I am very certain that I have never in the past disagreed, and will never in the future disagree, with the Senate or the House of Representatives as to the constitutionality of the procedure. With your permission, I should like to continue from time to time to act as my own messenger.

Eighteen years ago the United States engaged in the World War. A nation of 120,000,000 people was united in the purpose of victory. The millions engaged in agriculture toiled to provide the raw materials and foodstuffs for our armies and for the nations with whom we were associated. Many other millions employed in industry labored to create the materials for the active conduct of the war on land and sea.

Out of this vast army, consisting of the whole working population of the Nation, four and three-quarter million men volunteered or were drafted into the armed forces of the United States. One-half of them remained within our American continental limits. The other half served overseas; and of these, 1,400,000 saw service in actual combat.

The people and the Government of the United States have shown a proper and generous regard for the sacrifices and patriotism of all of the four and three-quarter million men who were in uniform, no matter where they served.

At the outbreak of the war the President and the Congress sought and established an entirely new policy, however, in order to guide the granting of financial aid to soldiers and sailors. Remembering the unfortunate results that came from the lack of a veterans' policy after the Civil War, they determined that a prudent and sound principle of insurance should supplant the uncertainties and unfairness of direct bounties. At the same time their policy encompassed the most complete care for those who had suffered disabilities in service. With respect to the grants made within the lines of this general policy, the President and the Congress have fully recognized that those who served in uniform deserved certain benefits to which other citizens of the Republic were not entitled, and in which they could not participate.

In line with these sound and fair principles many benefits have been provided for veterans.

During the war itself provision was made for Government allowances for the families and other dependents of enlisted men in service. Disability and death compensation was provided for casualties in line of duty.

The original provisions for these benefits have been subsequently changed and liberalized many times by the Congress. Later generous presumptions for veterans who became ill after the termination of the war were written into the statute to help veterans in their claims for disability. As a result of this liberal legislation for disability and for death compensation, 1,140,000 men and women have benefited.

During the war the Government started a system of voluntary insurance at peace-time rates for men and women in the service.

Generous provision has been made for hospitalization, vocational training, and rehabilitation of veterans. You are familiar with this excellent care given to the sick and disabled.

In addition to these direct benefits, Congress has given recognition to the interest and welfare of veterans in employment matters, through veteran preference in the United States Civil Service, in the selection of employees under the Public Works Administration, through the establishment of a veterans' employment unit in the Department of Labor, and through provisions favoring veterans in the selection of those employed in the Civilian Conservation Corps. Many States have likewise given special bonuses in cash and veterans' preferences in State and local public employment.

Furthermore unemployed veterans as a group have benefited more largely than any other group from the expenditure of the great public works appropriation of $3,300,000,000 made by the Congress in 1933, and under which we are still operating. In like manner the new $4,000,000,000 Work Relief Act seeks to give employment to practically every veteran who is receiving relief.

We may measure the benefits extended from the fact that there has been expended up to the end of the last fiscal year more than $7,800,000,000 for these items in behalf of the veterans of the World War, not including sums spent for home or work relief. With our current annual expenditures of some $450,000,000 and the liquidation of outstanding obligations under term insurance and the payment of the service certificates, it seems safe to predict that by the year 1945 we will have expended $13,500,000,000. This is a sum equal to more than three-fourths of the entire cost of our participation in the World War, and 10 years from now most of the veterans of that war will be barely past the half-century mark.

Payments have been and are being made only to veterans of the World War and their dependents, and not to civilian workers who helped to win that war.

In the light of our established principles and policies let us consider the case of adjusted compensation. Soon after the close of the war a claim was made by several veterans' organizations that they should be paid some adjusted compensation for their time in uniform. After a complete and fair presentation of the whole subject, followed by full debate in the Congress of the United States, a settlement was reached in 1924.

This settlement provided for adjustment in compensation during service by an additional allowance per day for actual service rendered. Because cash payment was not to be made immediately, this basic allowance was increased by 25 percent and to this was added at compound interest for 20 years, the whole to be paid in 1945. The result of this computation was that an amount two and one-half times the original grant would be paid at maturity.

Taking the average case as an example, the Government acknowledged a claim of $400 to be due. This $400, under the provisions of the settlement, with the addition of the 25 percent for deferred payment and the compound interest from that time until 1945, would amount to the sum of $1,000 in 1945. The veteran was thereupon given a certificate containing an agreement by the Government to pay him this $1,000 in 1945 or to pay it to his family if he died at any time before 1945. In effect, it was a paid-up endowment policy in the average case for $1,000 payable in 1945, or sooner in the event of death. Under the provisions of this settlement, the total obligation of $1,400,000,000 in 1924 produced a maturity or face value of $3,500,000,000 in 1945.

Since 1924 the only major change in the original settlement was the act of 1931 under which veterans were authorized to borrow up to 50 percent of the face value of their certificates as of 1945. Three million veterans have already borrowed under this provision an amount which, with interest charges, totals $1,700,000,000.

The bill before me provides for the immediate payment of the 1945 value of the certificates. It means paying $1,600,000,000 more than the present value of the certificates. It requires an expenditure of more than $2,200,000,000 in cash for this purpose. It directs payment to the veterans of a much larger sum than was contemplated in the 1924 settlement. It is nothing less than a complete abandonment of that settlement. It is a new straight gratuity or bounty to the amount of $1,600,000,000. It destroys the insurance protection for the dependents of the veterans provided in the original plan. For the remaining period of 10 years they will have lost this insurance.

This proposal, I submit, violates the entire principle of veterans' benefits so carefully formulated at the time of the war, and also the entire principle of the adjusted-certificate settlement of 1924.

What are the reasons presented in this bill for this fundamental change in policy? They are set forth with care in a number of "whereas" clauses at the beginning of the bill.

The first of these states as reasons for the cash payment of these certificates at this time that it will increase the purchasing power of millions of the consuming public; that it will provide relief for many who are in need because of economic conditions; and that it will lighten the relief burden of cities, counties, and States. The second states that payment will not create any additional debt. The third states that payment now will be an effective method of spending money to hasten recovery.

These are the enacted reasons for the passage of this bill. Let me briefly analyze them.

First, the spending of this sum, it cannot be denied, would result in some expansion of retail trade. But it must be noted that retail trade has already expanded to a condition that compares favorably with conditions before the depression. However, to resort to the kind of financial practice provided in this bill would not improve the conditions necessary to expand those industries in which we have the greatest unemployment. The Treasury notes issued under the terms of this bill we know from past experience would return quickly to the banks. We know, too, that the banks have at this moment more than ample credit with which to expand the activities of business and industry generally. The ultimate effect of this bill will not in the long run justify the expectations that have been raised by those who argue for it.

The next reason in the first whereas clause is that present payment will provide relief for many who are in need because of economic conditions. The Congress has just passed an act to provide work relief for such citizens. Some veterans are on the relief rolls, though relatively not nearly as many as is the case with nonveterans. Assume, however, that such a veteran served in the United States or overseas during the war; that he came through in fine physical shape, as most of them did; that he received an honorable discharge; that he is today 38 years old and in full possession of his faculties and health; that like several million other Americans he is receiving from his Government relief and assistance in one of many forms—I hold that that able-bodied citizen, because he wore a uniform and for no other reason, should be accorded no treatment different from that accorded to other citizens who did not wear a uniform during the World War.

The third reason given in the first whereas clause is that payment today would lighten the relief burden of municipalities. Why, I ask, should the Congress lift that burden in respect only to those who wore the uniform? Is it not better to treat every able-bodied American alike and to carry out the great relief program adopted by this Congress in a spirit of equality to all? This applies to every other unit of government throughout the Nation.

The second whereas clause, which states that the payment of certificates will not create an additional debt, raises a fundamental question of sound finance. To meet a claim of one group by this deceptively easy method of payment will raise similar demands for the payment of claims of other groups. It is easy to see the ultimate result of meeting recurring demands by the issuance of Treasury notes. It invites an ultimate reckoning in uncontrollable prices and in the destruction of the value of savings that will strike most cruelly those like the veterans who seem to be temporarily benefited. The first person injured by skyrocketing prices is the man on a fixed income. Every disabled veteran on pension or allowance is on fixed income. This bill favors the able-bodied veteran at the expense of the disabled veteran.

Wealth is not created, nor is it more equitably distributed by this method. A government, like an individual, must ultimately meet legitimate obligations out of the production of wealth by the labor of human beings applied to the resources of nature. Every country that has attempted the form of meeting its obligations which is here provided has suffered disastrous consequences.

In the majority of cases printing-press money has not been retired through taxation. Because of increased costs, caused by inflated prices, new issue has followed new issue, ending in the ultimate wiping out of the currency of the afflicted country. In a few cases, like our own in the period of the Civil War, the printing of Treasury notes to cover an emergency has fortunately not resulted in actual disaster and collapse, but has nevertheless caused this Nation untold troubles, economic and political, for a whole generation.

The statement in this same second "whereas" clause that payment will discharge and retire an acknowledged contract obligation of the Government is, I regret to say, not in accordance with the fact. It wholly omits and disregards the fact that this contract obligation is due in 1945 and not today.

If I, as an individual, owe you, an individual Member of the Congress, $1,000 payable in 1945, it is not a correct statement for you to tell me that I owe you $1,000 today. As a matter of practical fact, if I put $750 into a Government savings bond today and make that bond out in your name, you will get $1,000 on the due date, 10 years from now. My debt to you today, therefore, cannot under the remotest possibility be considered more than $750.

The final "whereas" clause, stating that spending the money is the most effective means of hastening recovery is so ill considered that little comment is necessary. Every authorization of expenditure by the Seventy-third Congress in its session of 1933 and 1934 and every appropriation by the Seventy-fourth Congress to date for recovery purposes has been predicated not on the mere spending of money to hasten recovery, but on the sounder principle of preventing the loss of homes and farms, of saving industry from bankruptcy, of safeguarding bank deposits, and, most important of all, of giving relief and jobs through public work to individuals and families faced with starvation. These greater and broader concerns of the American people have a prior claim for our consideration at this time. They have the right of way.

There is before this Congress legislation providing old-age benefits and a greater measure of security for all workers against the hazards of unemployment. We are also meeting the pressing necessities of those who are now unemployed and in need of immediate relief. In all of this every veteran shares.

To argue for this bill as a relief measure is to indulge in the fallacy that the welfare of the country can be generally served by extending relief on some basis other than actual deserving need.

The core of the question is that a man who is sick or under some other special disability because he was a soldier should certainly be assisted as such. But if a man is suffering from economic need because of the depression, even though he is a veteran, he must be placed on a par with all of the other victims of the depression. The veteran who is disabled owes his condition to the war. The healthy veteran who is unemployed owes his troubles to the depression. Each presents a separate and different problem. Any attempt to mingle the two problems is to confuse our efforts.

Even the veteran who is on relief will benefit only temporarily by this measure, because the payment of this sum to him will remove him from the group entitled to relief if the ordinary rules of relief agencies are followed. For him this measure would give but it would also take away. In the end he would be the loser.

The veteran who suffers from this depression can best be aided by the rehabilitation of the country as a whole. His country, with honor and gratitude, returned him at the end of the war to the citizenry from which he came. He became once more a member of the great civilian population. His interests became identified with its fortunes and also with its misfortunes.

Some years ago it was well said by the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho that—

The soldier of this country cannot be aided except as the country itself is rehabilitated. The soldier cannot come back except as the people as a whole come back. The soldier cannot prosper unless the people prosper. He has now gone back and intermingled and become a part of the citizenship of the country; he is wrapped up in its welfare or in its adversity. The handing out to him of a few dollars will not benefit him under such circumstances, whereas it will greatly injure the prospects of the country and the restoration of normal conditions.

It is generally conceded that the settlement by adjusted-compensation certificates made in 1924 was fair and it was accepted as fair by the overwhelming majority of World War veterans themselves.

I have much sympathy for the argument that some who remained at home in civilian employ enjoyed special privilege and unwarranted remuneration. That is true—bitterly true—but a recurrence of that type of war profiteering can and must be prevented in any future war.

I invite the Congress and the veterans with the great masses of the American population to join with me in progressive efforts to root a recurrence of such injustice out of American life. But we should not destroy privilege and create new privilege at the same time. Two wrongs do not make a right.

The herculean task of the United States Government today is to take care that its citizens have the necessities of life. We are seeking honestly and honorably to do this, irrespective of class or group. Rightly, we give preferential treatment to those men who were wounded, disabled, or who became ill as a result of war service. Rightly, we give care to those who subsequently have become ill. The others—and they represent the great majority—are today in the prime of life, are today in full bodily vigor. They are American citizens who should be accorded equal privileges and equal rights to enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—no less and no more.

It is important to make one more point. In accordance with the mandate of the Congress, our Budget has been set. The public has accepted it. On that basis this Congress has made and is making its appropriations. That Budget asked for appropriations in excess of receipts to the extent of $4,000,000,000. The whole of that deficit was to be applied for work relief for the unemployed. That was a single-minded, definite purpose. Every unemployed veteran on the relief rolls was included in that proposed deficit—he will be taken care of out of it.

I cannot in honesty assert to you that to increase that deficit this year by $2,200,000,000 will in itself bankrupt the United States. Today the credit of the United States is safe. But it cannot ultimately be safe if we engage in a policy of yielding to each and all of the groups that are able to enforce upon the Congress claims for special consideration. To do so is to abandon the principle of government by and for the American people and to put in its place government by and for political coercion by minorities. We can afford all that we need; but we cannot afford all that we want.

I do not need to be a prophet to assert that if these certificates, due in 1945, are paid in full today every candidate for election to the Senate or to the House of Representatives will in the near future be called upon in the name of patriotism to support general pension legislation for all veterans, regardless of need or age.

Finally, I invite your attention to the fact that solely from the point of view of the good credit of the United States the complete failure of the Congress to provide additional taxes for an additional expenditure of this magnitude would in itself and by itself alone warrant disapproval of this measure.

I well know the disappointment that the performance of my duty in this matter will occasion to many thousands of my fellow citizens. I well realize that some who favor this bill are moved to a true desire to benefit the veterans of the World War and to contribute to the welfare of the Nation. These citizens will, however, realize that I bear an obligation as President and as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy which extends to all groups, to all citizens, to the present and to the future. I cannot be true to the office I hold if I do not weigh the claims of all in the scales of equity. I cannot swerve from this moral obligation.

I am thinking of those who served their country in the Army and in the Navy during the period which convulsed the entire civilized world. I saw their service at first-hand at home and overseas. I am thinking of those millions of men and women who increased crops, who made munitions, who ran our railroads, who worked in the mines, who loaded our ships during the war period.

I am thinking of those who died in the cause of America here and abroad, in uniform and out; I am thinking of the widows and orphans of all of them; I am thinking of five millions of Americans who, with their families, are today in dire need, supported in whole or in part by Federal, State, and local governments who have decreed that they shall not starve. I am thinking not only of the past, not only of today, but of the years to come. In this future of ours it is of first importance that we yield not to the sympathy which we would extend to a single group or class by special legislation for that group or class, but that we should extend assistance to all groups and all classes who in an emergency need the helping hand of their Government.

I believe the welfare of the Nation, as well as the future welfare of the veterans, wholly justifies my disapproval of this measure.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I return, without my approval, House of Representatives bill no. 3896, providing for the immediate payment to veterans of the 1945 face value of their adjusted-service certificates.

Thereupon (at 1 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the President retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m., the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

ACTION ON THE VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be entered at large on the Journal, and the message and the bill printed as a House document.

The question is, Will the House of Representatives, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no subject on which the people of America are more fully advised than that of the immediate payment of the soldiers' adjusted-service certificates. That question has been ably debated by the Congress, not only recently but on many previous occasions. The President of the United States has fully and ably expressed his views on the subject. There could be no new light thrown on the subject by further discussion, in my opinion. The facts are all before us. The case is fully made up and ready for our decision.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The Clerk will call the roll.

Those who favor the question will say "aye" when their names are called, and those who are opposed will say "no."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 322, nays 98, not voting 12, as follows:

NOT VOTING—12

Bankhead	Casey	Igoe	Peyser
Burnham	Cochran	Lamneck	Sabath
Carden	Dear	Oliver	Shannon

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BYRNS, and he voted "nay."

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the bill was passed, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Dear and Mr. Burnham (override) with Mr. Peyser (sustain).
Mr. Casey and Mr. Shannon (override) with Mr. Oliver (sustain).

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I beg to announce to the House on behalf of my colleague the gentleman from New York, Mr. PEYSER, who has been seriously ill for the past 12 weeks, and who is still under the doctor's care, that if he were able to be present he would vote to sustain the President.

Mr. Speaker, in this connection I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating in the RECORD his letter to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

MAY 13, 1935.

HON. JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Now that the vote is about to be taken to sustain or override the President's veto on the Patman bonus bill I am anxious to signify my approval of the President's action and would appreciate your inserting this letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

As you know, I have been ill in bed for the past 12 weeks, otherwise I would cast my vote on the floor of the House for the sustenance of the President's veto on this measure.

In both my campaigns for election I pledged myself to oppose the payment of the soldiers' bonus and I have consistently fulfilled my pledge to my constituents by voting against its immediate payment. I sincerely regret that my illness prevents my voicing my opposition at this time in person.

With kindest regards and assurances of my appreciation of your making note of my desire to sustain the President's veto, I am
Sincerely yours,

THEODORE A. PEYSER.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

VETO MESSAGE—PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, we would all like to do something for the soldiers, but the bonus bill provides for giving them $1,300,000,000 more than the certificates which have been issued to them call for.

Democratic Members of Congress have already supported appropriations exceeding $10,000,000,000, which have passed the House at this session. This is three times more than the revenues in sight. Democratic Members of Congress have voted for the $4,880,000,000 bill, the 9-percent pay-roll tax bill, and the banking bill, which many of them have felt, and some of them have said, were wrong, but that they were supporting the administration. There they did not have the courage to oppose the administration, when they knew the administration was wrong. Now, when the administration is right, they have not the courage to support it.

The country is truly in a sorry state, with a Democratic majority in Congress unable to support and sustain its own convictions. Truly, it is another proof of the old adage that "the Democratic Party is constitutionally incapable of government."

ANSWER TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S DEMAND THAT THE VETERAN SHALL REMAIN THE FORGOTTEN MAN

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the remarks of the President of the United States in this Chamber a few moments ago, urging the Congress to betray the men who deserve most from the Nation; as I heard him use his mellifluous voice and all the arts of the politician of which he is master in his attempt to arouse American public opinion against the veterans of America's battles, I could scarcely make myself believe that I was listening to a message concerning our veteran soldiers delivered by the man to whom the Army and Navy look as their Commander in Chief. Truly has America fallen upon evil days if a President, elected to be the servant of the people, may thus set aside precedent in order to injure the cause of the hungry and unemployed men who in darker days than those of economic depression were willing, if need be, to die so that the dignity and integrity of the Nation might be preserved untarnished.

The President has no hesitation in recklessly spending million after million of the people's money in seeking to win the votes of the cotton farmers of the South and the hog-raisers of the West. He made no mention of a preferred class in dispensing these moneys, did he? He does not blush at asking Congress to give him a $5,000,000,000 slush fund so that his election next year may be made possible. His voice utters no protest when our Government pays a bonus to the soldiers of England and France and other European nations. We canceled billions of dollars in debts owed to the United States by foreign powers, thus transferring additional burdens to the shoulders of the American taxpayer, only to find that these ungrateful nations dishonestly defaulted on many billions more. Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Australia, Canada, Belgium—each recognized the debt it owed to its war veterans and gave to them some kind of adjusted compensation. Then, with money wrung from the blood of Americans, England balances her budget and boasts that she is on the road to speedy economic recovery. Britain can build great battleships as a threat to European peace, France can equip and train an army of many millions as a menace to other continental nations, and the administration supinely does nothing as these predatory naval and military powers steal our money for their own people and thus indirectly pay an additional bonus to the European soldier at the expense of our own. What a noise English diplomats made a few days ago when it was inadvertently revealed that in the next war with England, our Navy is prepared to capture Bermuda and other English bases now threatening the Panama Canal.

President Roosevelt weakly and apologetically went out of his way to explain that there was nothing serious about it, but if there had been in the White House a President with the courage of Jackson, or Lincoln, or Cleveland, or Theodore Roosevelt, his answer to the British diplomats would have pointed out that these islands would not even recompense us for the stolen American money now reposing in foreign treasuries and the American blood spilled in the war to make Europe safe for hypocrisy. The Roosevelt administration refuses to sanction payment of its debt to our own impoverished war veterans, but it has no apology to offer for giving our taxpayers' money to foreign nations so that their soldiers may profit while American veterans suffer. There is no doubt that these nations could and can pay. If Finland can pay her debt with 2-percent interest, if the Irish Republic can repay Americans at the rate of $1.25 for every dollar of the money lent to her, certainly the great militaristic nations can do so without injury to their economic structure.

Eighteen years ago one Democrat in the White House spent millions to wage a European war, as a result of which England became the owner of nearly a third of the world, France filled her pockets and confiscated rich mines and territories, even Japan, which lost but 300 men in the war, gained extensively in land and commerce, while America received the depression and the privilege of paying Europe's bills. That administration did not hesitate to give foreigners staggering sums of American money whenever they requested it, but our American boys who saved the foreigners' unworthy nations from German defeat, received the munificent sum of a dollar a day!

Today another Democrat in the White House comes here to insult the patriotism of real Americans and inferentially assert that a dollar a day was enough. A dollar a day to keep England from becoming a German duchy! A dollar a day to keep France from speaking German! A dollar a day, as Wilson said, to "make the world a better place to live in"! Better for whom? Certainly not for the war veterans who are now condemned by President Roosevelt to the depths of poverty and unemployment, and told that there is no hope of bettering themselves as long as he is in the White House.

In all the annals of American history, Mr. Speaker, has any President ever before so viciously attacked the men without whom that flag would not float so gloriously unsullied behind the Speaker's chair in this House? Mark you well these words by which today the President branded the veteran as no better than the slacker:

* * * Some veterans are on the relief rolls, though relatively not nearly as many as is the case with nonveterans. Assume, however, that such a veteran served in the United States or overseas during the war; that he came through in fine physical shape as most of them did; that he received an honorable discharge; that he is today 38 years old and in full possession of his faculties and health; that like several million other Americans he is receiving from his Government relief and assistance in one of many forms—I hold that that able-bodied citizen, because he wore a uniform, and for no other reason, should be accorded no treatment different from that accorded to other citizens who did not wear a uniform during the World War."

In other words, according to the President, you veterans of America are just as good as the slacker and the profiteer—but no better. In the President's opinion, your sacrifice for our country merits no financial approval greater than that to be extended to the man who shirked his patriotic responsibilities in time of war. And then, to heap additional insult upon the injury inflicted by these words, the President further says:

If a man is suffering from economic need because of the depression, even though he is a veteran, he must be placed on a par with all the other victims of the depression.

What a teaching for the Chief Executive to put into the minds of the dangerous radicals and timid collegians who cowardly assert that they will never defend America against an enemy. You veterans, according to the President's insinuation, must be placed on an equality with the Russian Communist who entered this country during the past few years to find a place on the relief rolls. How the red agitators will roll these words like a sweet morsel from their tongues! The day will come, Mr. Speaker, when the President will regret their utterance, for through them, as Marc Antony has said:

Now let it work: Mischief, thou art afoot. Take thou what course thou wilt!

Mr. Speaker, if I were a newspaper artist, like Mr. Jerry Doyle, of Philadelphia, whom I consider the brilliant leader of his profession, I would draw a cartoon of the veteran sitting upon the steps of the White House, and above his gaunt face and torn uniform I would place, as if in prophetic vision, a picture of the future, with the veteran in an old men's home for the poor and an image of Franklin D. Roosevelt above him—as the artists are accustomed to picture thought—and beneath the drawing I would place the words of the popular song, "When I grow too old to dream, I'll have you to remember."

Mr. Speaker, it is 18 years since our American boys went forth to the great adventure. With faces turned toward the rising sun, we did not question those who called us to the flag. We would answer as cheerfully again, if America called. To unknown lands and unknowable fates we marched on, to set up those tiny wooden crosses that snowed over in an early winter of white mercy the dead and broken blossoms of young American manhood that lay scattered through the red, untimely harvest fields of war.

Now where is the glory of war to the boys who abandoned all that life then held of success and happiness for the hardships of crowded camps and rain-drenched battle cruisers and mud-filled trenches and broken slumbers beneath the exploding shellfire of the lifted guns? The pomp and circumstance of war can today be seen in the sightless eyes, the torn bodies, the mutilated lungs, the shattered nerves, the weakened hearts. The glory of battle is to be found in the 60 veterans' hospitals with over 50,000 beds, all occupied, and in the long waiting lists numbering practically a fourth of those who answered the call to arms in the stirring days of 1917.

As the President was driven back to the White House this afternoon after his plea that justice be denied to the veterans, he passed down Pennsylvania Avenue, where these boys trod with vigorous step in the month of May of that first year of war. Today the President, if he would but look around, could still see them, but what a contrast he would find! There is now no martial music to keep them swinging along, no cheers greet their approach. They wear no trim uniforms. There is no light gleaming in their eyes. Hungry, with insufficient clothing, many of them without the price of an artificial limb, searching for the employment that will enable them to keep their unfortunate families together, they had turned toward the White House in the vain hope that the inevitable Presidential smile might cloak a heart equally as genial.

Yesterday the man in the White House was looked upon as the potential savior of these heroes who had offered their youth upon the altar of national sacrifice and devotion. Today the veterans know that they have been betrayed; they realize the hollowness and sham of some of our so-called "great men"; they see the hypocrisy of those politicians whom but yesterday they had considered statesmen.

Mr. Speaker, as the President delivered that message today, callously shutting the door of hope in the faces of the men who only a few years ago were hailed as the champions of liberty and democracy, I thought to myself that there are, indeed, men in high places who are so absorbed in their own selfish desire for continued power that they become, so to speak, tone-deaf—they can hear only the sounds of praise and commendation, but fail to hear the voice of Congress, fail to hear the voices of Republicans warning them that the bonus is a sacred obligation long overdue. Yes; they even fail to hear or to heed the piteous plea of the soldier, the heart-breaking cries of his wife and his children. And, as the President made his demand that the veterans be ignored, I thought that if he would only leave the Executive Mansion and the Astor yacht and come down into the streets of a great city like New York or Philadelphia or Chicago or Detroit or San Francisco or Boston—if he would only gaze for a moment into the startled eyes of the wounded men who, until this hour, had maintained their trust in him, he would realize, as you and I know, that there are some things in life that cannot be waved aside with a gesture; there are hunger and disease and want and distress among men and women and children that cannot be obliterated even by a Presidential laugh.

It is utterly ridiculous and fallacious for the President to insinuate that payment of this just debt would ultimately injure the financial credit of the Nation and impair recovery. He is, himself, a financial czar, having absolute dictatorial control of $5,000,000,000, not to mention the gigantic sums still left unspent from the last Congress. If he would be just to the veteran, let him take two billions from this huge fund and with it pay the soldiers the debt which the Nation owes them. He could pay every veteran the value of his adjusted-service certificate and still have enough left over to influence half a dozen national elections. Tomorrow I shall introduce a bill directing the President to do this, in the event that his veto be sustained.

As for his utterance that the bonus is not due until 1945 and that payment of the debt to the veterans would violate the contract contained in the adjusted-service certificates, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, when did Mr. Roosevelt become so anxious about the inviolability of contracts? When did this amazing conversion to sanctity take place? What about his own contract with the people, as contained in the Democratic platform upon which he was elected? He has violated every pledge and contract in it save one. He has broken it to plunge the Nation headlong into an unprecedented peacetime indebtedness upon the theory that he can squander our way back to prosperity. He has sanctioned the violation of contracts with the Government payable in gold, he repudiated air-mail contracts, and stubbornly sacrificed the lives of 13 Army fliers to prove that he was right—and then changed his mind again. He has violated the contract written on your paper money—so that today, even if wages were increased 25 percent, you actually receive only 85 percent of your former wage, because the Roosevelt dollar is worth only 60 cents. Violation of the contract! Why, the President has done nothing else since he took office but show his contempt for obligations. But as a matter of fact, the contract with the veteran calls for payment of a debt that is not due in 1945, but that was due in 1919—as soon as the boys doffed the uniforms in which they served the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I have made these few remarks so that the veterans may know that their cause is not yet lost. As the sun sinks tonight it will take with it, never to rise again, the confidence and the faith which America's war heroes had reposed in their President. He has failed them in their hour of need, he has abandoned their cause to the money-changers who would practice their so-called "economy" at the expense of the veterans' misery.

To the eternal shame of the Roosevelt regime be it known that 2 years ago in the name of the Economy Act it took from the veterans, their widows, and their orphans the pittance that they had received to keep body and soul together. Let the administration go its way into the limbo of forgotten things. Let it cover its shame with the blanket of million-dollar bills wrung from the people for its gigantic $5,000,000,000 election slush fund. Let the President continue to shout to the skies that the forgotten man of the World War is still to remain forgotten.

There are others who will fight the veterans' battles. There are Republican voices that will not be hushed until complete atonement is made for this disgraceful day. There are men here who will hold aloft the torch that the veterans caught flaming amid the poppies of Flanders Fields.

I call upon all just, far-seeing men to vote to defeat the veto of the President. As a Republican, I presume to summon the Democratic Senator from my own State to change his attitude and stand with us in our plea for justice to the heroes of the land. I call all real Americans to the veterans' standard, and, as I uplift it on behalf of my fellow veterans today, I remind you that—

By the friends who are lost to us,
By war's tremendous cost to us,
By all we've seen and all we've known,
And by the work we've wrought,
Now that we are back again,
Upon the homeward track again,
God help the men who are not true
To that for which we fought!

EVASION OF PANAMA CANAL TOLLS

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, for over 15 years the organized shipping interests have aggressively blocked every attempt of the Government to establish a business-like and just tolls system for the Panama Canal. In the meantime the unwarranted and manipulated tolls exemptions under a dishonest tolls system have constantly increased.

Over 3,000,000 tons of pay-load space of vessels now using the Canal evade the payment of tolls each year.

The amount of this evasion is constantly increasing and will continue to increase unless Congress passes the pending bill to correct this situation.

Under the present law, by superficial changes in ships, their owners evade tolls on a large part of their cargoes.

In 1933, five shipping companies, in this manner, reduced their tolls on 38 ships from 19 to 26 percent each, with an aggregate evasion of $710,000.

Only part of the ships using the Canal can or have availed themselves of the evasions the law now permits. So great have been the evasions, however, that the aggregate of all tolls collected from 1917 to 1933 was reduced 10 percent.

Many shelter decks, completely enclosed from the weather and water, are now escaping tolls. A shelter deck, for example, with 3,000 tons or more of cargo space, may be exempted on one ship under the present law. This would equal a train load of about 120 freight cars. Over 2,150,000 tons a year now escape tolls in this way.

Under the present law, the actual tonnage charged on laden ships by the different nations varies from 77 cents to $1.26, or a variation of 49 cents per ton. As between the six leading nations using the Canal, there is a variation of 18 cents a ton based on the actual earning capacity of the ships.

Of the six leading commercial nations, the ships of the United States pay next to the highest rate of tolls, on the average.

Under the present law, many ships pay 72 cents a ton whether laden or in ballast. In other words, an empty ship pays as much as a laden one, although it was intended the ship in ballast should pay 40 percent less.

Two ships of the same size and carrying the same cargo may pay radically different tolls, $2,000 difference for instance, one being exempt from tolls on its shelter deck, the other required to pay.

Many foreign vessels pay tolls on a less tonnage than assigned them by their own national registration rules.

WHY THESE ABSURDITIES?

Manifestly Congress never intended these absurdities in the administration of the tolls of the Panama Canal. Then why do they exist?

They exist on account of an inadvertent mistake Congress made in the Tolls Act of 1912. Congress authorized the President, subject to certain limitations, to fix the tolls for the Panama Canal and to change the rates from time to time.

The President was authorized to make rules for the measurement of tonnage of vessels using the canal. One hundred cubic feet is a vessel ton, and tolls are levied on that basis.

Unfortunately, as it subsequently developed, Congress included a proviso that the tolls should not exceed the equivalent of $1.25 per "net registered ton." The whole trouble in the tolls situation originated out of the use of the one word "registered." That word was subsequently interpreted as meaning a registered ton under the old United States statutes of ship registration and not a registered ton under the Panama Canal rules as Congress had intended. This had the effect of substituting the old registration rules of measurement so far as the maximum tonnage tolls were concerned. In other words, it limited all tolls to the tonnage as measured by the old United States rules instead of by the Panama Canal rules which were designed for that purpose.

All of the absurdities in the administration of Canal tolls have grown out of the inappropriate application of tonnage rules not intended for Canal purposes.

The original purpose of Congress to prescribe uniform rules for commercial ships, tolls to be levied on actual earning capacity was thus defeated. The excessive exemptions of carrying space have occurred under this interpretation.

In cases where there is a difference between the total net tonnage of a ship under the two sets of rules, which is always the case, all load space in excess of the old United States rules is exempt.

Under interpretations of the old United States registration rules, tricky, superficial structural changes not materially affecting the load capacity of a vessel have been resorted to to reduce tolls. This progressive reduction has been going on for over 15 years.

The Suez Canal, the only other great oceanic canal, long ago recognized the impracticability of accepting old national registrations of tonnage and adopted separate rules for measuring vessels for tolls purposes. It was for a similar purpose that the United States authorized the Panama Canal rules of measurement. The unanticipated interpretation of the law has prevented a businesslike and just system of toll levies at the Canal.

In the construction of the Canal the United States excited the admiration of the world. Every person who has seen the Canal marvels at the simplicity and efficiency of its physical operation. As a constructor and operator of the Canal Uncle Sam is a genius. He is, by the inaction of Congress, forced to be a gullible toll keeper.

PURPOSES OF BILL

The main purpose of the Canal tolls bill, H. R. 5292, is to remedy the mistake in the Tolls Act of 1912.

The purpose is to eliminate all unwarranted exemptions and require every ship to pay tolls on its actual earning capacity space.

Under the present law some ships are paying more than they should, others are paying less. This bill would place them on a uniform basis.

The object of this bill is neither to raise nor lower the aggregate amount of tolls now collected. It proposes to fix the tolls on an equal and just basis that will collect practically the same amount of tolls now being collected.

A further and very important purpose is to prevent further evasion of tolls.

When tolls are reduced it should be by the reduction of the unit charge and not by tricky evasions under the technical advantages afforded by the present law. Our Government and not the users of the canal should say when and how tolls are to be reduced.

The nominal rate of tolls on laden vessels is now $1.20 per ton of 100 cubic feet. In practice the limit of tolls is $1.25 per ton under the old United States rules on payments based on part only of the actual earning capacity of the ship. While, nominally, laden vessels are paying $1.20 per ton, in practice they are paying on the average about 90 cents per ton on their actual earning capacity space. Some ships are paying more and some are paying materially less.

A toll honestly levied at a uniform price on the actual earning capacity of the ships using the canal at 90 cents a ton will raise as much money as is now being collected under the present tricky system at the rate of $1.20 per ton.

A ship which, through the interpretation of the act of 1912 and by evasion has reduced its tolls 25 percent, would under this proposed legislation pay no more than it is paying at present. A ship which has evaded tolls in excess of 25 percent of its actual load space will be required to pay more.

In any event, any ship required to pay more tolls on account of this legislation will be required to pay only the same amount as the average vessel now using the Panama Canal is paying. If such ships suffer any injustices, it is the injustice of being placed on an equality with other ships.

COMMITTEE ON MODIFICATION OF RULES

Section 2 of the bill authorizes the President to appoint a special committee of three to serve for not more than 6 months to study and investigate the rules for the measurement of vessels using the Canal and the tolls to be charged. This committee is to report directly to the President.

The object of this provision is to give the shipping interests every opportunity to present any facts or make any proposal that may aid the President in levying tolls and in methods of measurement that shall be businesslike and just. This committee is authorized to recommend such changes and modifications in the rules as it finds necessary or desirable to provide a practical, just, and equitable system of measuring such vessels and levying such tolls.

The President will have power from time to time to change the rules as circumstances require. A constant method will be available for the shipping interests or others to secure any meritorious change in the rules or the tolls. The rules for the Suez Canal have been changed on an average of about once a year for the last 15 years.

The President will not adopt the modified rules or levy the new tolls until after the committee has reported.

This bill in effect allows 6 months for investigation, about 2 months for a consideration of the report by the President, and the 6 months' notice of change that the law now requires before the new rates go into effect on September 1, 1936.

This procedure is practically the same as that followed under the original Tolls Act of 1912. In that case a special committee which prepared the rules reported to the Secretary of War, and the President proclaimed the rules as authorized by Congress. Under this bill the special committee will be appointed by the President and report directly to him.

MODIFICATION OF MEASUREMENT RULES

Tolls are levied on pay-load space. The Government is not interested in collecting tolls on space not usable for pay loads.

The whole opposition to the bill is an effort to hold on to unwarranted exemptions.

This bill proposes that measurement of vessels for tolls shall be based on the actual earning capacity. The purpose will be to eliminate from measurement any parts of the ship not usable for earning-load space and to measure and levy tolls for all pay-load carrying space.

Some results of this investigation are practically certain. There will be a moderate decrease in the measurable tonnage under the Panama Canal rules and a substantial increase of the measurable tonnage as now made under the United States rules.

There will be no radical change in the aggregate amount of tolls collected and a toll of not over 90 cents a ton on laden ships will produce substantially the same tolls now produced by $1.20 a ton on a measurement that includes part only of the ships' earning space.

A ship now escaping tolls on only 25 percent of its pay-load space will not be required to pay a higher toll than at present.

A ship now having an exemption of over 25 percent of its pay-load space may have its tolls increased.

It is safe to predict that certain public spaces on passenger vessels not under exclusive occupancy of passengers, such as library and music rooms, children's play rooms, and so forth, will be relieved from measurement under the Panama Canal rules as revised. Most of the vessels to get the benefit of this reduction in measurement are American vessels, which more frequently transit the Canal. Therefore the chief benefit of this reduction will go to American passenger vessels, and it will relieve them from the extreme increases in tolls which might otherwise result from the change in the rules.

The exemption of these spaces will total about 300,000 tons.

There are a few other minor situations in which reductions of measurable space will probably be made.

In the main it will doubtless be found that the Panama Canal rules of measurement, based on equality of tolls according to actual earning capacity, are just and satisfactory. The investigation, however, will give full opportunity for consideration of every phase of the measurement problem that may be presented.

After the investigation is over, and with full knowledge of the facts and the recommendations of the committee before him, the President will modify the rules as the facts are found to warrant.

SHIPPING COMPANIES URGE AN INVESTIGATION ONLY

Consistent with the policy of 15 years' opposition of delay certain shipping companies are now proposing the elimination of all but section 2 of the canal tolls bill and that we simply authorize an investigation and report on the tolls question.

It is not suggested what benefit the rules will be without any power to put them into effect. Certainly Congress should not fix unchangeable rules for the measurement of vessels any more than it should fix freight rates unchangeable by administrative action. If rules were fixed by law, every time any injustices developed the only opportunity for correction would be by an amendment of the law by Congress.

To authorize an investigation and report on the revision of the Panama Canal rules without any power to put the proposed changes into effect would be a waste of time and money. It could serve no purpose except that of certain shipping interests to evade the payment of tolls justly due and to encourage further evasions.

THE ATTITUDE OF THE SHIPPING COMPANIES

The shipping interests are not responsible for the mistake in the law of 1912. We cannot blame them for availing themselves of an advantage unjust to the Government but which the law permits. We should not look with favor, however, on the organized tenacious effort to prevent the Government from having a businesslike, just tolls system by those who are receiving unwarranted and special advantages by the continuance of the present law.

I am from a coast State. My district and State are especially interested in seeing that the shipping companies get every encouragement and help that justly belongs to them. I am not interested in aiding the shipping companies to gouge the Government in the evasion of tolls.

I would welcome any modification of measurement rules that justice can dictate, but I am unwilling to oppose the Government in its efforts to require all ships to pay tolls on a just basis of equality.

There is no honest reason in the world why a whole shelter deck carrying hundreds or even thousands of tons of cargo perfectly protected from the weather and storm should go through the Panama Canal without paying tolls.

One of the worst features of the situation is the progressive evasion of tolls under the existing law. The cargo spaces now exempt can be indefinitely increased. Trifling changes in structure have exempted shelter decks; now the height of those decks is being increased and thus further increasing the tolls exemptions. Decks formerly 8 feet in height are being increased as high as 14 feet, thus permitting the exemption of large additional spaces.

The shipping companies are now advocating loans from the Government for ship construction at long-time low-interest rates. If new construction occurs the money so loaned by the Government will be used for tricky construction to evade the payment of tolls to the Government that is trying to aid and encourage the companies. No construction loans should be made until after this legislation becomes a law.

Last year the Government paid $27,000,000 in excess of open-contract prices as subsidies for mail transportation to our foreign shipowners. The amount of this gift to the shipping companies was $3,000,000 in excess of the total tolls collected at the Panama Canal. Yet certain shipping companies receiving benefits from the exemptions they now enjoy, seek to prevent the Government from establishing a businesslike and equitable system of tolls, in order that their special advantages may continue. They seek to prevent the Government from charging them the average tolls now paid by ships using the Canal. The little difference between what they are paying and what they should pay inspires the outcry of injustice if an equal tolls system is established.

The construction of the Panama Canal cost the Government $375,000,000. The Suez Canal, the only other great interoceanic canal, was built at one-third that cost and charges higher tolls than we collect at the Panama Canal.

A few years ago we loaned the shipping companies $157,000,000 for ship construction. Yet the same companies have for 15 years systematically and tenaciously opposed every effort of Congress to relieve the Government of the unwarranted exemptions under the act of 1912.

In the course of the hearings on this legislation our committee invited and urged every shipping company to submit any proposal or amendment that it thought necessary or desirable to make Canal tolls administration businesslike, and just. The most concrete response was that no plan would be agreed to that would require any ship to pay a greater toll than it is now paying.

HISTORY OF LEGISLATION

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has had jurisdiction of this legislation ever since the Canal was started. Upon a report from that committee this legislation has four times passed the House. It has had the support of General Goethals and practically every person connected with the Canal administration from the time of General Goethals to the present. It has had the support of each Secretary of War.

This bill is presented with a request from President Roosevelt that it be enacted.

No partisan effort has been made against the bill by either Democrats or Republicans prior to this Congress. It had the support of President Wilson and succeeding Republican Administrations.

Its enactment prior to this time has been blocked in another body.

John Esch and James Parker, former Republican chairmen of our committee, supported this legislation. It was supported by the former Republican leader, Hon. Frank W. Mondell, by Hon. Everett Sanders, who subsequently was secretary to President Coolidge, and by those splendid members of our committee, Congressmen Hoch and Dennison.

So far as I am aware, no member of our committee, Democrat or Republican, who had knowledge of the facts has opposed this legislation in the last 10 years. In the last Republican House it passed by unanimous consent.

The need of this legislation is so obvious that the situation does not, in my judgment, justify the opposition of any Member.

PROCTORS AND MARSHALS' FEES AND BONDS AND STIPULATIONS IN SUITS IN ADMIRALTY

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a copy of the bill H. R. 29.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, the House of Representatives has now passed H. R. 29, introduced by me, relating to fees on appeal and marshals' fees and bonds in admiralty.

Following is the bill as passed by the House:

[H. R. 29, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill to amend the laws relating to proctors and marshals' fees and bonds and stipulations in suits in admiralty

Be it enacted, etc., That section 824 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 572) is amended by adding after the first paragraph of such section the following new paragraph:

"On appeals in admiralty, where the amount involved is not over $1,000 a proctor's docket fee of $20; where the amount involved is from $1,000 to $5,000 a proctor's docket fee of $50; where the amount involved is over $5,000 a proctor's docket fee of $100. On such appeals cost of brief of successful party to be taxed, where amount involved is not over $1,000 at not exceeding $25; where amount involved is between $1,000 and $5,000 at not exceeding $50; where amount involved is over $5,000 at not exceeding $75."

SEC. 2. Section 829 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 574; Supp. VII, title 28, sec. 574), is amended by striking out of such section the paragraph which reads as follows:

"When the debt or claim in admiralty is settled by the parties without a sale of the property, the marshal shall be entitled to a commission of 1 percent on the first $500 of the claim or decree, and one-half of 1 percent on the excess of any sum thereof over $500: Provided, That when the value of the property is less than the claim such commission shall be allowed only on the appraised value thereof."

SEC. 3. Section 941 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 754), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That the parties may stipulate the amount of the bond or stipulation for the release of a vessel or other property on libel in admiralty to be not more than the amount claimed in the libel, with interest, plus an allowance for libellant's cost: Provided further, That in the event of the inability or refusal of the parties to so stipulate the amount of the bond, the court shall fix the amount thereof, but if not so fixed then a bond shall be required in the amount hereinbefore prescribed in this section."

The first section of the bill establishes a uniform schedule of proctors' docket fees on appeals in admiralty cases, and also allows the cost of brief on appeals to the successful party, with a limitation on such fees and cost of brief according to the amount involved in the litigation. The docket fees and cost of brief allowed are moderate and reasonable. Costs fixed by this section apply exclusively to matters on appeal. The provision for such costs will have the salutary effect of preventing appeals solely for vexation or delay.

Section 2 of the bill strikes out the paragraph of present law which requires payment of a commission to the marshal in all admiralty cases where the claim is settled without a sale of property.

The Secretary of Commerce proposed an amendment, accepted by the Committee on the Judiciary and incorporated in the bill, providing that in case a vessel or other property is sold by a public auctioneer or some person other than the marshal or his deputy, the amount of the marshal's commission shall be reduced by the amount paid to the auctioneer.

This section eliminates the heavy charges marshals receive in cases where there has been a settlement of the suit. Admiralty practitioners and maritime interests and those having recourse to the admiralty laws have long thought that the marshal should not receive a commission when there is a settlement, and no sale of the vessel or other property and no money passes through the hands of the marshal.

The third section of the bill permits the parties to a suit in admiralty to stipulate the amount of the bond or stipulation for the release of a vessel or other property on libel, to be not more than the amount claimed in the libel, with interest, plus an allowance for libellant's costs. It further provides that in case the parties are unable to agree the court shall fix the amount of the bond; but if not so fixed, then a bond shall be required in the amount prescribed by the law which this section undertakes to amend. That law requires the bond to be in an amount double the amount claimed in the libel. It is the common practice to furnish surety bonds for the release of libeled property, and the expense of premiums on the bonds are taxed in favor of the successful litigant. The double amount of the bond is far in excess of the amount of probable recovery and this section of the bill will materially reduce the amount of premiums taxed against a litigant in such cases.

The bill as enacted will tend to discourage appeals not taken in good faith and will materially reduce certain of the expenses incident to litigation in admiralty.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACTIVITIES IN PENNSYLVANIA, OHIO, AND WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and include therein certain remarks made by the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, when we compare the banking set-up of the Nation today with what it was on March 3, 1933, we are doubly proud of the institutions that Congress has set up during this time to give security to the people with reference to their deposits and money matters. It is most gratifying to go about and learn from the masses that they now have confidence in our banking institutions. It was a group of Congressmen from Pennsylvania, Ohio, and West Virginia who had the pleasure of having as our honor guest around the Speaker's table in the Speaker's dining room on May 9 the Honorable Leo T. Crowley, Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the brief talk he gave us was so interesting that I am asking unanimous consent to insert the same in the Record at this point.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, first let me thank you for your most kind invitation to be with you this noon. It is not often that we have the privilege of speaking before such a substantial and important group of Representatives. I want you to know that it is a genuine pleasure to be here and that I have enjoyed being with you immensely.

While I wish to confine my remarks principally to those facts relating to banking in West Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, so far as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is concerned, I would like to point out, with your indulgence, that the consensus of opinion seems to be that the administration and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation have been successful in restoring the confidence of the people in banks and have accomplished great results in rebuilding the entire banking structure of the country. It seems to me that insurance of deposits has dispelled the fear that gripped the Nation's depositors, winning at the same time the respect of bankers in rural communities and business centers as well. I think this is borne out by the regular reports received in Washington from the State directors of the National Emergency Council. These reports, I may say, represent an impartial cross section of public opinion throughout the country. A summary of those submitted for the month of March, the last date for which this information is available, indicates that in no State has an unfavorable reaction to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation been noted. Thirty-five State directors reported definitely favorable reactions. As a matter of fact, many of them said that the Corporation is generally conceded the most universally helpful of the various recovery measures. I mention this not in the spirit of boastfulness but merely to call your attention to the fact that the principle of Federal insurance of deposits has seemingly worked very successfully and is being well received throughout the country.

I am very happy to be able to tell you that the reports from your own States have been most gratifying. In West Virginia the report was that the public reaction to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation quite sympathetic and deposit insurance has stimulated confidence in banking institutions. In Ohio the report to Washington was: "program has been exceptionally beneficial and remains least criticized of all emergency agencies." Of like tenor is the reaction in Pennsylvania. The State director of the emergency council wrote that the principle has functioned very successfully and restored confidence. It would be both selfish and unfair for me to claim that this favorable public opinion was all due to the F. D. I. C. I can tell you in all honesty and sincerity that much credit is due to your own State supervising authorities and a large percentage of the bankers in your own individual States of West Virginia, Ohio, and Pennsylvania. We have had very fine cooperation from the superintendent of banks in West Virginia and Ohio. Their criticisms have been constructive and they have exhibited a genuine desire to be of help. We at the F. D. I. C. are much indebted to them.

Dr. Luther Harr, the new superintendent of banks of Pennsylvania, has made a splendid start and has been assisting us in every way possible.

Coming now to figures and facts in which you are no doubt mostly interested, I think if I were to discuss your individual States separately it would be most satisfactory for all concerned. Unless you have other suggestions I will start with West Virginia.

Our latest figures show that as of October 1, 1934, 168 banks belong to the Temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund out of a total of 179 banks licensed to do business in that State. The insured banks are classified as follows: 72 State banks, 78 national banks, 18 State banks members of the Federal Reserve System.

These banks had total deposits of over $213,000,000, of which $140,000,000 were insured; 717,411 depositors out of a total number of 722,420 are fully insured. In other words, 99.31 percent were fully covered under the present $5,000 limit of insurance. You can, therefore, see that there is small justification for raising the coverage of insurance. This comment is applicable for the other States of Ohio and Pennsylvania.

From 1921 to 1934, inclusive, 130 banks with total deposits of over $77,000,000 suspended operations. Since the insurance of deposits became effective, on January 1, 1934, not one insured bank has closed in West Virginia.

In 1921 West Virginia had 350 active banks with $316,000,000 in deposits. In 1934 it had 179 banks with $219,000,000 in deposits. Through the combined efforts of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the sacrifices and contributions made by local communities, the F. D. I. C. has been able to assist in the rebuilding of 72 insured banks in West Virginia. The R. F. C.'s investment in these 72 banks amounts to $5,100,000.

Three hundred and fifty-two thousand dollars has been paid by the West Virginia banks by way of assessments for their deposit insurance.

You gentlemen from West Virginia may well feel proud of the way your banks have cooperated in a movement to protect the money of depositors.

The figures relating to Ohio are equally enlightening and just as reassuring. Out of a total of 686 licensed banks, 672 are insured. Of these, 252 are national banks, 352 are State banks not members of the Federal Reserve System, and 68 are State member banks. The insured banks have total deposits of $1,512,465,000, of which $848,932,000 are insured; 2,943,769 out of a total of 2,976,625 depositors are fully insured. In terms of percentage this amounts to 98.90 percent. For the 1921-34 period, 239 Ohio banks suspended, involving deposits of almost $329,000,000. This is an average suspension per year of 17 banks with deposits of twenty-three and one-half millions. Up to date we have had no failure of any insured bank in Ohio.

There has been a very sizable reduction in the number of active banks in Ohio during the past 14 years. In 1921 there were 1,132 active banks with deposits of $1,800,000,000. In 1934 there were 686 active banks having deposits of $1,500,000,000. These facts exclude three mutual savings banks, which are insured, with total deposits of $110,000,000.

The R. F. C. has put almost $72,000,000 in 350 insured Ohio banks. Our Corporation collected up to December 31, 1934, $2,349,000 in assessments from Ohio banks.

I understand that business conditions in Ohio are much improved and that there is a general better feeling throughout the State. If these conditions continue, I would expect to see the Ohio banks, and this is true of West Virginia and the Pennsylvania banks also, start to make money—as it seems to me with a recovery in their bond list they will be in a fine position to make profitable loans.

Pennsylvania has more insured banks than any other State in the Union. I suppose, therefore, I should make a special bow to the Pennsylvania delegation. There are 1,083 licensed banks in Pennsylvania. Of these, 1,072 were insured on October 1, 1934. The insured banks were divided into 704 national banks, 295 State banks, and 73 State banks which were members of the Federal Reserve System. The insured banks had total deposits of $3,679,542,000. Insured deposits amounted to $1,718,331,000. Insured depositors numbered 5,581,606; 5,505,143 were fully insured. Putting it another way, 98.63 percent of the depositors were fully covered by the $5,000 limit.

We have had one insured bank fail in Pennsylvania. We were able to pay the insured depositors their money within 10 days after legal complications involving a State law were removed. The Bank of America Trust Co. had deposits of over $1,000,000, of which $318,837 were insured. The Corporation was not appointed a receiver for this bank, and so has not as yet received any dividend. We estimate, however, that there will be an eventual recovery of around $106,000. This record of failures contrasts sharply with the number of banks which failed from 1921 to 1934 in Pennsylvania. During that time 243 banks shut their doors and had deposits of over $148,000,000.

In keeping with the tendency elsewhere Pennsylvania had reduced the number of active banks from 1,607 in 1921 to 1,083 in 1934, with comparative deposits of $3,500,000,000 in 1921 to three and seven-tenths billions in 1934. Mutual savings banks were not included in those figures. There are 7 in Pennsylvania with deposits of $522,000,000. Of the 7, 2 are insured, with total deposits of $5,000,000.

I hope that these figures have not bored you and they have given you some idea of the extent and influence of the F. D. I. C. in your own home State.

The following information will help you to complete the entire picture of deposit insurance:

On January 1, 1935, 14,212 banks were members of the temporary-insurance fund. There are only about 1,060 commercial banks in the whole United States which are not members. The membership is made up of the following classes of banks: 7,702 State nonmember banks, 5,462 national banks, 980 State member banks, and 68 mutual savings banks.

As of October 1, 1934, the last date for which these figures are available, 14,125 banks belonging to the fund had 51,250,000 depositors. Fifty million four hundred thousand depositors were fully insured. Only 800,000 were partly insured. The 14,125 banks had total deposits of over $37,000,000,000, of which $16,500,000,000 were insured. This tremendous financial liability of the Corporation is equal to more than half of the total debt of the United States Government.

During our examinations we discovered that many banks had a weak capital structure—so we set out to correct this unhealthy condition. As you all know, the deposit liability of a bank should not be grossly out of proportion to its unimpaired capital. In accordance with this principle the yardstick of $1 of unimpaired capital for every $10 of deposits was largely used in determining whether banks were safe risks for their depositors and the Corporation. Up to December 31, 1934, 5,451 banks received additional capital amounting to $851,296,000. Of this number 1,759 were national banks and 3,692 were State banks. The R. F. C. contributed $440,827,000 to the national banks and $410,469,000 to the State banks.

I trust that all of you will view our problems with the sympathetic understanding of what we are trying to accomplish for bank depositors everywhere—not only in the big metropolitan centers but also in the small banks in the rural communities. I think you will agree with me when I say that deposit insurance is neither partisan nor political and is interwoven into the economic and financial life of almost half of our population. Naturally, those of us who are charged with its administration are anxious for your support and assistance.

REPLY TO AN ARTICLE IN THE NEWS-WEEK, NEW YORK CITY

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter referring to a news article written by a colleague of mine from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter written by my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CANNON].

The NEWS-WEEK,

Rockefeller Center, New York, N. Y.

GENTLEMEN: My attention has been called to an article concerning me, published in your issue of May 18. The apparent bold attempt of this article to injure me by innuendo and flagrant misstatement of facts is such that I find it necessary to reply.

No. 1. To begin with, you state, among other things, that "Representative CANNON protested to police after being held at jail for 3 hours, posting a bond and forfeiting it by failing to appear in court."

This matter was never presented to any court nor was I requested by anyone to appear in court. It was simply a matter involving what I thought was an excessive and exorbitant charge made by a taxicab driver, who, I honestly believe, has some financial relations with the particular police precinct headquarters he drove me to. No charge was made against me respecting my conduct by anyone in the station until I made the charge that I believed officers of the precinct were cutting in on the exorbitant charges that I was coerced into paying.

Whereupon two or three officers frantically leaped from their chairs saying "Keep him here until the lieutenant arrives!"

You knew that just prior to this incident a District committee, comprised wholly of Congressmen, made a report after a thorough and extensive investigation into the activities of the police in Washington. The report stated that members of the police department were not only inefficient but were corrupt. Leopards do not change their spots overnight.

Of course, when you set out on your orgy of vilification and libel you cannot be expected to inject any matter into your stories that will destroy their prime purpose.

No. 2. Your article also states that last year "Representative CANNON injured three members of the New York Stock Exchange while driving his car. Police claim he hit and ran."

You know that the facts are as follows: Three members of the New York Stock Exchange, after having attended a party, hurried into a taxicab at the Willard Hotel to go to the Union Depot. The taxicab driver made a left-hand turn directly in front of my car when I was so close I could not stop. The damage to my car was trivial. The bumper was wrapped around the front wheel so tightly that I could not drive away if I wanted to. A garage man was called to adjust the bumper, so that my car could be driven. I remained at the scene of the accident for 45 minutes. In fact, I went to the hospital and talked to the only member of the party who was injured, who was suffering from an injured nose. No charge was ever made against me, and, notwithstanding the fact that I carried heavy insurance, the driver of the cab made no claim. Two outstanding lawyers who were riding with me talked at length with a policeman, and the occupants of the cab, and the following day the police requested me to swear to a warrant against the driver, which I refused to do.

No. 4: You state further "Before that he defended Representative Shoemaker, of Wisconsin, against charges of assaulting a taxicab driver. Shoemaker defaulted by failing to appear."

You know that this is deliberately false. Because of the fact that ex-Congressman Shoemaker represented the State of Minnesota, I presume that you thought you would make your story stronger by saying he was a Representative from Wisconsin, as I represent Wisconsin. The only case in which I ever represented Shoemaker he appeared in court, testified before a jury, and after hours of deliberation the jury disagreed. You know this to be a fact.

No. 5: You further state, "Back in 1919 CANNON defended Joe Jackson, of the Chicago White Sox, in the bribery scandals. Later Wisconsin disbarred him, then reinstated him."

Again you deliberately lie. I did not defend Joe Jackson in bribery scandals in 1919. I had no connection with that case whatsoever, and the record bears me out. I did represent Joe Jackson in 1922 in a civil action, in which he was the plaintiff and the Chicago American League Baseball Club were defendants. A jury of 12 men and women, after 6 weeks trial, returned a verdict of $19,000. Understand that this case was not prosecuted on the theory that Joe Jackson had no connection with the 1919 scandal, but upon the theory that in the spring following the scandal, Charles A. Comiskey, president and owner of the White Sox, caused Joe Jackson to be signed to a contract for a period of 3 years, well knowing, as the records show, Joe Jackson's participation with the so-called "scandal."

And when you say, "Later Wisconsin disbarred him", you again falsify, because I was merely temporarily suspended. You knew that the people of the State of Wisconsin were so incensed that the State legislature overwhelmingly, in an unprecedented procedure, restored my license, and shortly thereafter the supreme court of the State also restored it. You also know, or ought to have known, when you printed that article, that over 100,000 marched to the polls and cast their ballot for me for the highest judicial office in Wisconsin while I was still under suspension from the practice of law. Why didn't you give your readers these facts instead of studiously leaving a vicious and knowingly false inference?

Then, as conclusive proof of your gross carelessness in handling facts, along with the very same article you print a picture of another Member of the House of Representatives who has no connection with this matter whatsoever, showing him in the act of pouring a glass of beer, and giving him my name by printing "Representative CANNON" under the picture.

In the name of decency, how can you justify such willful economy on the truth? What chance has a public official when unscrupulous news writers send stories from Washington throughout the Nation, such as the one you published concerning me? I can conceive of one or two mistakes being made in the publishing of an article, but your entire story is less than 150 words, and yet you deliberately lied in every sentence.

Yours,

RAYMOND J. CANNON.

THE ECONOMIC REVOLUTION

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a copy of a speech I made recently.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert the following speech delivered by me May 8, 1935, at a meeting of the National Union for Social Justice at Cleveland, Ohio:

Mr. Chairman and distinguished guests, ladies, and gentlemen, to share this platform with the leader of the National Union for Social Justice and to be accorded the privilege of addressing this magnificent audience of American citizens is a signal honor.

Since the financial debacle of 1929—thanks to the voice from Royal Oak, Mich.—an intellectual ferment never before witnessed in the history of our Nation has been produced among the rank and file of our citizenry. In language simple and understandable indictments have been drawn against our decadent capitalistic system, which is responsible for our domestic ills. Remedies have been suggested, which in their proper application will prevent a recurrence of these artificially created panics, or depressions, which bring untold suffering and distress to millions of innocent victims. A call to arms has been sounded. Thanks to the militant leadership of Father Charles Coughlin, this meeting tonight is the second of a series in a movement to make articulate the voice of the American people—a voice long silenced into subjection by a small group of selfish financial barons, whose control over our monetary system has resulted in the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few, and whose domination, with few exceptions, over the affairs of our local, State, and National Governments has left the unorganized mass of our people in a virtual state of political slavery.

This movement sponsored by the National Union for Social Justice is comparable to the revolution of the early Colonists. On July 4, 1776, our immortal Declaration of Independence was promulgated. In protesting against the despotism of King George III, said the Congress:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

Physical force was the only weapon available to the Revolutionary forces to insure the establishment of an independent Republic on these shores. Today, thank God, it is not necessary to resort to bloody revolution to attain governmental reforms. We can, through the orderly process of evolution, by indulging in the right of assembly and petition, suggest to the lawmakers of our country remedies to alter or abolish the abuses that have almost destroyed our present capitalistic system.

We emphatically urge the retention of our constitutional form of government. We can in an orderly manner salvage what is good in our so-called "capitalistic system." Now, what do I mean by that? I mean a more equitable distribution of wealth; the opportunity for those who labor to secure a just and saving wage, not a mere living wage. An animal, a beast of the field, is insured through the bounty of nature a living wage. The opportunity to own a home, and have that home protected from the cruel process of foreclosures; the opportunity to send our children to the finest schools in the world and to secure therein the advantage for greater education; the opportunity to protect our beneficiaries by subscribing to life insurance in sound insurance companies; the opportunity to have our savings protected in sound financial institutions owned and supervised by the Government of the United States; and finally the stabilization of agriculture, industry, and commerce.

These remedies are embodied in the 16 principles enunciated by the National Union for Social Justice. These principles are our modern declaration of independence. They remain unchallenged by a hostile subsidized press. They are the antidote of communism, fascism, and dictatorship. The legislative program of our National Union for Social Justice is expounded to you tonight. We are determined not to be diverted from a militant course of action by the editorial comments or the billingsgate of newspapers or periodicals, who only express their master's viewpoint, and who are not disposed to release their strong hold on the wealth and resources of the Nation.

On March 4, this year, the second anniversary of the inaugural of Franklin D. Roosevelt as the thirty-second President of the United States, it was my privilege, on behalf of this organization, to introduce in the House of Representatives what is now known as the "Nye-Sweeney bill", a measure designed to create a central bank, which shall be known as the "Bank of the United States of America", and to restore to Congress its constitutional power to issue money and regulate the value thereof. On that occasion I read to the House, and I now read to you, an excerpt from a courageous address delivered by the distinguished President of the United States on the steps of the Nation's Capitol when he was sworn in as Commander in Chief of this great Nation:

"Yet our distress comes from no failure of substance. We are stricken by no plague of locusts. Nature still offers her bounty, and human efforts have multiplied it. Plenty is at our doorstep, but a generous use of it languishes in the very sight of the supply. Primarily this is because the rules of the exchange of mankind's goods have failed through their own stubbornness and their own incompetence, have admitted their failure, and abdicated. Practices of the unscrupulous money changers stand indicted in the court of public opinion, rejected by the hearts and minds of men. The money changers have fled from their high seats in the temple of our civilization. We may now restore that temple to the ancient truths. The measure of the restoration lies in the extent to which we apply social values more noble than mere monetary profit. Finally, in our progress toward a resumption of work we require two safeguards against a return of the evils of the old order; there must be a strict supervision of all banking and credits and investments; there must be an end to speculation with other people's money; and there must be provision for an adequate but sound currency."

The Nye-Sweeney bill is designed to end speculation with other people's money. It is designed to provide an adequate and sound currency. It is designed to guard against the return of the evils of the old order, and it is designed to drive "the money changers from the temple of our civilization."

I recognize there is nothing mysterious about the question of money, which is the medium of exchange. We know that 90 percent of all currency is check-book currency or credit money, and not the produce of the mint or Treasury engraver.

In the creation of the Federal Reserve System of 1913 we witnessed an abdication of the power of Congress to issue money and regulate the value thereof, and vested this power in a 100-percent privately owned system.

The Nye-Sweeney bill would create a central bank, which would be a bank of issue and the sole fiscal agent of the Government of the United States, one which would be a central depository of the reserves of all the commercial banks of the United States. Through this measure we aim to establish a uniform system of paper currency in place of the seven types of paper money now in circulation, to wit, Federal Reserve notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, silver certificates, gold certificates, national-bank notes, Treasury notes (1890), United States notes. In this bill we built the principle of democracy in banking. We provide for a management by a board of 48, elected 1 from each State by the people thereof, and modeled after the Senate of the United States. This board will have as active managers an executive committee of seven, and it is contemplated to establish a branch bank of the central bank in every State of the Union.

Frankly, our objective is to break the concentrated power over money and banking which centers in the control of a little group of men in Wall Street. We provide that demand deposits have a 100-percent reserve behind them, thereby destroying the practice indulged by the Federal Reserve System of lending $1,000 in credit money for every $100 on deposit in currency.

The American public is no longer mystified by the operation of this unsound banking system. They realized in 1929, when the banks of this Nation boasted they had $58,000,000,000 in deposits, that this was not money in the sense of currency; that the fifty-eight billion merely represented the right to withdraw fifty-eight billion; that the fifty-eight billion never existed, for there was never a full billion dollars in actual currency in the banks of this Nation. We aim to stabilize the currency by the control, and the study of the statistical agencies in every branch of the Government, to insure that a dollar of our money, whether currency or credit, will represent from year to year and from generation to generation an equitable and stable buying power, freeing us from those periods of expansion and contraction, of inflation and deflation, such as the present, with their economic and financial destruction.

Time does not permit a more extended survey of this measure, and I yield to the speakers who are to follow. To this movement we ask you to dedicate every ounce of energy that you have. This organization constitutes a people's lobby speaking for those who have felt the lash of the depression, which is still with us, by exercising our constitutional right to urge the Congress of the United States to consider and place on the statute books the same legislative measure discussed here this evening to the end that our Government will be responsive to those who are the very background of its existence.

Many of us will be agreeably surprised if the controlled newspapers of the country even dignify, by publicizing, favorable comment of the activities of the National Union for Social Justice. On the contrary we may expect a torrent of abuse and criticism of this progressive movement. Bandits do not surrender voluntarily only when the strong arm of the law shut off escape do they submit to capture. From this night on the strong arm of public opinion will assert itself. Controlled political parties and political bosses cannot ignore the legitimate demands for governmental reform that come from millions of citizens in distress through no fault of their own. The privileged few have controlled in the past because they have a contempt for the intelligence of the average voter. Their motto has been the motto of King Louis XI of France "divide et impera" ("divide and govern").

Principles transcend party loyalty. Greed and selfishness will only disappear when the zeal for social justice becomes the course of our everyday existence. Cooperation and unity of purpose insures that objective.

THE INSTITUTE OF FOREST GENETICS, PLACERVILLE, CALIF.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on an item in the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, on page 9 of the House Report of the Agriculture Department and Farm Credit Administration appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1936, just passed, under the title "Forest Management", is set out an appropriation of $50,000 for the operation of the Institute of Forest Genetics, at Placerville, Calif., an existing institution heretofore maintained by private funds, which the Agriculture Department is acquiring.

On February 27, 1935, I appeared before the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives and urged that the Institute of Forest Genetics of Placerville, Calif., be taken over by the United States Department of Agriculture and in the future operated for the good of all of the people of this country. I am, therefore, happy to explain to the House the purpose of the $50,000 that was included in the bill, which will be approximately the annual cost of maintaining the station, and the valuable results that will accrue therefrom by the Government taking over the institute. It is the only institute of its kind in the world and its location in the United States is of great value to our problem of reforestation.

The institute was first established in 1925 as the Eddy Tree Breeding Station, by James G. Eddy, of Seattle, Wash., whose family for three successive generations has been engaged in the lumbering industry in several parts of the country. Such a broad background gave Mr. Eddy a deep insight into the reforestation problem of the country and an appreciation of the need for increasing the growth rate of forest trees and the technical qualities of their wood. He realized how rapidly the Nation's timber supplies were being depleted and how inferior was the wood from the open stands to that obtained from old-growth timber.

Searching about for ways and means of improving the situation, Mr. Eddy besought the advice of his old friend Mr. Luther Burbank, the famous plant wizard, of Santa Rosa, Calif., as to what should be done. It was natural that out of their discussion came the thought that forest trees might be improved even as Mr. Burbank had been able to improve potatoes, roses, and berry bushes. Just about this time Mr. Burbank had perfected a marvelously fast-growing walnut which yielded a heavy crop. The idea aroused much enthusiasm in the mind of Mr. Eddy, who saw that by breeding or crossing various forest trees it would be possible for him to do something really new in forestry and to accomplish something outstanding for the forest industries of the country. The more he studied the situation the more the idea appealed to him and the more certain he was that by applying the long-known principles of selection and breeding it would be possible to increase the yield and quality of forest products.

The urgent need for such studies was readily apparent to Mr. Eddy. He knew that there was in excess of 80,000,000 acres of forest land that had been denuded by fire and cutting, and that there were many million acres more of submarginal land available for forest planting. He realized, too, that the task of replanting such a large area was beyond the realm of possibilities in one person's lifetime. The land was ready for reforestation, but natural reforestation takes place slowly, and in the meanwhile communities suffered because the resources on which they had depended had been depleted. Millions of acres of potential forest land lay idle because the growth of plantations established with available species and strains yielded only a low return on the investment.

Mr. Eddy also knew that there was hardly a single field of forestry that did not have a real and urgent need for the results of genetical studies such as the proposed Institute of Forest Genetics would carry on. Because of inferior quality of woods available for many purposes the wood-using industries were more or less dissatisfied with the raw materials furnished by our present forests.

Mr. Eddy appreciated, also, that leaving inferior seed trees was probably reducing the quality growth of the forest. In forestry, as in animals, the poor mothers gave their inferior characteristics to their offspring, resulting in crooked and misshapen growth, knotty lumber, twisted grain, or even in wood of low strength. Young stands from poor seed trees probably resulted also in slow growth and in susceptibility to insects and disease. The young trees probably would not be very resistant to frost or to drought.

Then, too, in common with other men versed in forest lore, Mr. Eddy knew that the resin, tannin, and sugar yields from forest trees could be greatly improved by proper selection. With variations of 200 and 300 percent in the gum and tannin yield from adjoining trees in the same forest it should be possible to breed only the high-yielding trees so as to obtain a race of pines that would produce large quantities of resin of high value.

So, also, the needs were similarly great for figured wood for furniture and for veneers, for wood of outstanding durability, for wood that would withstand termite attacks or decay. Such a wide variety of needs for specialty products as well as for timber of great strength, lent Mr. Eddy the enthusiasm required to put his idea over.

Mr. Eddy, appreciating these problems and convinced not only of the potentialities in genetical research but also of its practical application, decided that the time was ripe for studies such as Mr. Burbank's, which had amazed the world. The financing of the studies he himself assumed, feeling that they merited a substantial portion of the earnings from his lumbering enterprises. He realized, furthermore, that ideally, genetical research with forest trees should be carried on simultaneously in all forest regions of the country.

Since the work was being privately financed, however, this was impossible. Therefore a careful research was made throughout the United States for a location with a climate that would meet the favorable climatic conditions of the country and a deep and uniform soil and adequate moisture supply. Such a location was found at Placerville, Calif., in the foothills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. In addition to satisfying the exacting requirements this location had the added advantage in that within 50 miles of the institute's headquarters climatic differences can be found equal to those obtained in a thousand miles of latitude. Here under ideal conditions Mr. Eddy established the Eddy tree breeding station in 1925.

In selecting the species on which to concentrate intensive work Mr. Eddy was confronted with a staggering number of species of trees. The United States alone boasts of over 200 tree species. From this bewildering number the pines were selected. They occur in all the forest regions of the country and represent about 40 species, of which nearly half are to be found in California. Furthermore, the pines are among the world's most valuable trees, because they furnish nearly half of the world's timber consumption.

Having decided on the field of work, the first step undertaken by the station was the collection of pine seed from all over the world. The entire Northern Hemisphere was searched for promising species. The aid of famous botanic gardens, such as those of New York, Madrid, and Moscow, was enlisted. Scientific organizations and societies gave willing help. The United States consuls joined in the quest for exotic species. India, Palestine, Spain, China, Guatemala, the Canary Islands—40 different countries in all—sent seeds of their native pines, and all of the forest regions of the United States. Seed was obtained from localities within the range of many species so that tests could be made of racial varieties.

During the first year of actual seed sowing, 58 species were to be found in the station's nursery. The second year the number had been increased to 87 species, and at the present time there are 100 distinct species of pines growing in the arboretum. This is by far the largest and most complete collection of growing pines to be found anywhere in the world.

After making every effort to grow and maintain the trees under uniform conditions, careful and complete records were started to cover every phase of growth of each tree from seed source, through nursery beds and field planting, to the final maturity. As the trees grow, records are to include the measurement of height, diameter, size, and extent of limbs, form, hardness to frost, flowering, fruiting, and so forth.

The work of the station, however, went much further than the mere collecting of interesting species, the establishment of an arboretum, and observations on the specimens grown. The primary purpose of the arboretum is to provide trees for further studies of hybridization and methods of selection. The very earliest work which the institute undertook along these lines has already yielded valuable results. So striking are the differences noted in vigor and habit of growth that it is apparent general application of even the elementary principles of seed selection will be of incalculable value in the Nation's reforestation program. Progeny of certain individual trees have been found to grow so much more rapidly than the average that it is safe to predict substantial reductions in the growing time of a planted forest as the result of scientific selection of seed sources. Vigorous trees located through the progeny tests provide a seed source of immediate value, and to provide superior seed in large quantities for future reforestation. Plantations of rapid-growing strains will be established in localities where there is no danger of pollination from unselected trees. Hybrids between the fast-growing but tender Monterey pine and the slower-growing but hardy knobcone pine show a great improvement in frost hardness with but a slight loss in growth rate.

Another contribution of early work on hybridization is the knowledge of age of flowering and fruiting. It has commonly been supposed that pines did not bear fertile flowers and seeds until 15 or 20 years old. At the institute, however, Japanese red pines bore fertile seed at 2 years of age. Trees from these seeds are now growing in the arboretum. With such early fruiting it will be entirely possible to reduce by many years the time required in hybrid studies. Once the hybrids have been developed, plantations to be used as sources of seed will be established in locations where cross pollination from other trees is impossible.

While experimental work and the search for fast-growing hybrids and exotics goes on, another phase fully as important is in progress. This is the work dealing with selected parent and progeny tests. For these studies the ponderosa pine of the Western States was selected for first attention. Seed has been collected from carefully measured and described trees. Seedlings grown in nurseries from this pedigreed seed are carefully measured and the growth rates compared. One such test included seeds from 765 individual trees in 12 States. Even in the nurseries, when the seedlings were only 2 years old, great differences were observable. Growth rate of the progeny appears to be linked not only with racial strain of parent but also with the site quality where the parent trees were grown. The hereditary vigor of seedlings from seeds collected on the best sites was 71 percent greater than that of seedlings whose parents grew on poor sites. The results of these studies are of immediate value in indicating desirable sources of seed to be used in reforestation. They have a very great value furthermore in locating the best parents for hybridization work with native forest-grown trees.

At first there were those who, not having a knowledge of the forestry needs of the Nation or a vision of what could be accomplished, did not believe in such an ambitious undertaking as that Mr. Eddy was sponsoring. Some of his friends ridiculed the idea that forest trees could be bettered, that faster growth could be obtained, that better quality wood could be produced through tree breeding. Gradually the criticism gave way to wonder as the work gave promise of new things, of new developments. Foresters and scientists throughout America and from abroad heard of the work and many visitors found their way into Placerville.

Now visitors find a nursery with thousands of little trees, mostly pines, growing in rows. Some are tall, some short, some are stiff and straight, others weak and bushy. There were crossings between the valuable yellow pine or ponderosa pine of the Sierras with the rapid-growing slash pine, the world-famous naval-stores producing tree of Florida. There were crosses between the Monterey pine of the Santa Cruz Mountains with the stout pitch pine of the New Jersey sand plains. Other crosses there are between Asiatic, European, and American forest trees. Some of these crosses produce trees that grow far more rapidly than either parent, and some may produce gums and resins that may revolutionize American uses of these products.

The outstanding results and the potential value of the station made it necessary for Mr. Eddy to obtain outside help. To obtain the best scientific guidance and advice, to procure the best assistance, and to enlist the greatest possible support from scientists and laymen alike, he decided to expand the work on an even greater scale. Consequently, a national board of trustees was selected, and the name changed from the Eddy Tree Breeding Station to the Institute of Forest Genetics. To this board of trustees Mr. Eddy unselfishly gave up all rights he might have in the station, so that it would have full opportunity to develop along the most approved lines and with the utmost freedom. Furthermore, Mr. Eddy continued to give of his resources for its continuance. The soundness of the institute's program and the breadth of interest in the work is attested by the national prominence and the diversity of interest of the outstanding public-spirited citizens who accepted places on the board. These men are listed as follows:

Walter Mulford, professor of forestry and head of the division of forestry, University of California; past president Society of American Foresters, Berkeley, Calif.

Swift Berry, manager Michigan-California Lumber Co.; member of the California State Board of Forestry, Camino, Eldorado County, Calif.

Lloyd Austin, director Institute of Forest Genetics, Placerville, Eldorado County, Calif.

Donzel Stoney, manager Title Insurance & Guaranty Co., San Francisco, Calif.

Dr. Earle H. Clapp, in charge branch of research, United States Forest Service, Washington, D. C.

Dr. William Crocker, director Boyce Thompson Institute for Plant Research, Yonkers, N. Y.

Ralph S. Hosmer, professor of forestry and head of the department of forestry, Cornell University; past president Society of American Foresters, Ithaca, N. Y.

James G. Eddy, lumberman, founder of the Institute of Forest Genetics, Seattle, Wash.

Dr. David Fairchild, president American Genetic Association, plant explorer, author, Coconut Grove, Fla.

H. S. Gilman, manager San Dimas Water Co., member of the California State Board of Forestry, San Dimas, Calif.

Col. William B. Greeley, secretary-manager West Coast Lumbermen's Association; Chief Forester, United States Forest Service, 1920-28, Seattle, Wash.

Dr. Donald Forsha Jones, geneticist, Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station; editor Genetics, New Haven, Conn.

James A. Irving, president Placerville Fruit Growers' Association; secretary California Fruit Exchange, Placerville, Eldorado County, Calif.

A. Stanwood Murphy, president Pacific Lumber Co., San Francisco, Calif.

Walter A. Starr, Edward L. Eyre & Co.; council member Save-the-Redwoods League, San Francisco, Calif.

Dr. Robert E. Swain, acting president Stanford University, Stanford University, Calif.

Don Tresidder, president Yosemite Park & Curry Co., Yosemite National Park, Calif.

Dr. Thomas Hunt Morgan, president California Institute of Technology, Pasadena, Calif.

The trustees of the institute have announced their willingness to turn the institute over to the Federal Government for continuance. It is their feeling that this work, which is long time in character and for broad public benefit, should be maintained by the Federal Government. They, as well as Mr. Eddy, have announced their willingness to give the property, buildings, and other improvements, as well as all their rights, to the United States. Such a gift, valued at least at $250,000, gives to the Nation an unparalleled opportunity to avail itself of a research institution with unlimited possibilities and potentialities in a new field of forestry endeavor.

As a Federal undertaking, it will be possible to unify the work in forest genetics and to correlate and coordinate activities so as to prevent overlapping or duplication of effort.

The work is truly national in scope and will return a thousandfold the amount required annually to maintain it. The results will enhance the economic desirability of reforestation and sustained yield management and will make for stabilization of industries and communities.

The taking over of the Institute of Forest Genetics of Placerville, Calif., by the Federal Government, and the provision for appropriations to carry on the work is an important step in this Nation's program of reforestation.

JOHN MARSHALL, JURIST AND STATESMAN

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks a speech by the Honorable James M. Beck, a former Member of this House and former Solicitor General of the United States, delivered at a memorial on the one-hundredth anniversary of the death of John Marshall at Richmond, Va., under the auspices of the Richmond Bar Association, the Virginia Historical Society, and the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, at Richmond, Va., May 11, 1935. Accompanying this speech is an estimate from the Public Printer as to the cost to print it as required by the rules of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an address delivered at the memorial exercises, commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Chief Justice John Marshall, held under the auspices of the Richmond Bar Association, the Virginia Historical Society, and the Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, at Richmond, Va., May 11, 1935, by Hon. James M. Beck, former Solicitor General of the United States, as follows:

We are met today, my fellow citizens, to honor the memory of a very great man. One hundred years ago at Mrs. Crim's boarding house at Fifth and Walnut Streets, Philadelphia, an old man, as full of years as honors, was slowly dying. Years before he had experienced that compensation of long life, of which Prince Bismarck once said that it makes one "indifferent to hatred, insult, and calumny, while one's capacity for good will and love is increased." It did not need the winter of age to give John Marshall this noble serenity of mind, for throughout his long and illustrious career he had been sustained by that conscious integrity of purpose, which made him indifferent to either the censure or praise of his fellowmen.

His mind was clear in those last days, and we can well believe that with mental vigor unimpaired to the very last, he spent the weary days of his last illness in thinking of the past. It is probable that his mind dwelt but little upon his last 35 years, in which he had been the storm center of passionate strife, for the memories of old men generally recur to the events of earlier years. That which met his eye as he looked out of the window of his Walnut Street room would in itself tend to recall the heroic memories of the epic period of America.

Across Independence Square he could see the belfry of the State House, now called "Independence Hall", from which, as from Pharos, the light of liberty had shone to the uttermost parts of the world. From hour to hour he would hear the solemn sounds of the bell in the tower, a bell already sacred to America, for from the very moment of its casting in 1752 it had been a sonorous prophecy of America's destiny. The bell had been cast in England, but the city fathers of Philadelphia had requested the makers to put upon the bell the historic message, "Proclaim liberty throughout the land and unto all the inhabitants thereof." Nobly it had fulfilled that mission, for it had announced the coming of the First and Second Continental Congresses and had sent forth a pean of triumph when the Declaration of Independence was first read to the people. As post riders brought the sad intelligence of the early defeats of Washington's untrained army, the bell would mourn the dead who had fallen in battle, and later sound a note of triumph when the news of Washington's victories at Monmouth and Yorktown came to the historic Capital.

As the dying Marshall witnessed the sun setting in the direction of Valley Forge he must have thought of that dreadful winter in whose privations he had shared when the few soldiers who remained in Washington's army stained the new-fallen snow with the blood of their naked feet. Marshall must have thought, in those last days, of the great leader who had held together the little remnant of the Continental Army at Valley Forge, and whose courage and self-sacrificing devotion to his Nation had left so deep an impression upon Marshall's character.

We cannot doubt that Marshall's mind in those last days went back to his well-loved Virginia, the mother of superlatively great sons, where he desired his remains to rest forever. He was the child of its frontier. His education had been very limited. He had lived close to the heart of nature and its simplicity had formed his character. The dying Marshall in Philadelphia was not among strangers. Much of his life had been spent in Philadelphia, and there he was held in the highest honor. He had fought beyond its gates at Germantown and Brandywine, had seen the sun which set at Valley Forge in dark clouds rise resplendent on the wooded vales of Monmouth. Later he had served as a Member of the First Congress, when the historic city was the Capital of the Nation.

From Philadelphia he had gone to France, and had met the corrupt demands of its government by vindicating the dignity of the infant Republic in the policy of "millions for defense but not one cent for tribute." In Philadelphia he had been received with general acclaim on his return from France. No two cities can have a greater claim to the enduring reputation of John Marshall than Richmond and Philadelphia, and this circumstance may give some propriety to my selection as the speaker of this occasion—an honor of which I am duly sensible—for I am a Philadelphian and proud of my membership in its historic bar, which honored him when he died, accompanied his remains to Richmond and initiated the movement for the erection of a statue in Washington to commemorate his services. A commission was given to William Wetmore Story, an eminent sculptor, who by a happy coincidence was the son of that Justice Story who was Marshall's great yoke-fellow in the Supreme Court. It was my privilege, in turn, to present to the city of Philadelphia a replica of that statue. I mention the fact because one other replica of that statue should be made and presented by the Congress of the United States to the city of Richmond.

In Philadelphia John Marshall died, and 2 days later, with all the pomp and ceremony that truly attends the passing of a hero, his body was borne from his temporary home to Richmond.

"For his passage
The soldiers' music and the rites of war
Spoke loudly for him."

Then followed an incident of epic beauty. The Historic Liberty Bell tolled the passage of the body to Market Street wharf, and having rendered this last and sacred service, suddenly became silent forever. A great rift took place in its iron side. Its eloquent voice ended with that of Marshall.

Those last solemn notes marked not only the passing of Marshall but also the end of a great and heroic era. While a few of the great actors in the drama of American independence still survived, for example, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, and James Madison, yet with the passing of Marshall an era ended which had begun with the founding in 1607 of representative government in Virginia. Thus the death of Marshall measured a period of 228 years, during which the American Commonwealth had been molded by successive generations of Americans in the free spirit of the pioneer. This formative period had its climax when the ablest men of the Colonies met in Philadelphia to attempt the unprecedented task of drafting a comprehensive form of government of a type theretofore unknown in history. It was not enough for the master architects to provide the ground plan for the majestic edifice of constitutional liberty, which the genius of the American people was to erect. It was John Marshall's great privilege to supervise the erection of the superstructure in accordance with the plans of the master builders, and when he had completed this task by his masterful interpretations of the Constitution in his service of 34 years as Chief Justice of the United States, the task of constructing "an indissoluble union of indestructible States" had been completed, let us hope and pray, for all time. Of that era it may be said that few nobler dramas have ever been enacted "upon the stage of this wide and universal theater of man."

Who can deny the great part that was enacted in that drama by the sons of Virginia? Let us remember that the Elizabethan era was the climax to that mighty cultural movement that is known as the "Renaissance", and Virginia was the last, but not the least, development of that epoch. I have said elsewhere, and now repeat, that it is an unfortunate error to regard the birthday of our Nation as July 4, 1776. Thereby we gained a new status and a new name, but the American Commonwealth began with the first settlement in Virginia, and was thus born of the "spacious days of Queen Elizabeth", after whom this Commonwealth was named. Its early sons were contemporaries of Marlowe and Shakespeare, of Coke and Bacon, of Sydney and Jonson, of Drake and Frobisher, of Raleigh and Sandys, of Pembroke and Southampton. Small as Virginia was, and limited as were its cultural resources, what infant Commonwealth in a like period of time, and in the field of government, ever gave birth to so many great men? Thomas Jefferson and Patrick Henry, John Marshall and James Madison, James Monroe and Edmund Randolph, George Mason and Richard Henry Lee, and last and greatest, that noble son, whose reputation overtops all Americans, and who is one of the supreme immortals of history, George Washington. While any prediction as to the illimitable future is generally hazardous, it is probable and possibly certain that in the field of leadership no American will ever surpass George Washington, and that in the field of law no judge will ever rival the fame of John Marshall.

Let us consider briefly and necessarily inadequately the significance of John Marshall's work. It is given to few men to rise so high above the clouds of controversy that in a later time only praise is spoken of him. As in the case of Washington, Marshall is so supremely great in his chosen field of activity that all balanced criticism becomes difficult. But if he could guide us in our deliberations today, his love of truth would say, with Othello:

"Speak of me as I am, nothing extenuate
Nor set down aught in malice."

All Americans today praise Marshall, and this blinds us to the fact that it was not so when he was among the living. Today men think of him as having, in his tenure of office, sat in serene and unclouded skies, as upon some mountain peak, below whose summit were the clouds of passionate strife, which touched him not. The fact is that from the beginning of his work as Chief Justice to the very end he was the storm center of as bitter and passionate a political struggle as ever enveloped any judge. Almost his first judicial act provoked a storm of bitter criticism, which raged throughout the whole period of his service, and 34 years later his last days upon the bench witnessed a humiliation when Georgia refused to appear at the bar of his Court in obedience to its summons, and subsequently refused to comply with a decree which the Court had entered.

Nor was Georgia, in this recalcitrance, without sympathy in high places, for the then President of the United States, Andrew Jackson, sarcastically said, "John Marshall has entered his decree. Now let him enforce it." The decree was never enforced, and at the time the prestige of the Supreme Court seemed to be so fatally shattered that John Marshall not only felt that its moral authority was gone but that the existence of the Union itself was in peril.

Writing in 1832 to Story, who then doubted the perpetuity of the Constitution, Marshall said:

"If the prospects of our country inspire you with gloom, how do you think a man must be affected who partakes of all your opinions and whose geographical position enables him to see a great deal that is concealed from you? I yield slowly and reluctantly to the conviction that our Constitution cannot last. Our opinions are incompatible with a united government, even among ourselves. The Union has been preserved thus far by miracles. I fear they cannot continue."

These words may be profitably recalled by those Americans, of whom I unhappily am one, who today share the same doubts, but the Constitution did survive the crisis of 1832. While this is largely due to Marshall, yet it also owes much to Andrew Jackson.

No Chief Justice of the United States has ever been assailed as bitterly as was John Marshall, and yet when he died, friend and foe, almost without exception, united in a tribute of praise to a courageous and incorruptible judge. Throughout all these stormy years John Marshall serenely pursued the even tenor of his ways. He had able associates, and yet he was the very soul of the Court. He rendered decision after decision which gravely challenged the constitutional theories of the great political party which was then almost continuously in power. I know no finer illustration of the noble lines of the poet, Horace, when he describes so eloquently the just man, and concludes:

"The man, in conscious virtue bold
Who dares his secret purpose hold
Unshaken hears the crowds' tumultuous cries
And the impetuous tyrant's angry brow defies.
Let the loud winds, that rule the seas
Tempestuous their wild horrors raise,
Let Jove's dread arm with thunder rend the spheres
Beneath the crash of worlds undaunted he appears."

It is a mistake to suppose that Marshall's opponents were in all respects wrong, and the truth of history justifies the statement that the attacks upon the Supreme Court in Marshall's time were partly attributable to an initial error of the Supreme Court. This is so rarely recognized that it justifies an explanation.

Before Marshall became Chief Justice he was the Secretary of State in the administration of John Adams. That administration had been signally repudiated by the American people. The dying Federalist Party, in which the influence of John Marshall was dominant, resorted to the expedient, which does not admit of justification, of creating a large number of Federal judges with a life tenure, and in the last hours of the Adams administration filling them with avowed Federalists to intrench that party in one branch of the Government. Undoubtedly the despondent followers of Adams and Hamilton sincerely but mistakenly believed that the party of Thomas Jefferson intended to destroy the Constitution, and with high but mistaken motives the Federalists determined to construct in defense of the Constitution a line of impregnable defense in the judiciary. From the calmer standpoint of a later age, we can now see that such an action, whatever its motive, did not accord with the spirit of a democracy.

This coup d'etat—and it was scarcely less—had resulted in acute irritation between the incoming and the outgoing administrations. It involved Marshall, who, as Secretary of State, had signed the commissions of the so-called "midnight judges." Hardly had he taken his seat as Chief Justice when a phase of this bitter controversy came before his Court in the famous case of Marbury v. Madison, and the Supreme Court after deciding that Marbury was entitled to the office, although his commission had not been delivered to him, then proceeded to hold that it was without jurisdiction in that proceeding thus to adjudge the merits of the controversy. The resentment of Jefferson and his followers at this decision was not due to the fact that the Supreme Court thus firmly established its power to disregard a statute, if inconsistent with the Constitution, but was largely animated by the fact that the Court passed upon the merits of the case in which it admitted it had no jurisdiction and thus gave an implied sanction to the policy of the Adams administration in creating, in its closing days, a number of Federal judgeships, and then hastily filling them with appointees of the Federalist Party.

The party of Jefferson was not without some justification in its bitter attacks upon this political coup d'etat, and while the decision of the constitutional question may have saved the Constitution, yet it was unfortunate in that it temporarily compromised the reputation of the Court as a nonpartisan body. Never again did Marshall commit a like error, and its only justification lies in his honest purpose to preserve the Constitution against the excesses of democracy, of which he honestly believed the new administration would be guilty. His fears in this respect were as groundless as were the fears of his political opponents that the Federal judiciary would obstruct the will of the people.

Time, the great justicer, will give a just judgment as to the comparative merits of the two great protagonists, and if its final verdict can be anticipated, it will be that neither was wholly right nor wholly wrong. They were the positive and the negative poles of the Republic's formative period, and these counteracting influences are as necessary in the realm of government as in that of physics. In our political judgments we should always remember the conciliatory words of Thomas Jefferson, in his first inauguration:

"Every difference of opinion is not a difference of principle. We are all Republicans; we are all Federalists."

In this memorable dual between Marshall and Jefferson, great allowance must be made for both protagonists, for this was the formative period of the Republic, and until the new edifice had firmly settled upon its foundations, it was inevitable that there would be acute differences of feeling, as novel questions arose, which would betray both parties to the controversy into temporary errors. Let us not forget that the Constitution of the United States was then a great and an unprecedented experiment, and that the collision of antagonistic theories was inevitable. Indeed the amazing success of the American Constitution is due to the fact that there was this conflict of views, which lessened the danger of extremes in any direction.

In the field of government, as in mechanics, there is always a centripetal and a centrifugal tendency. The real problem, both of mechanics and government, is to coordinate them. It is the greatest merit of the American Constitution that above every other political frame of government, it did coordinate the two tendencies. The real doubt in the minds of the founders was whether the American people would have sufficient genius to carry out the theory of a dual form of government.

This gave rise to two schools of thought.

On the one hand Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, and later James Madison believed that in the practical working of the Government the centripetal tendency would be so powerful that sooner or later the Central Government would absorb the States. We commonly think of Patrick Henry as only an orator, but his masterful argument in the Virginia ratifying convention clearly foresaw the ever-increasing centralization of the last half century, and his fears were emphasized by Jefferson and Madison.

On the other hand, Washington and Hamilton were fearful that the centrifugal tendency in proud and self-conscious States would be so great that sooner or later the Central Government would disintegrate and become as impotent as the old Confederation. In their own day their fears were justified.

The distinguishing merit of John Marshall as Chief Justice was that he, more than any other American, coordinated these conflicting tendencies. If he asserted in one opinion the authority of the Central Government, he asserted, with equal force, the rights of the States.

Today there is no centrifugal tendency to coordinate the centripetal tendency due in large part to a mechanical civilization. The two historic parties vie with each other in centralizing the Government, with the result that the centripetal tendency has largely destroyed the centrifugal, and we have today in fact, although not in theory, a portentous approach to a totalitarian socialistic state.

The justification of any man or party must be measured in part by the immediate necessities of the times. In Marshall's day the mind of America had not yet been either adapted to or reconciled with the idea of a central government. It required the deliberation of nearly 4 months to induce the Constitutional Convention to create a central government which, within its carefully prescribed sphere, would be a nation and not a league of states. The Convention was so largely a compromise that on its last day few members were disposed to sign, as individuals, the draft of the Constitution which was to be submitted to the people. The process of ratification required over a year, and the requisite consent of the nine States was secured with the very greatest difficulty, and in some States only by dubious methods. The people were still jealous, as they had always been, of any central power, and when the Constitution was finally adopted it became a vital necessity, if it were to survive, that the Supreme Court should give to the grants of power a reasonably liberal construction.

This was the sublime task of John Marshall. Largely due to his influence, the Supreme Court, in a long series of pioneer decisions, welded together the discordant States into the "indissoluble Union of Indestructible States." To do this required something more than a knowledge of the law. Statesmanship of the highest order was imperatively necessary, and above all it required the prestige of an incorruptible and impartial judiciary. While Marshall's first great decision had temporarily compromised this reputation, yet his calm reasoning, his well-balanced judgment, and the acknowledged rectitude of his character soon overcame the temporary prejudice, and by sheer force of reasoning his interpretation finally triumphed; but in acknowledging this triumph a later generation should recognize that Marshall's opponents were also justified in their apprehension that the words of the Constitution, if too liberally construed, could be destructive of the rights of the States.

Each party to this great controversy over constitutional rights therefore rendered a service to the Nation in its formative stage. The fears which Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, and James Madison had in respect to the undue development of Federal power have had their fullest vindication in the realities of the last 50 years.

Marshall's great decisions, now so universally applauded, owed much, not merely to the arguments of Webster and Wirt, Pinkney and Blinney, but also to the watchful vigilance of Jefferson and Madison, who, by criticism and opposition, prevented in their day an excessive development of Federal power. I rejoice that the spirit of these two Virginians is today animating the two Senators from Virginia, who in this era of unprecedented centralization have old-fashioned but true ideas as to the rights of the States.

Marshall was the great advocate of the doctrine, subsequently emphasized by Webster, that the United States was created by the people of the United States and not by the States in their then sovereign capacity. He based this upon the language of the preamble, which says that "We, the people of the United States, . . . do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

In considering this theory it must always be remembered that he did not have the advantage that we have of Madison's Debates, which gives the reason for this language. But while this may have been a false premise to some of his reasoning, yet it was Marshall who said, in McCulloch v. Maryland:

"No political dreamer was ever wild enough to think of breaking down the lines which separate the States and of compounding the American people into one common mass."

Here again was an excusable mistake in history, for if he had been privileged to read the then unpublished records of the Constitutional Convention, he would have seen that Alexander Hamilton did propose that the States should be "extinguished", although he fully recognized that public opinion was not ready for such consolidation.

If Marshall were alive today he would find that in the matter of trade and industry there are not only "political dreamers", confused by the nightmare of the present economic depression, but even responsible statesmen, who would break "down the lines which separate the States" and "compound the American people into one common mass." The Supreme Court will not, I believe, sanction such consolidation.

If John Marshall was a great jurist, he was an even greater statesman. The essence of a statesman is to have that vision, without which it is said on ancient authority that a people will perish. Marshall wrote nearly all of his opinions in the last period of the pastoral-agricultural life of mankind. While the steamship was then beginning to pass as a shuttle between the nations, the railroad was only in its infancy, and gave little assurance of its future dominating influence in civilization. Under these circumstances the Chief Justice in that era of the wheelbarrow and the stagecoach might have given a narrow definition to that interstate commerce which Congress was empowered to regulate. In his wonderful opinion in Gibbons v. Ogden, possibly the greatest of his decisions, Marshall saw the future of our civilization as few men of his generation. He gave to the term "commerce" a definition which "time cannot wither nor custom stale." He seemed to see the future as from a mountain peak. That definition still stands, for only last Monday the Supreme Court, in the Railroad Retirement Case, took occasion to reiterate the doctrine of Marshall in the following words:

"The Federal Government is one of enumerated powers; those not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States or to the people."

Today too many seem to forget this fundamental doctrine, and no one would be more amazed than John Marshall, if he were here today, at some interpretations by the Congress of its powers over interstate commerce, which assert a right to control within the States even the minutiae of production. This great decision of last Monday is a visible reminder that the Constitution, like some Alpine peak, may be obscured for a time by the clouds, but still stands upon its foundation of eternal granite.

The strength of the judiciary has been and will ever be in its continuing power. Presidents come and go, parties organize and dissolve, social and economic conditions change, but the Supreme Court remains a constant factor. As I ventured to say in my book, The Constitution of the United States:

"Like the ocean, the political life of the American Republic is at times placid, with hardly a ripple upon its surface, and then the furious storms of discontent lash the waters into violent and angry seas. But always the Supreme Court stands as a great lighthouse, and even when the waves beat upon it with terrific violence (as in the Civil War, when it was shaken to its very foundation), yet after they have spent their fury, the great lamp of the Constitution—as that of another Pharos—illuminates the troubled surface of the waters with the benignant rays of those immutable principles of liberty and justice, which alone can make a nation free as well as strong."

No institution of our Government has better survived the ordeal of democratic government. None has awakened more the curiosity and admiration of enlightened publicists of all nations. When I was invited to address the Bench and Bar of France in the Cour de Cassation (the highest court of France), and asked upon what feature of the Constitution they wished me to speak, the prompt answer was "the Supreme Court of the United States", and when my book on the Constitution was translated into German, the Chief Justice of the German Republic, who wrote the introduction to the German edition, recorded as his deliberate conviction that the Weimar Constitution of the German Republic would not endure unless the Supreme Court of Germany were given the same power in preserving the Constitution that the Supreme Court of the United States enjoys. This produced a storm of controversy between German jurists, some preferring the English plan of the omnipotence of Parliament and others endorsing the view of Chief Justice Simon as to the advantage of the United States Constitution in making the Supreme Court the political conscience of the Nation in matters of constitutionality. Unfortunately the Weimar Constitution, otherwise an admirable document, made no such provision for the German Republic, and it perished when Hitler destroyed both the legislative and the judicial power.

While the construction of the Constitution was not in some respects difficult, in view of the admirable clarity of its provisions, yet it was necessary to apply it to a country whose rapid growth is one of the wonders of history. Conflicting sectional interests must be reconciled, and the task of harmonizing Federal supremacy within its sphere with the reserved rights of the States was a difficult and unprecedented task. Marshall and his great associates were treading unbeaten paths. It required the genius of a Marshall to do this in a manner that would be acceptable to a people, whose genius was that of democracy, and his supreme achievement is that he did so in a manner that was enduring. This does not mean that all his decisions have stood the test of time. To say that would be mere flattery of the dead. His great decision in the Dartmouth College case has required necessary modifications in later times.

An examination of Marshall's opinions would superficially indicate that all his decisions were in the direction of an extension of Federal power, and this is partly true, but it must be remembered that Marshall also prescribed limitations. For example, take the great case of Brown v. Maryland, where the Chief Justice held that no State can forbid the introduction from another

State of a harmless commodity of commerce in its original package. This was a considerable amplification of the commerce power, but the decision carried with it the necessary implication that before the commodity moved from State to State, the State was within its reserved rights in controlling its production, and that after the imported article had been merged into the mass of domestic commerce by the sale of the original package, then the State had full power in respect to its future use or distribution. Thus Marshall recognized the rights both of the States and of the Federal Government, and the same can be said of many of his decisions, which, in applying the Constitution to the ever-changing economic conditions of America, drew a line of demarcation between Federal and State power.

The judicial spirit in which Marshall interpreted the Constitution was well stated by him in his conduct of the trial of Aaron Burr in this historic city:

"That this Court dares not usurp power is most true. That this Court dares not shrink from its duty is not less true. No man is desirous of becoming the peculiar subject of calumny. No man, might he let the bitter cup pass from him without self-reproach, would drain it to the bottom."

Certainly Marshall never hesitated between these dread alternatives. Whatever else may be said of his decisions, none was ever inspired by fear.

To quote the tribute of a great President of recent times, "Marshall found the Constitution paper and made it power. He found it a skeleton and clothed it with flesh and blood."

By common consent he is the great expounder of the Constitution.

He was not a highly educated man. A child of the frontier, he had had little scholastic education. He did become an active practitioner at the Virginia bar, but his experience as a lawyer could not have been great, measured by the standards of today. His genius was rather that of common sense than of pedantic learning.

He recognized that a written Constitution, no matter how great its clarity, could not be effective for a great and growing people without the power of reasonable interpretation. Long before Justice Holmes said that "language is but the skin of thought", Marshall had said, in McCulloch v. Maryland:

"Such is the character of human language that no word conveys to the mind in all situations one single definite idea."

He therefore recognized, to quote his own words, that if the Constitution was "intended to endure for ages to come" it must "be adapted to the various crises of human affairs."

Those who would reason away the essential meaning of the Constitution by resort to Marshall's use of the word "adapted"—and today there are many—should realize that the whole tenor of Marshall's decisions clearly indicate that by the word "adapted" he meant applied. He was discussing the doctrine of implied powers, the existence of which he recognized as necessary if the Constitution were to be more, as he said, than "a splendid bauble." For all time he defined the justification of implied powers when he said:

"Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional."

No one has or can add to that definition, but in these later days it is often perverted to justify the contention that whatever the Congress may regard as for the "general welfare" is, for that reason, within "the letter and spirit of the Constitution." Such extremists forget that any implied power must, according to Marshall, "be within the scope of the Constitution", must be "plainly adapted" and not "prohibited", and surely nothing can be within such scope when it either invades the reserved rights of the States or of the people.

Marshall may have been fortunate in the fact that he acquired his knowledge more from events than from books. Education can confuse as well as enlighten. Certainly modern education tends to dissipate the human mind over too many subjects, most of which are unimportant. Great men have generally been men of simple ideas and those derived from the realities of life rather than from the theories of book men. Franklin, Washington, Marshall, and Lincoln—possibly the four greatest intellectual leaders of the American people—all graduated in that best of schools, "the university of realities."

This may partly account for his political philosophy. Unquestionably Marshall, like Washington, was a Federalist. Neither overphilosophized on the subject of political government, but their military service had taught them, in the most realistic way, the evils of a mere league of states, where under the impotent Articles of Confederation the central government had merely influence, and, as Washington tersely said, "Influence is not government."

The bitter sufferings of Washington's army, and the unnecessary prolongation of the war, deeply impressed upon both Washington and Marshall that while a central government should have a limited field of power, yet within that field its power should be plenary and binding. Unquestionably this conviction, born of bitter experience, profoundly influenced the decisions of Chief Justice Marshall, whose dominant purpose was to weld the States into an efficient union through the Constitution.

We read his opinions as masterful oracles of the law, but, while their reasoning is forceful, yet in the most important cases the questions were, in the last analysis, not difficult, and he had the advantage of construing the virgin text of the Constitution. Madison's Debates had not then appeared, and little was known of the proceedings in the Constitutional Convention. Nor was he overwhelmed by a host of commentaries and by a great volume of opinions of the Supreme Court on constitutional questions, through which, as through overlaying strata, lawyers today dig down to reach the textual foundations of the Constitution. With him, the questions were of first impression, and such questions are often easier than those which have been confused by countless commentaries. Dr. Samuel Johnson once advised the student of Shakespeare to read the text of Shakespeare and disregard all that the commentators had said, and there was some force in the suggestion.

Marshall's amazing industry was such that of the 1,215 cases which the Court decided in his period of service he wrote the opinions in 519, and he wrote more than one-half of all its opinions which involved the construction of the Constitution.

The great merit of his decisions is in their perfect harmony, like that of a Greek temple.

Marshall's unquestioned triumph may not be due so much to his intellectual attainments, although they were great, but to the influence of his character. If he had been a corrupt, designing, or even an ambitious Judge, seeking either popularity on the one hand or political power on the other, his decisions would not have had the same weight; but the years of his long service marked a steady progress in the faith of the American people, without respect to party, in the absolute integrity of his mind. Men of his day might disagree with John Marshall, but they soon learned that his motives were beyond reproach. In his right hand he carried "gentle peace to silence envious tongues." Never in judicial history has there been a greater triumph of rectitude of purpose and action, and this again explains why, after 35 years of bitter controversy, when political passions ran far higher than they do today, the American people believed in John Marshall and accepted his interpretations of the Constitution.

What remains to be said? In his last illness Marshall knew that the end was near, and with a life void of reproach and with a conscious pride that he had been privileged to serve, not only his day and generation but the illimitable future of America, he met his end, not merely with the courage of a stoic, but with the faith of a Christian. It was the end which Bunyan so beautifully describes of Mr. Vallant-for-Truth, and such was John Marshall, and we can apply to him Bunyan's simple but noble narrative of the passing of his hero.

He called for his friends and told them of it. Then said he:

"I am going to my Father's, and though with great difficulty I have got hither, yet now I do not repent me of all the trouble I have been at to arrive where I am. My sword I give to him that shall succeed me in my pilgrimage. My marks and scars I carry with me to be a witness for me that I have fought His battles. Who will now be my rewarder. * * * So he passed over, and all the trumpets sounded for him on the other side."

The trumpet of immortal fame has sounded for Marshall, since he died a hundred years ago, and will proclaim his praise to succeeding generations as long as the Republic endures.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes tomorrow immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. KNUTSON. On the tariff.

Mr. O'CONNOR. On the tariff?

Mr. KNUTSON. On the subject of foreign trade; put it that way, if you prefer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I direct the Speaker's attention to the resolution with reference to the Pulaski memorial. As the Speaker is aware, this bill was reported out by the Judiciary Committee and was the bill of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON]. When the bill was acted upon in the House, a Senate bill was substituted for it. The Senate bill made Pulaski Memorial Day an annual event. That bill was vetoed, and that point was dwelt upon by the President. The President has authorized me to say that he will have no objection whatever to a resolution of like character limited to this one year.

My parliamentary inquiry is, What is the status of the Citron bill; can it be brought up and acted upon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is under the impression that the Citron bill was laid on the table when the Senate bill was acted upon.

Mr. PETTENGILL. If the Chair will permit a further parliamentary inquiry, can the bill be taken from the table?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

FARM CREDIT ACT OF 1935

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1384) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes, and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement follow:

CONFERENCE REPORT

[To accompany S. 1384]

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1384) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the House insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'Farm Credit Act of 1935.'"

"Sec. 2. (a) Section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1016), is further amended by striking out of the third sentence the following: 'and made for the purpose of reducing and refinancing an existing mortgage'."

"(b) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the fifth sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'Loans may be made under this section for any of the purposes for which Federal land banks are authorized by law to make loans, and for the following additional purpose, and none other: Refinancing, either in connection with proceedings under chapter VIII of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended, or otherwise, any indebtedness, secured or unsecured, of the farmer, or which is secured by a lien on all or any part of the farm property accepted as security for the loan.'"

"(c) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the seventh sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'As used in this section, (1) the term "farmer" means any person who is at the time, or shortly to become, bona fide engaged in farming operations, either personally or through an agent or tenant, or the principal part of whose income is derived from farming operations or livestock raising, and includes a personal representative of a deceased farmer; (2) the term "person" includes an individual or a corporation engaged in the raising of livestock; and (3) the term "corporation" includes any incorporated association; but no such loan shall be made to a corporation (A) unless all the stock of the corporation is owned by individuals themselves personally actually engaged in the raising of livestock on the land to be mortgaged as security for the loan, except in a case where the Land Bank Commissioner permits the loan if at least 75 per centum in value and number of shares of the stock of the corporation is owned by the individuals personally actually so engaged, and (B) unless the owners of at least 75 per centum in value and number of shares of the stock of the corporation assume personal liability for the loan. No loan shall be made to any corporation which is a subsidiary of, or affiliated (either directly or through substantial identity of stock ownership) with, a corporation ineligible to procure a loan in the amount applied for.'"

"(d) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the eighth and ninth sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'Until February 1, 1940, the Land Bank Commissioner shall, in his name, make loans under this section on behalf of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, and may make such loans in cash or in bonds of the corporation, or if acceptable to the borrower, in consolidated farm-loan bonds; but no such loans shall be made by him after February 1, 1940, except for the purpose of refinancing loans previously made by him under this section. As much as may be necessary of the assets of the corporation, including the bonds (and proceeds thereof) issued under section 4 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, may be used for the purposes of this section.'"

"(e) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: 'Any Federal land bank, when duly authorized by the Land Bank Commissioner and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, shall have the power to execute any instrument relating to any mortgage taken to secure a loan made or to be made under this section, or relating to any property included in any such mortgage, or relating to any property acquired by the Land Bank Commissioner and/or the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. Any such instrument heretofore or hereafter executed on behalf of the Land Bank Commissioner and/or the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation by a Federal land bank, through its duly authorized officers, shall be conclusively presumed to have been duly authorized by the Land Bank Commissioner and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.'"

"Sec. 3. (a) Effective July 1, 1935, the first sentence of paragraph 'Twelfth' of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the following: 'within two years after such date, shall not exceed 4½ per centum per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of five years commencing sixty days after the date this paragraph takes effect; and no payment of the principal portion of any installment of any such loan shall be required during such five-year period if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage', and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'after such date, shall not exceed 3½ per centum per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of one year commencing July 1, 1935, and shall not exceed 4 per centum per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of two years commencing July 1, 1936; and no payment of the principal portion of any installment of any such loan outstanding on the date of the enactment of the Farm Credit Act of 1935 shall be required prior to July 11, 1938, if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage.'"

"(b) Effective July 1, 1935, the second sentence of such paragraph 'Twelfth' is amended by striking out the following: 'the rate of interest on such loans for such five-year period shall be 5 per centum in lieu of 4½ per centum', and inserting in lieu thereof: 'the rates of interest paid for the respective periods above specified shall be one-half of 1 per centum per annum in excess of the rates of interest paid during the corresponding periods by borrowers on mortgage loans made through national farm loan associations.'"

"Sec. 4. The fourth sentence of section 24 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 913), is further amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That the declaration and payment of any such dividend shall be subject to the approval of the Land Bank Commissioner.'"

"Sec. 5. (a) Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 202 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1031), is further amended by striking out that portion of the paragraph which follows the second semicolon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'and to discount for, or purchase from, any production credit association or bank for cooperatives organized under the Farm Credit Act of 1933, or any production credit association in which a Production Credit Corporation organized under such Act holds stock, with its indorsement, any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other such obligation presented by such association or bank, and to make loans and advances direct to any such association or bank secured by such collateral as may be approved by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.'"

"(b) Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of such section 202, as amended, is further amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: 'at such rates of commission as may be approved by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.'"

"(c) Subsection (d) of such section 202, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1034), is hereby repealed.

"Sec. 6. (a) Subsection (a) of section 203 of the Federal Farm Loan Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 1041) is amended by striking out the proviso and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'Provided, That the aggregate amount of the outstanding debentures and similar obligations issued individually by any Federal intermediate credit bank, together with the amount of outstanding consolidated debentures issued for its benefit and account, shall not exceed ten times the surplus and paid-in capital of such bank.'"

"(b) Such section 203 (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1041-1043) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) Whenever it shall appear desirable to issue consolidated debentures of the twelve Federal intermediate credit banks and to sell them through a common selling agency, and the Federal intermediate credit banks shall, by resolutions, consent to the same, the banks may issue and sell said debentures subject to the provisions of this section and the provisions of section 21 of Title I of this Act, insofar as applicable. As used in this Act, the term "debentures" includes such consolidated debentures."

"(e) All debentures issued by Federal intermediate credit banks shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or of any officer or officers thereof."

"Sec. 7. Subsection (a) of section 204 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1051), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Any Federal intermediate credit bank may, with the approval of the Intermediate Credit Commissioner, from time to time establish rates of discount and interest which, except with the approval of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, shall not exceed by more than 1 per centum per annum the rate borne by the last preceding issue of debentures which it issued or in which it participated. Any Federal intermediate credit bank may be required by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration to acquire, upon such terms as he may approve, loans and/or discounts of any other Federal intermediate credit bank."

"Sec. 8. Section 203 of the Federal Farm Loan Act (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1091-1094) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) The executive departments, boards, commissions, and independent establishments of the Government, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Reserve banks are severally authorized, under such conditions as they may prescribe, to make available to any Federal intermediate credit bank, in confidence, upon the request of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, such reports, records, or other information as they may have available relating to the condition of any institution to which a Federal intermediate credit bank has made, or contemplates making, loans, or which it is using, or contemplates using, as a custodian of securities or other credit instruments, or as a depository."

"Sec. 9. Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 7 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141e), is further amended to read as follows:

"(2) the construction or acquisition by purchase or lease, or refinancing the cost of such construction or acquisition, of physical facilities."

"Sec. 10. Paragraph (1) of subsection (c) of section 7 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141e), is further amended to read as follows:

"(1) No loan shall be made in an amount in excess of 60 per centum of the appraised value of the security therefor."

"Sec. 11. Subsection (a) of section 8 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141f), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Loans to any cooperative association shall bear such rates of interest as the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration shall from time to time determine to be necessary for the needs of the lending agencies and shall by regulation prescribe (but in no case shall the rate of interest exceed 6 per centum per annum on the unpaid principal): Provided, however, That the rate of interest on any loan made under the provisions of section 7 (a) (1) hereof, other than upon the security of commodities, shall conform as nearly as may be practicable to a rate 1 per centum in excess of the prevailing interest rate paid by production credit associations to the Federal intermediate credit bank of the land bank district in which the principal business office of the borrower is located; the rate of interest on any loan made upon the security of commodities shall conform, as nearly as may be practicable, to the prevailing interest rate on commodity loans charged borrowers from the Federal intermediate credit bank of the land bank district in which the principal business office of the borrower is located; and that the rate of interest on any loan made under the provisions of section 7 (a) (2) hereof shall conform as nearly as may be practicable to the prevailing rate on mortgage loans made to members of national farm loan associations."

"Sec. 12. Subsection (a) of section 15 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141j), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) As used in this act, the term "cooperative association" means any association in which farmers act together in processing, preparing for market, handling, and/or marketing the farm products of persons so engaged, and also means any association in which farmers act together in purchasing, testing, grading, processing, distributing, and/or furnishing farm supplies and/or farm business services: Provided, however, That such associations are operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof as such producers or purchasers and conform to one or both of the following requirements:

"First. That no member of the association is allowed more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital he may own therein; and

"Second. That the association does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of 8 per centum per annum."

"And in any case to the following:

"Third. That the association shall not deal in farm products, farm supplies, and farm business services with or for nonmembers in an amount greater in value than the total amount of such business transacted by it with or for members. All business transacted by any cooperative association for or on behalf of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof shall be disregarded in determining the volume of member and nonmember business transacted by such association."

"Sec. 13. Section 34 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 34. Subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the chairman of its board of directors, the Central Bank is authorized: (a) to make loans to cooperative associations, as defined in the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, for any of the purposes and subject to the conditions and limitations set forth in such act, as amended; (b) to make loans (by way of discount or otherwise) to banks for cooperatives organized under section 2 of this act; (c) to buy from, and sell to, any such bank or any Federal intermediate credit bank any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other obligation; and (d) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, any and all such banks."

"Sec. 14. Section 41 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1134c) is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 41. Subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Governor, the banks for cooperatives are authorized: (a) to make loans to cooperative associations as defined in the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, for any of the purposes and subject to the conditions and limitations set forth in such Act, as amended; (b) to make loans (by way of discount or otherwise) to any bank organized under this act; (c) to buy from, and sell to, any such bank or any Federal intermediate credit bank any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other obligation; and (d) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, any and all such banks."

"Sec. 15. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 35 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1134k) is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "except that, in connection with any loan made on the security of commodities, the borrower shall be required to own, at the time the loan is made, only such amount of stock as may be prescribed by rules and regulations of the Governor."

"(b) Subsection (a) of such section 35 is further amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Upon discharge of the loan, stock held by the borrowing association may be, and upon the concurrent or subsequent request of the borrowing association shall be, retired and canceled, and the association shall be paid therefor an amount equal to the amount paid for such stock or loaned to subscribe therefor, as the case may be, minus the pro rata impairment, if any, of capital and guaranty fund of the Central Bank, as determined by the chairman of the board of the Central Bank."

"(c) Such section 35 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) In any case where the debt of a borrower to the Central Bank is in default, the bank may, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Governor, retire and cancel all or a part of the stock of the defaulting borrower at the fair book value thereof (not exceeding par), in total or partial liquidation of the debt, as the case may be."

"Sec. 16. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 30 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 is amended by striking out the words "two years" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "four years".

"(b) The fourth sentence of subsection (b) of such section 30 is amended:

"(1) By striking out the words "occurring more than sixty days after the date of enactment of this act", and

"(2) By striking out the words "a period of two years from the date of enactment of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "a period of two years from the date of the enactment of the Farm Credit Act of 1935".

"Sec. 17. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 31 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 is amended by striking out the words "for two years from the date of the enactment of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "until May 13, 1937."

"(b) Subsection (b) of such section 31 is amended by striking out the words "such two-year period" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the period of postponement".

"(c) The first sentence of the act entitled "An Act to authorize production credit associations to make loans to oyster planters", approved June 18, 1934 (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 1131j), is amended by striking out the following: "who are carrying on their operations under leases of oyster beds granted by any State or political subdivision thereof".

"Sec. 18. Paragraph "Sixth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 771), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this paragraph (1) the term "person" includes an individual or a corporation engaged in the raising of livestock; and (2) the term "corporation" includes any incorporated association; but no such loan shall be made to a corporation (A) unless all the stock of the corporation is owned by individuals themselves personally actually engaged in the raising of livestock on the farm to be mortgaged as security for the loan, except in a case where the Land Bank Commissioner permits the loan if at least 75 per centum in value and number of shares of the stock of the corporation is owned by the individuals personally actually so engaged, and (B) unless the owners of at least 75 per centum in value and number of shares of the stock of the corporation assume personal liability for the loan. No loan shall be made to any corporation which is a subsidiary of, or affiliated (either directly or through substantial identity of stock ownership) with, a corporation ineligible to procure a loan in the amount applied for."

"Sec. 19. (a) The first sentence of the sixth paragraph of section 7 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 716), is amended to read as follows: "Ten or more persons who are the owners, or about to become the owners, of farm lands qualified as security for a mortgage loan under section 12 of this Act, may unite to form a national farm-loan association."

"(b) The sixth paragraph of such section 7 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this section, the term "person" includes an individual, an incorporated association, and a corporation which is eligible for a loan under section 12 of this Act."

"Sec. 20. (a) The first sentence of the fifth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 745), is amended by striking out the words "any natural person" and inserting in lieu thereof "any person."

"(b) The fifth paragraph of such section 9 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this section, the term "person" includes an individual, an incorporated association, and a corporation which is eligible for a loan under section 12 of this Act."

"SEC. 21. The first sentence of the first paragraph of section 31 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 981), is amended to read as follows: 'Any applicant for a loan under this act, or officer or representative of any such applicant, who shall knowingly make any false statement in the application for such loan, and any member of a loan committee or any appraiser provided for in this act who shall willfully overvalue any land offered as security for loans under this act, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.'

"SEC. 22. Paragraph 'Fifth' of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 771), is further amended by inserting after the third sentence thereof the following: 'In determining the earning power of land used for the raising of livestock, due consideration shall be given to the extent to which the earning power of the fee-owned land is augmented by a lease or permit, granted by lawful authority of the United States or of any State, for the use of a portion of the public lands of the United States or of such State, where such permit or lease is in the nature of a right adjunctive to such fee-owned land, and its availability for use as such during the terms of the loan is reasonably assured.'

"SEC. 23. On and after the date of enactment of this Act no person shall be eligible for appointment or election as an administrative or executive official or as a member of the board of directors of a Federal land bank, or shall continue to hold office as such member or as an ex-officio director of a Federal intermediate credit bank or of any corporation or bank organized pursuant to the Farm Credit Act of 1933, if such person has been finally adjudged guilty of a felony, or finally adjudged liable in damages in any civil proceeding for fraud, in any State or Federal court.

"SEC. 24. (a) If any provision of this Act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the Act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"(b) The right to alter, amend, or repeal this Act is hereby expressly reserved."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1384) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

Section 1, subsections (a), (b), (d), and (e) of section 2, sections 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and subsections (a) and (b) of section 17, of the Senate bill are the same in substance as the corresponding sections and subsections of the House amendment. Section 25 of the Senate bill is the same as subsection (c) of section 17 of the House amendment, and section 27 of the Senate bill is the same as section 18 of the House amendment. Certain clarifying changes were made in some of these sections in the House amendment and the conference agreement retains these sections as clarified.

Section 2 (c) of the Senate bill authorized the Land Bank Commissioner to make loans under section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 to corporations engaged in the raising of livestock with the restriction that no such loan should be made unless all the stock of the corporation was "owned by persons themselves personally actually engaged in the raising of livestock on the land to be mortgaged as security for the loan", except where the Commissioner permitted such a loan if at present 75 percent of the stock was so owned. There was also a restriction that no such loan should be made to a corporation which was a subsidiary of, or affiliated (either directly or through substantial identity of stock ownership) with, a corporation ineligible to procure a loan in the amount applied for. There were no corresponding provisions in the House amendment. The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate bill and adds a further restriction that no loan shall be made to any such corporation unless the owners of at least 75 percent of the stock assume personal liability for the loan.

Section 3 of the Senate bill provided for reducing the amount of interest-reimbursement payments by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Federal land banks for each quarter subsequent to 1934 by the amount of savings in interest payable by the banks affected through bond refunding operations subsequent to June 30, 1934. There was no corresponding provision in the House amendment.

The conference agreement eliminates this provision of the Senate bill.

Section 3 of the House amendment provided for reducing the interest rate paid by Federal land-bank borrowers whose loans were obtained through national farm-loan associations or were outstanding on May 12, 1933, to a maximum of 3½ percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 1 year commencing July 1, 1935, and to a maximum of 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 2 years commencing July 1, 1936. Corresponding reductions were also made in the maximum rates of interest payable during the same periods by Federal land-bank borrowers who obtained loans direct or through branches. Section 26 of the Senate bill provided for reducing the interest rate payable by Federal land-bank borrowers to 3½ percent per annum during the 5-year period beginning July 11, 1933, and ending July 11, 1938, in cases where loans were outstanding on May 12, 1933, or were made thereafter through national farm-loan associations. It also extended the benefits of this interest reduction, and of the automatic deferment of principal provided for in existing law, to borrowers who obtained loans after May 12, 1935. Corresponding benefits were granted to borrowers who obtained loans direct or through Federal land-bank branches. The conference agreement retains the provisions of section 3 of the House amendment.

Section 11 of the Senate bill contained a provision providing that the rate of interest on any loan made by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration or a bank for cooperatives to any cooperative association on the security of commodities should conform, as nearly as may be practicable, to the prevailing interest rate of commodity loans charged borrowers from the Federal intermediate credit bank of the district in which the principal office of the association was located. There was no corresponding provision in the House amendment. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate bill.

Section 18 of the Senate bill provided that obligations incurred by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation must be within the estimates submitted to and approved by the Director of the Budget. There was no corresponding provision in the House amendment, and the conference agreement eliminates the provision of the Senate bill.

Section 19 of the Senate bill provided for loans through the Federal land-bank system to corporations, with the restriction that no such loan should be made (1) unless the persons who owned all the stock of the corporation were actually engaged in the cultivation or operation of or in the raising of livestock on the farm to be mortgaged as security for the loan, except where such loans were permitted by the Land Bank Commissioner if at least 75 percent of the stock of the corporation was owned by persons actually so engaged, and (2) unless the owners of at least 75 percent of the stock assumed personal liability for the loan. There was a further restriction that no loan should be made to any corporation which was a subsidiary of or affiliated (either directly or through substantial identity of stock ownership) with a corporation ineligible to secure a loan in the amount applied for. The House amendment contained no such provision. The conference agreement retains the provision of section 19 of the Senate bill with one exception, namely, that the corporations which are eligible for such loans are restricted to those which are engaged in the raising of livestock.

Sections 20, 21, and 22 of the Senate bill contained amendments of a technical character necessary to permit Federal land-bank loans to be made to corporations. These provisions, which were not contained in the House amendment, are restored under the conference agreement in order to carry into effect the action taken with respect to section 19 of the Senate bill.

Section 23 of the Senate bill contained a provision requiring that in determining the earning power of land used in the raising of livestock, due consideration should be given to the extent to which the earning power of the fee-owned land was augmented by a lease or permit for the use of a portion of the public lands. This was intended to express in legislative form the policy followed in the appraisal of such land. No comparable provision was contained in the House amendment. The conference agreement retains this provision of the Senate bill.

Section 24 of the Senate bill contained a provision rendering ineligible for appointment or election as an administrative or executive official or as a member of the board of directors of a Federal land bank or affiliated institutions, any person who had been finally adjudged guilty of a felony, or finally adjudged liable in damages in any civil proceeding for fraud, in a State or Federal court. There was no similar provision in the House amendment. The conference agreement retains the provision of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report. The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATIONS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7131) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to dispose of certain light-house reservations, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be printed in the RECORD. The larger part of them are changes in figures. The other amendment is an item in the bill which was in the bill as the bill was reported to the House, but was stricken out by the House and inserted in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments are as follows:

The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to convey to the city of Evanston, Ill., for public-park purposes the Grosse Point Lighthouse Reservation, comprising an area of about 100 feet by 535 feet and appurtenant structures thereon with the exception of the brick light tower and the plot of land surrounding same about 45 feet by 65 feet, together with the rights of ingress and egress, for the purpose of maintaining the light. The deed of conveyance shall describe by metes and bounds the portion of the reservation transferred, and the conditions imposed by section 36 of this act."

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GERALD MACKEY

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 378, entitled "An act for the relief of Gerald Mackey", with a Senate amendment, and concur in the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after "Gerald Mackey", insert "not to exceed $1,200."

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEECH LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2045) to set aside certain lands for the Leech Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

 Page 2, strike out lines 3 to 6, inclusive.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act to set aside certain lands for the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota."

WRECKERS OF LABOR

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article appearing in the Baltimore News and the Baltimore Post.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does the article cover?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is an article by the United Hebrew Trade Workers of the United States, an organization condemning communism.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Does it want to allow those in this country who are unlawfully here to remain? Does this article have anything to do with that matter?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. This article is in condemnation of communism in the United States, stating that they are a menace to labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted me to extend my remarks, I am inserting herewith an editorial which appeared in the Baltimore News and the Baltimore Post under date of May 16, 1935, entitled "United Hebrew Trades Condemn Communists as Wreckers of Labor."

UNITED HEBREW TRADES CONDEMN COMMUNISTS AS WRECKERS OF LABOR

Aroused by the activities of the Communists throughout the United States, the United Hebrew Trades, which represents all the Jewish labor unions in the country, with a membership of 450,000, has made an official declaration.

The declaration was adopted almost unanimously. There were only three negative votes. One of the three voted against it because it did not sufficiently praise Lang for opposing the inhuman conditions which exist within Soviet Russia.

In their declaration the United Hebrew Trades said:

"OFFICIAL DECLARATION OF THE UNITED HEBREW TRADES

"The United Hebrew Trades, at a special meeting held on Monday evening, April 29, have given full consideration and have freely discussed the campaign being waged against the Forward as a result of the articles on Russia which a member of its staff, Comrade Lang, has permitted the New York Evening Journal to reprint."

(Editor's note: This series of articles by Harry Lang on conditions in Soviet Russia was published in the Baltimore News and the Post.)

"The United Hebrew Trades have taken the matter up upon presentations of several unions that our position should be defined and made known to the tens of thousands of Jewish union members and to the Jewish masses in general.

"Before the assembled representatives of the unions began to confer upon the matter, Comrade Lang was given an opportunity to make a statement as to all the facts in the case. He was entitled to such consideration by many years of loyal service to the cause of the labor movement.

"The United Hebrew Trades, upon analyzing the whole matter and considering all the relevant points, has adopted the following declaration:

"In the course of our entire history we have always treated with respect, in all questions and incidents in the labor movement, resolutions and decisions made by other sections of our movement. This is true of the resolution of the Forward Association on the question of Comrade Lang, with the addition that the entire incident has in no way diminished our respect and confidence in him as a journalist and contributor to the activities of the labor movement.

"We recognize that the editorial staff of the Forward and the Forward Association are mainly competent to judge Comrade Lang's conduct.

"We fling back every attempt now being made to create opposition to the Forward.

"The campaign of incitement on the part of the Communists is a natural phenomenon. We expect no other attitude on their part. They have carried on their wrecking operations in the unions during the entire period of their existence and they are trying to break up the unions now. They have always condemned the Socialists and the entire Socialist movement, and they are condemning them now.

"They have been carrying on their scandalous work throughout the length and breadth of the labor movement. When, in 1934, all of labor assembled in Madison Square Garden to protest against the slaughter of the Socialists in Vienna and to mourn the martyrs of Austrian fascism, the Communists with their rowdy attacks upon the assembly branded themselves as the worst of Hooligans who deserve no attention on the part of any decent person.

"A similar sentence was passed upon them when they staged their diabolical dance over the hopes and interests of the Jews. It was in 1929, when the Jewish masses of the world were shocked by the Arab massacres of Jews in Palestine, that the Communists welcomed the pogroms and hailed the pogrom makers. They condemned themselves and placed themselves under the curse of all Jewish people.

"In every country in the world the Communists march hand in hand with the darkest reactionaries to destroy the socialist, and the democratic and the labor movements. It is they who are responsible for fascism, which destroys every bit of freedom and sows race hatred. Their disturbances here in America have the same character as the trouble which their comrades create in other lands.

"The united Hebrew trades greet the Forward at its consistent stand against all demagogues and trouble-makers in the Jewish world, and call upon all unions and their members to fling back the base charges being leveled against the Forward.

"It is the Forward which was the great power that had built every Jewish union, that always defended and continues to defend absolutely all immigrants against their enemies. In all our battles the Forward is our great champion.

"We declare: They who condemn the Forward condemn the entire Jewish labor movement. The Jewish unions will stand like a mighty force ready to defeat every attack against the Forward and against the labor movement.

"United Hebrew Trades, R. Guskin, chairman; M. Tigel, vice chairman; M. Feinstone, secretary; executive committee: M. Abramson, M. Cohen, H. Goldovsky, M. Edelson, S. Pollakov, A. Student, H. Lilliput, A. Tovlin, A. Baron, A. Dvinsky, M. Horowitz, S. Metz, J. Tovlin, A. Soloviof, M. Volpert, S. Voltchok."

PROGRAM OF FOREST LAND MANAGEMENT

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Rules Committee I call up House Resolution 223.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 223

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 6914, a bill to authorize cooperation with the several States for the purpose of stimulating the acquisition, development, and proper administration and management of State forests, etc. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution covers a rule for the consideration of what is known as the "Fulmer reforestation bill." This bill comes from the Committee on Agriculture and has the approval of the Chief Forester of the Forest Service, and is a bill that authorizes the appropriation of $20,000,000 in order for the Federal Government to cooperate with the States in setting up State forest reservations. This is in addition to the program and the appropriation made sometime ago for the establishment of areas for reforestation on the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I may say this will encourage the States to take over certain areas with the assistance of the Federal Government which shall be maintained and supervised by the State conservation departments, with the idea in view that in time, with the assistance of the Federal Government, the States will be able to pay the Federal Government and take these areas over as State forest reservations. This also permits the States to use certain tracts that they have taken in because of nonpayment of delinquent taxes, and request the Federal Reforestation Service to assist the States in the management of these areas. So far as I know it meets with the approval of not only the Federal Forest Service, but with all of the State reforestation and conservation departments.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How will this be divided? Will each State get its equal share?

Mr. GREENWOOD. It will be considered by projects just as reforestation projects are now considered. No specific allocation is made, and no State will be preferred over another. Any State having a conservation department may submit any project of State-owned land it would like to have come under this particular plan. It will be approved here by the Chief Forester of the Federal Forest Service.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will each State have to match the Federal Government?

Mr. GREENWOOD. No. It is not a matching on a 50-50 basis. The State can accept this service and build a future forest service that will be held in the name and title of the State.

Mr. Speaker, this is a wide-open rule, which allows for the offering of any amendments that may be submitted, and provides for 1 hour's general debate. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], author of the bill, and the chairman of the subcommittee of the Agricultural Committee that held the hearings on this matter, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY] are here, and they can better answer questions with reference to the provisions of the bill. If any Member desires time under the rule, I shall be glad to grant them time, but unless time is requested I will move the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE TRIPLE A. AMENDMENTS

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered over N. B. C. on Saturday, May 11, by the Chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], in which he ably discussed the pending amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered over the radio on Saturday, May 11, by the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]:

THE TRIPLE A. AMENDMENTS

Attacks from many sides are now being leveled at the farm program. This is an age of propaganda, and selfish groups have not failed to make the most of their opportunities.

The groups that have been making the attack evidently hope that the farmers have forgotten the desperate conditions that prevailed in 1932. Manifestly they hope to sow the seeds of discord among those who have received the vast benefits and experienced the great improvements under the operations of the farm program.

Things are happening at such a rapid rate that we are prone to forget conditions that prevailed only a short time ago.

Let us analyze the situation in the light of actual facts.

THEN AND NOW

In the winter of 1932 farm products were the lowest and most unsatisfactory they had been in 50 years. Let us contrast a few of the prices that prevailed then with prices at the present time. Here is the deadly parallel:

In December 1932 the farm price of wheat was 32 cents per bushel. Today it is 90 cents per bushel.

In December 1932 the farm price for corn was 19 cents per bushel. Today it is 85 cents per bushel.

Then the farm price for cotton was 5 cents per pound. Today it is 12 cents per pound.

At the close of 1932 the farmer was receiving $2.73 per 100 pounds for his hogs—the lowest price in 54 years. Today he is receiving $9 per 100 pounds.

Cattle, rice, tobacco, and other farm products have increased in similar proportions.

Do you want to return to those unbearable conditions?

Do you want to return to those prices that wrecked the farmers' hopes and consequently the Nation's business?

Will you listen to organized groups who are interested only in commission prices on volume business, regardless of the price to the farmer and livestock man?

If you do, then these destroyers are speaking your language and expressing your sentiments.

ADDITIONAL BENEFITS

In addition to these increases in prices of farm commodities, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration has paid to the farmers in actual benefit payments a total of approximately $1,000,000,000. This has increased very greatly the purchasing power of the farmer and has stimulated business all along the line. These prices have not injured the consumer. The raw material cost, when translated into the finished product, is so small an element in the price picture as to be almost negligible. It is far more than offset by the tremendously increased purchasing power of the farmer and his consequent purchases of the manufactured product, which are reflected in better business conditions.

THE TRIPLE A ACT

We learn by experience. In administering a vast and far-reaching act, it has been found that certain amendments are needed. This is but natural. The harvester was not perfected in a single day. The first radio was a crude affair, but did we discard it because of this? If you will go to the Smithsonian Institution and look at the first automobile, you will wonder why they ever had any hopes of its ultimate practical success; but did they discard it for this reason? You need but to step out on one of the main streets or roads of the country to get an overwhelming answer.

The primary object of the Agricultural Adjustment Act is to secure parity prices for the farmers' products. Can anyone object to this? Does anyone want to grind the farmers' prices down below a living level?

A FLEXIBLE PROGRAM

The amendments that have been proposed will provide a more flexible program by permitting the use of different plans with reference to different commodities, thus enabling the plan to be fitted to the particular commodity.

The word "adjustment" has been substituted for the word "reduction", so that the production of a crop hereafter may be adjusted to our domestic and foreign market demands rather than being based upon the question of reduction alone. It may mean a decrease or an increase, or neither, depending upon the supply necessary to fit the general market demand. Can anyone object to this?

THE FOREIGN MARKET

Much ado has been made of our foreign markets. This is another feature which the new amendments undertake to solve.

At the beginning of the program such a vast surplus had been backed up in reference to so many commodities that a de-clearing reduction program was necessary. Having largely achieved the necessary results along these lines, the amendments provide that in addition to benefit payments being made for adjustment that a portion of the funds may be used for expansion of domestic and foreign markets or for the removal of recurrent agricultural surpluses. Does anyone have any objection to this part of the program?

THE GRANARY IDEA

The amendments also provide for the ever normal granary proposal so that benefits may be paid in kind, thus insuring a reserve supply against droughts and shortages. This would permit an adjustment program to be carried on in the regular way and at the same time make certain there would, at no time, be a lack of supply of the essential commodities. Does any normal man object to this?

MARKETING AGREEMENTS AND LICENSES

Perhaps there have been more wild assertions and more discussion and more misunderstanding about the marketing agreements and licenses than any other part of the proposed amendments. Personally, I am opposed to any general licensing program. We are assured there will be none. In order to make that assurance doubly sure, the House committee has limited the possible use of imposed licenses to just those specifically named commodities as to which there seems to be a necessity for their use.

The committee has greatly limited the original proposals. With these limitations only such additional powers can be used as are necessary to handle milk, tobacco, wool, sugar beets, fruits, and vegetables. They cannot be applied to anything else. No national commodity except milk can be affected in any way. We have sought to protect legitimate business.

Let us leave the realm of fancy and assertion, into which so many of the critics have delved, and search for the real truth about these proposals. These are of vital interest to more than 2,000,000 farmers whose production is such that the regular agricultural program cannot properly apply to it.

Licenses in connection with marketing agreements are provided in the present act. These licenses were for the purpose of getting at the minority chiselers who wanted to destroy the effectiveness of the agreements. Does anyone want to defend the chiseler?

PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE

It was found from experience that in certain commodities highly organized processors and distributors not only would not enter into marketing agreements but would not even talk about them. These amendments make it possible to have a program for these particular commodities on proposed marketing agreements, with the rights of everyone safeguarded in every possible way.

These proposed marketing agreements can apply only to milk and its products, tobacco, wool, sugar beets, fruits, and vegetables. It is a question whether the producers of these commodities shall be permitted to have a part in price restoration or whether they will be left to the mercy of the wolves.

SAFEGUARDS

The rights of everyone are protected in every conceivable way. Before they can be applied there must be an open hearing. It must appear that there is no other practical way to protect the interests of the producer. They must have the approval of the President. They must have the approval of a majority of the producers whose commodities are affected. Surely no one can object to these safeguards.

THE OPPONENTS

The opposition charges that we are regimenting the farmers. There is not even a semblance of truth in the charge.

It has been repeatedly charged that there is to be wholesale licensing of retailers. As a matter of fact, except as to milk and its products, the amendments provide that no retailer can be licensed.

It is charged that farmers are to be licensed. The amendments specifically state that no farmer shall be licensed.

The critics of the amendments should attend a truth party just as a matter of novelty, if for no other purpose.

ADDED FEATURES

As a matter of fact, the license features as restricted by the committee are but a small part of the amendments. Many desirable features have been added by the committee. These will make the act broader and more flexible and will, in the judgment of the committee, add greatly to the success of the act. In fact, practically all of those who have really studied the proposals are in hearty accord with these provisions. The expansion of domestic and foreign markets, the removal of surpluses, and increased trade are included. About these purposes there can be no division of opinion.

A SPECIAL FUND

For more than 60 years this country had a tariff system in which in large measure the producer and livestock man could have no part. For all these years the producers of America have carried this load on their backs and disposed of their commodities in a free and open market. Thirty percent of the people of America are actual tillers of the soil. In order to restore to them their part of the national policy, the amendments provide for establishing a fund equivalent to 30 percent of the annual tariff receipts to be used for the purpose of encouraging exportation or for the purpose of making payments in connection with that part of the production of the different commodities which goes into domestic consumption. Can anyone object to this measure of fairness?

When the logic of analysis is brought to bear on these amendments the criticism disappears like the mists. It cannot stand the light of truth.

THE REAL OPPOSITION

The real opposition to these amendments comes from those who would like to destroy the entire farm program. It comes from those who profit most when volume is greatest and when prices are pitifully small. It comes from such parties as the big milk organizations, some of which made millions right through the depression years when the price paid to the producer of the milk wouldn't pay for the feed necessary to keep his cows alive.

THE PRODUCERS

I appeal to the producers whose program this is. This is the first time in the history of our common country that a real program has been fashioned for the farmer and livestock man. He has a voice in formulating it, and he has a part in its administration. Of course, it is not perfect. No one makes such a claim, but will you because of this run the machine into the ditch and go back to the tender mercies of those who have had the craft to profit on the farmers' misfortune? If the producers stand together, if they defend their own program, and instead of listening to the siren song of those whose interests are in conflict, they help to perfect and develop the program, they will one day have a chance to manage their own business and to secure the normal profit from their own labors.

It has been said many times that the farmer is unorganized and that the organized manufacturers and distributors of his products can, through propaganda and the spending of money, cause him to be dissatisfied and thus wreck any program that is prepared in his behalf. That may have been true once, but I believe we have lived beyond that day. I believe the producers have seen enough of the benefits of the present activities to know that their interests will be furthered by standing together for the improvement of the program and not listening to the siren voice of those who would wreck their hopes.

I have devoted the best years of my life to this cause. Many others have done likewise. I want to see the rainbow of the farmers' hopes touch the ground. If they stand together, I believe that this result will be achieved.

Producers of America, will you permit your program to be wrecked? I do not believe you will.

PROGRAM FOR FOREST LAND MANAGEMENT

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6914) to authorize cooperation with the several States for the purpose of stimulating the acquisition, development, and proper administration and management of State forests and coordinating Federal and State activities in carrying out a national program of forest-land management, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6914, with Mr. McLAUGHLIN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to have the opportunity of presenting to you this afternoon a bill that I believe will meet with the hearty approval of all the Members of the House. The bill has been favorably endorsed by the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture, and I believe by the Forest Service of each State in the Union.

The purpose of the bill is to furnish money through the Federal Government to acquire areas in various States of the Union for forestry purposes. This will give an opportunity to buy areas, not only in one section of any State, but in various sections of the State. Title to these lands will be vested in the Federal Government, and the State will be given an opportunity to pay back to the Federal Government the amount of money invested in such area. Then the lands will be titled back to the State for State forest purposes.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. LORD. Is there any proposed price per acre set out in this bill or how is the land to be valued and purchased?

Mr. FULMER. This land will be selected as is the case now under the Federal Forest System, first, by the State forest services in cooperation with the Federal Forest Service, and then it has to be approved by the National Forest Commission. The State forest service, or State authorities, will not buy or obligate to buy land unless it is absolutely satisfactory to the Federal Forest Administration.

Mr. LORD. In my State of New York the State purchases land at a set price; that is, the State will purchase certain areas, if it contains 500 acres or more, at $4 an acre. This is their limit as to price, no matter what the conditions may be, and I was just wondering if there is any set price or any such condition provided as to this proposition.

Mr. FULMER. There is no set price under the bill. But, the Forest Service has a system for buying forest land which I am sure will be carried out in connection with the operation of this bill.

The bill also provides that where a State has taken over land for delinquent taxes, such land can also be put into the Forest Service and the Federal Government will cooperate 50-50 in carrying on the forest service in the respective States with respect to such area.

Mr. LORD. But this land that is to be taken over belongs to the Federal Government and the State has nothing to do with it unless they elect to purchase it later on.

Mr. FULMER. That is correct in connection with lands purchased by the Federal Forest Service.

Mr. LORD. In other words, this is simply a Federal system in which the State has no part unless it eventually wants to buy it.

Mr. FULMER. The State cooperates with the Federal Government and it is a matter of a loan until the State can reimburse the Federal Government. The title then goes back to the State.

I may say to the gentleman there are a great many States of the Union that have not been able to acquire forest areas or cooperate with the Federal Government, because they have not had the revenue to match expenditures, dollar for dollar, with the Federal Government. This is an opportunity extended to the States for the purpose of cooperating in the acquisition of forest areas at a time when lands are selling at a very low price, for the purpose of building up the natural resources of the country along this line.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. In my State of Michigan, we have a large area of what are known as "cut-over lands or pine lands." These lands belong to our State. Will this bill provide a method by which the Federal Government may purchase from the State such land for the purposes you have outlined?

Mr. FULMER. I should not think it would be necessary to purchase from the State State-owned land, because the whole idea is to purchase land in the first instance for the States, and eventually the title to the land will be transferred to the State for State forests. The Federal Government will cooperate with the gentleman's State 50-50 with respect to forest service on State-owned land, building up the forest and promoting fire protection and all that sort of thing.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to say to the gentleman that Ohio has a real, progressive, up-to-date forest service, and this organization has indicated very clearly that they favor the gentleman's bill.

Mr. FULMER. I appreciate that.

Mr. DONDERO. If the gentleman will yield for one more question, in whom would the title be in the case the gentleman has cited, where the Government furnishes half of the money to match with the State?

Mr. FULMER. It would remain in the State under cooperative agreement with the Federal Government.

Mr. DONDERO. Then it is simply in the nature of a loan to the State?

Mr. FULMER. In cooperating with the gentleman's State, it would be, we might say, a grant, because they do not have to pay that back, inasmuch as the State already owns the land.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. CASTELLOW. What would be the status of land taken over, not by the State but by the various counties of a State, for taxes, where it is not owned by the State but the title is in the county of a State?

Mr. FULMER. It is my thought that under the bill, if that land is located in a proper area for forest service and the State forest service, in cooperation with the Federal Forest Service, should desire to take over the land, it would be perfectly satisfactory and would come in just like State-owned land.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. The Forest Service will cooperate with the State. It must be done through the State. Land belonging to the county can be taken by the State and then the Forest Service will cooperate with the State.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. CASTELLOW. They will not deal with the county?

Mr. PIERCE. No.

Mr. ANDRESEN. In regard to the question just raised, may I call attention to the provision on page 7, which reads as follows:

When a State or political unit thereof acquires under tax delinquency laws title to forest lands without cost to the United States and which lands are included within a State or other public forest, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the Federal Government, may contribute annually out of any funds made available under this act not to exceed one-half the cost of administering, developing, and managing said lands.

Mr. PIERCE. It is possible under that that you could get the county in, but at the present time the Forest Service will not cooperate except with the State. I very much doubt that they will want to cooperate unless they cooperate with the State.

Mr. CROWE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. CROWE. If the Government advances the money to the State, they can purchase the land and later refund that money to the Federal Government and own the land.

Mr. FULMER. That is right, except the Federal Government will have to advance the funds for the purchase, and the title will be in the Federal Government until the repayment is made, and then the title will go back to the State and lands will then be used as State forests.

Mr. CROWE. I want to say that we favor that project.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Is it not the purpose to acquire the title to the land by the sale of products of the land itself, so that there will be no extra expense?

Mr. FULMER. The purchase price of these lands may be paid to the Federal Government out of the proceeds received from lands so purchased by the Federal Government.

Now, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY] will follow me, and he knows more about the mechanics of the bill than I do, and perhaps he will be able to give you additional information which will be helpful.

I might state that my colleague [Mr. DOXEY] is a distinguished member of the National Forest Commission, and in that he has considerable experience in connection with the administration of the Forest Service, as stated, I am sure he will be able and delighted to speak to you on the merits of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY].

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to briefly explain this bill to the Members and answer any questions that I may be able to, as I reported the bill and my subcommittee conducted the hearings.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman give us his opinion on subsection (k), page 7, as to whether or not we would, by authorizing a county with 100,000 acres of delinquent-tax lands, if it so desired, to come under the provisions of this bill, establish what would practically amount to a county forest?

Mr. DOXEY. Yes, sir. That is one of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. HULL. There is no question about it?

Mr. DOXEY. I think that section (k) of the bill, to which the gentleman refers, gives just this picture: Every State has many millions of acres of tax-delinquent lands. In my State of Mississippi the title is in the State. In some States the title is in the counties. The main purpose of this bill is to aid forest development in the States that have not been encouraged or could not be encouraged to do much forestry work on account of State facilities and State appropriations. Suppose there are 10,000,000 acres of tax-delinquent property in a State, it would not be advisable, in my judgment, for the authorities, whether a board of supervisors of a county or a State authority, to say that the entire tax-delinquent land should be used for forest purposes, because there might be other purposes—homesteads, and so forth—to which the land could be put; but it is essential, and those of us who are interested in forestry work know, that one of the best uses to which some of this land can be put is in forests. Under the present system, the National Government does not establish forests in small acreage. National forests are from 200,000 acres up. There are about 65 national forests in the United States.

Now, with special reference to the section which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] called attention to, there can be tax-delinquent land in the northeastern part of a State, some in the southwestern part of a State, and some in the central part of a State, and when the State authorities and those in charge determine that the best possible use of those lands in the various locations throughout the State would be for forest purposes, then the beneficent Federal Government comes in and says, "You submit these projects first to the regional office." There it will be carefully checked. There it is approved or disapproved, and it is sent to the Forestry Service here in Washington, of which Mr. Silcox is Chief Forester. Then the Forest Service here approves or disapproves these matters. Then it is presented to what is an established commission, known as the "National Forest Reservation Commission." I have the honor to be a member of that Commission. There are three Cabinet members—the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Interior—members of that Commission. There are also two Senators on the Commission—Senator KEYES, of New Hampshire, and Senator GEORGE, of Georgia. Our colleague, Mr. WOODRUFF, of Michigan, and myself are members of that Commission. It is a bipartisan body. Most of us have served on the Commission for quite a number of years. We have given great thought and study to this problem as a national problem, and we saw the great need of many States having State forests that have not been able to develop forests for many reasons. Why? Because the Government has not been in some States to establish national forests. If they come in, the administration of a national forest of 500,000 acres is just as cheap as for a forest of 50,000, because they have the same rangers and watchers and such things. But this bill provides a method to encourage State forests by ordering that when these forests are established the State has jurisdiction of administering them. They can have any organization they want, just so they effectively administer it.

The Government says to the respective State, "Now, we are going to encourage you in your forest program by paying one-half of the cost of the administration." We do that in cases where we do not have to buy any land and State tax-delinquent land is already there and properly approved for use as a forest.

Now, in case a State says, "We have land that can be bought as cut-over land from individuals or corporations, which should be in the forests", they go through the same procedure, with recommendations, setting out the acreage and the temporary boundary lines. They are flexible and they can be changed to meet an emergency. Then by the same method they go to the Forest Service and on to the National Forest Commission, and they say, "We think this is a good project. Here are people who own this land. This is what we think we can buy the average land for per acre. That is not a contract. Those of us who consider that matter on the recommendation of the Forest Service say, "Go out and take an option at an average cost of so much an acre." They go out and contact the individual, and if they agree, the trade is made, and the Government pays the money. The forest is created, but the Government does not pay for the administration. The Government turns it over to the State. In that way you may have several small forest areas in a State, whereas now you do not have more than one or two because of the great acreage that is necessary under the present policy of the Government to include only large acreage in national forests. In this way a State can have small forest areas and have places for C. C. C. camps or any other thing that is necessary to develop these small tracts as forests.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I am glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The gentleman has made a very fine and clear statement of the bill, and I am sure we all understand it much better. The conservation authorities in Minnesota are very much in favor of this legislation, but I would like to ask the gentleman if he can explain one question to us. The bill calls for an appropriation of $20,000,000. That is one appropriation—not an annual appropriation. Does the gentleman have any idea as to how this money will be allocated, according to States or sections of the country, so that some assurance may be given that each State will get a part of that appropriation?

Mr. DOXEY. I think that is a pertinent question. That question was gone into in the committee hearings. The gentleman is a member of the subcommittee of which I am chairman and will remember the discussion we had in this regard. Let me say right here and now that during the course of my remarks I shall ask unanimous consent to incorporate the report of the subcommittee, for, while it does not clear up all points, it will be found helpful, and is as follows:

[House of Representatives, Rept. No. 830, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

REPORT

[To accompany H. R. 6914]

The Committee on Agriculture, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6914) to authorize cooperation with the several States for the purpose of stimulating the acquisition, development, and proper administration and management of State forests and coordinating Federal and State activities in carrying out a national program of forest-land management, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

STATEMENT

H. R. 6914 has the approval of the American Forestry Association, and a great many of the State foresters appeared before the subcommittee and testified in behalf of this proposed legislation.

Mr. F. A. Silcox, Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, also appeared before the subcommittee and made a very comprehensive statement on the bill, thoroughly approved it, and endorsed in principle the plan set forth therein.

The purpose of the bill is to extend the forestry program through a cooperative set-up of the Federal Government and the States, to stabilize the State forestry departments, and to aid and stimulate the States that have not yet been able to build up their State forestry systems.

The bill provides for the acquisition, development, and management of State forests through the coordinated efforts of the Federal and State agencies. The bill is designed to safeguard the rights of the States as well as those of the Federal Government.

Under the bill, the States may acquire forest units under a long-time payment system which will pay back to the Federal Government the amount of money it spent for the lands.

The selection of the forest areas is made by the State forest authorities and recommended to the Federal Forest Service, which will go over the matter and then submit it to the National Forest Reservation Commission for final approval, which will authorize the purchase of the State forest unit as is now done with regard to the purchase of national-forest units. The States do not have to match the money in any way. The Federal Government purchases the land outright and pays all expenses incident to the purchase. Then the purchased forest area is turned over to the State forest organizations by cooperative agreements signed by the Secretary of Agriculture and the proper State officials. The land thereafter is under the direct management of the State forest service, with cooperative technical assistance and supervision from the Federal Government.

The Federal Government continues to own the land until the States buy the land back out of the resources derived from the land under the management of the States. In other words, it is a resale on the installment plan. The States are given an opportunity through this long-range program of securing these lands ultimately as State forests by being aided at this time by the Federal Government purchasing the lands and turning them over to the States to administer, the future cost of administering, developing, and managing to be paid by the States.

However, section 2 (k) of the bill provides that when tax-delinquent lands are acquired by the State and the Federal Government is relieved of the land-acquisition problem, the Government may aid the State by contributing annually out of any funds made available under this act not more than one-half the cost of administering, developing, and managing such forest lands, along the same line as the Government now contributes toward forest-fire protection throughout the country.

Under this bill a number of small areas may be set up so that participation in the forestry program will be distributed over the State. These widely scattered small areas within the State will act as demonstration areas, show how timberland should be managed and developed, and will serve as a laboratory station from which private owners may obtain valuable knowledge.

Under this bill many small unproductive areas in a State can be made productive and a foundation be laid for permanent stability of communities through permanent forests.

There are adequate safeguards set up in this bill so that the State forest units will be properly managed. With State management of the lands and State income out of the lands, the States will gain in resources as well as in forestry knowledge.

Further, forest lands owned by the State may be used for the establishment of Civilian Conservation Corps camps for practically any kind of work of public interest.

The bill is as follows:

"[H. R. 6914, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

"A bill to authorize cooperation with the several States for the purpose of stimulating the acquisition, development, and proper administration and management of State forests and coordinating Federal and State activities in carrying out a national program of forest-land management, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of stimulating the acquisition, development, and proper administration and management of State forests and of insuring coordinated effort by Federal and State agencies in carrying out a comprehensive national program of forest-land management, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to enter into cooperative agreements with appropriate officials of any State or States for acquiring in the name of the United States, by purchase or otherwise, such forest lands within the cooperating State as in his judgment the State is adequately prepared to administer, develop, and manage as State forests in accordance with the provisions of this act and with such other terms not inconsistent therewith as he shall prescribe, such acquisition to include the mapping, examination, appraisal, and surveying of such lands and the doing of all things necessary to perfect title thereto in the United States: Provided, That, since it is the declared policy of Congress to maintain and, where it is in the national interest to extend the national-forest system, nothing herein shall be construed to modify, limit, or change in any manner whatsoever the future ownership and administration by the United States of existing national forests and related facilities, or hereafter to restrict or prevent their extension through the acquisition by purchase or otherwise of additional lands for any national-forest purpose: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to limit or repeal any legislation authorizing land exchanges by the Federal Government, and private lands acquired by exchange within the limits of any area subject to a cooperative agreement of the character herein authorized shall hereafter be subject to the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 2. No cooperative agreement shall be entered into or continued in force under the authority of this act or any land acquired hereunder turned over to the cooperating State for administration, development, and management unless the State concerned, as a consideration for the benefits extended to it thereunder, complies in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture with the following conditions and requirements which shall constitute a part of every such agreement:

"(a) In order to reduce the need for public expenditures in the acquisition of lands which may be brought into public ownership through the enforcement of appropriate tax delinquency laws, and, by bringing about the handling of such lands upon a sound social and economic basis, to terminate a system of indeterminate and unsound ownership injurious to the private and public interest alike, no additional lands shall be acquired within any State by the United States under this act after June 30, 1942, unless the State concerned has prior thereto provided by law for the reversion of title to the State or a political unit thereof of tax-delinquent lands and for blocking into State or other public forests the areas which are more suitable for public than private ownership, and which in the public interest should be devoted primarily to the production of timber crops and/or the maintenance of forests for watershed protection, and for the enforcement of such law: Provided, That in the administration of this act prior to June 30, 1942, preference will be given to States applying for cooperation hereunder which provide by law for such reversion of title under tax delinquency laws.

"(b) In order to insure a stable and efficient organization for the development and administration of the lands acquired under this act, the State shall provide for the employment of a State forester, who shall be a professionally trained forester of recognized standing, and of a State forest organization in which the personnel is technically qualified and employed, advanced, and retained upon the basis of merit. In the administration of this act preference will be given to those States which have provided by law for such employment on a merit basis.

"(c) The Secretary of Agriculture and the appropriate authorities of each cooperating State shall work out a mutually satisfactory plan defining forest areas within the State which can be most effectively and economically administered by said State, which plan shall constitute a part of the cooperative agreement between the United States and the State concerned: Provided, That nothing herein shall be held to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from later agreeing with the proper State authorities to desirable modifications in such plan.

"(d) No payment of Federal funds shall be made for land selected for purchase by the United States under this act until such proposed purchase has been submitted to and approved by the National Forest Reservation Commission created by section 4 of the act approved March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 513).

"(e) Subject to the approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay out of any available money appropriated for carrying out the purposes of this act any State, county, and/or town taxes, exclusive of penalties, due or accrued on any forest lands acquired by the United States under donations from the owners thereof and which lands are to be included in a State or other public forest pursuant to this act.

"(f) The State shall prepare such standards of forest administration, development, and management as are necessary to insure maximum feasible utility for timber production and watershed protection, and are acceptable to the Secretary of Agriculture and shall apply the same to lands acquired and placed under the jurisdiction of the State pursuant to this act.

"(g) That with the exception of such Federal expenditures as may be made for unemployment relief, the State shall pay without assistance from the Federal Government the entire future cost of administering, developing, and managing all forest lands acquired and over which it has been given jurisdiction under this act.

"(h) During the period any cooperative agreement made under this act remains in force, one-half of the gross proceeds from all lands covered by said agreement and to which the United States holds title shall be paid by the State to the United States and covered into the Treasury. All such payments shall be credited to the purchase price the State is to pay the United States for said land, such purchase price to be an amount equal to the total sum expended by the United States in acquiring said lands. Upon payments of the full purchase price, either as herein provided or otherwise, title to said lands shall be transferred from the Federal Government to the State, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to take such action and incur such expenditures as may be necessary to effectuate such transfer.

"(i) Upon the request of the State concerned, any agreement made pursuant to this act may be terminated by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture may on his own motion terminate any such agreement for any violation of its terms and/or the provisions of this act. If such an agreement is terminated, the Federal-owned lands affected by it shall thereafter be held and administered as are national forest lands acquired by the United States under the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), as amended; but the United States shall reimburse the State for so much of the State funds as have been expended in the administration, development, and management of the lands involved as the Secretary of Agriculture may decide to be fair and equitable.

"(j) The State shall furnish the Secretary of Agriculture with such annual, periodic, or special reports as he may require respecting the State's operations under its agreement with him.

"(k) When a State or political unit thereof acquires under tax delinquency laws title to forest lands without cost to the United States and which lands are included within a State or other public forest, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the Federal Government, may contribute annually out of any funds made available under this act not to exceed one-half the cost of administering, developing, and managing said lands.

"Sec. 3. For the purposes of this act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, not to exceed $20,000,000."

No man can say just exactly how the money will be allocated until the propositions are presented. I do not want to take up too much of the time of the Committee. Perhaps the first year not even $1,000,000 will be spent, perhaps the amount may be more. Why is this so? Because some States like the State of New York and the State of Pennsylvania have forestry services developed to such an extent that it is possible there will not be any applications from those States. On the other hand, States like Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina, Georgia, and others, which have made no progress along this line, or where progress along this line is in its infancy, may have various projects and this proposition will be before them to be taken advantage of as they come forward; each case will stand on its own merits. I am sure there will be no disposition to put more money in one section or in one State than in another any more than there has been with reference to the national-forest program which has been in effect, and which has, in my judgment, given great satisfaction to all the States.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield.

Mr. BACON. As a matter of fact this bill is simply an authorization is it not? This money will have to be appropriated by the Committee on Appropriations each year, and the question of allocation between the several States can be gone into then by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. DOXEY. I think the distinguished member of the Appropriations Committee has hit the nail on the head. I want to say frankly that in our study of the bill the figure of $20,000,000 was merely an arbitrary figure and used more or less as an indication of what it would take to carry the program over a number of years. Of course, in some years more money will be spent than in others.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DOXEY. I have merely tried to be conservative in my statement of the facts and figures. I do not desire to take up too much of your time; however, this is a matter in which nearly every State in the Union is interested, and every forester of every State that has had any contact with the program has gone on record as favoring this bill, and many of them have testified to that effect before our committee.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Does the pending bill provide for the taking over of the areas that are being developed by the States?

Mr. DOXEY. Not in the least. In other words, if the States have made such progress as to have a State forest developed, this will possibly augment their plan. The Government wants to encourage them. The Government is doing all it can to broaden the program by saying it will buy the land if the State will administer it. In other words, there may be one or two small areas which would not be large enough to warrant Federal management, but we say to the States, "We will put up the funds to buy the land if you, the State, will administer the land."

Mr. KELLER. I did not make myself plain. In Illinois at the present time, for instance, we have established two large forests.

Mr. DOXEY. Certainly; those are national forests.

Mr. KELLER. Yes. Does the pending bill interfere with the national forests in any way?

Mr. DOXEY. In no way in the world; that is specifically stated. That program is as separate from this as day is from night.

Mr. KELLER. We would not have got anywhere with it if the Federal Government had not stepped in.

Mr. DOXEY. I appreciate that. The same is true in Illinois, Mississippi, and many other States. But wherever these forests have been developed they have been successful, and we feel that the money has been so wisely expended that another expenditure along this line will prove of permanent value to the various States.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield.

Mr. CASTELLOW. Under the terms of this bill, in the gentleman's opinion, can comparatively small areas be economically handled?

Mr. DOXEY. That is a matter that is up to the State entirely. The Government takes the position that the cost to the Government to manage forest areas is so great because of the necessity of sending trained and experienced workers that it cannot undertake it except in large areas. So in the cases which will be taken care of by the terms of this bill, we say to the States that we will furnish the money to buy the lands if the States will undertake the administration of them. That is a matter of economy for the Government. A matter of choice for the States.

Mr. CASTELLOW. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. The gentleman from North Carolina said that the Federal Government would lend the money to various States for the purpose of putting these areas under reforestation. What interest will the Government charge the various States for the money so lent?

Mr. DOXEY. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that the Government does not lend the States a dime. In effect the Government says to the States that it will purchase the acreage if the State will administer it and the State can buy it back from the Federal Government for just what the Government has in it.

Mr. DONDERO. Without paying interest?

Mr. DOXEY. And there is no interest charged, even over a long period. The Federal Government says to the States that they may repurchase these forests from the Federal Government, but so long as the States do not pay the Government just what the Government paid out, the title remains in the Federal Government if the Government buys them. You understand that if in the beginning the State owned the land, as in the case of tax-delinquent lands, the Government then only contributes one-half of the expenses of administration and the title to the lands is in the State. The only case where a resale or repurchase is necessary is when the Government in the beginning purchases the land from individuals or corporations. The Government furnishes the money only when it is necessary, and if the State desires to do so, it can repurchase the land by paying for it over a long period of time.

When the Government is paid, we are hopeful it may be conveyed to the States with all the improvements thereon. So there are no interest charges, and it is not a loan. It is a trade. In other words, it is a purchase and a repurchase, or a sale and a resale.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. May I say that there has been no activity in the West on the part of the commission of which the gentleman is a member. The intention of this bill is to make it national?

Mr. DOXEY. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. Why have we not had anything done in the West under the present commission?

Mr. DOXEY. There was no desire in the world to discriminate. We have not gone west of the Mississippi River for the reason that there are millions of acres in national parks out in the gentleman's State and adjoining States, while the States back here did not have a nucleus or anything with which to start. Our funds were extremely limited, and we could not scatter out in a national way.

Mr. PIERCE. Our forests are disappearing rapidly. The idea of this bill is a national one?

Mr. DOXEY. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. LORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LORD. I have not clear in my own mind one question. Could a county take advantage of this measure if it has tax land available?

Mr. DOXEY. That question came up before. The language sets out the State as a unit or a subdivision thereof. Of course, where they have State laws under which the tax title is vested in a county and not in the State, certainly that would be a subdivision of the State. It is a quasi-political unit to say the least, and there is no question in my mind if the county can make certain arrangements with the State forestry service to administer it, and can show good cause, the county may take advantage. But no counties have a separate forest administration service; therefore there has to be an understanding and cooperation between the county and the State as to how it is to be administered and how it is to be established.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. There seems to be no provision in this bill covering reimbursement to the State on account of the vesting of this land in the Federal Government. When it is vested in the Federal Government by purchase it goes off the tax rolls and the State would lose the tax revenue. There is no provision for reimbursement to the State on account of that tax loss?

Mr. DOXEY. No. That provision is not in any forest law either. That is the one argument that is advanced against establishing forests, national, State, or otherwise, in a State, because all publicly owned land naturally goes off the tax rolls. The argument that meets that contention is that it is a type of land that is already off the tax rolls, because you cannot make a living on it or use it for any other purpose, and, if the State does not want to lose the revenue they must not ask the Government for funds with which to buy the land for forestry purposes.

Mr. MOTT. If I may correct the gentleman, he has not stated the situation quite accurately. There is a great deal of Federal land in the western part of the United States, particularly in the State of Oregon, which is revested land, which was formerly in private ownership and now vested in the Government.

Mr. DOXEY. As a national forest?

Mr. MOTT. The land I refer to particularly is the Oregon-California grant lands.

Mr. DOXEY. I was referring to that land in national forests.

Mr. MOTT. There was an attempt made to put a provision in the Revesting Act to reimburse the State for tax loss on account of such revestment of land. It has not worked out very well. I have a bill now pending in Congress which I am hoping to get approval of from the Interior Department, which will actually provide for reimbursement to the State on account of the tax loss occurring through revestment of the land.

In regard to national forests, I may say that land was not taken off the tax rolls, nor did the State have anything to do with it, because the national forests in the West were owned by the Government before the States were ever admitted to the Union; so the States had nothing to say about that matter. As a condition to our admission into the Union we were forced to give the Federal Government all the land they wanted, so that it cannot be said that that land has actually been taken off the tax rolls.

Mr. DOXEY. The land never was on the tax rolls.

Mr. MOTT. The land never was on the tax roll. But under this bill the Government would acquire land now on the tax roll. May I ask the gentleman if he does not think in a transfer of that kind provision should be made to reimburse the State in which the land is located for the tax loss which will occur by reason of the vesting of the title to this land in the Federal Government?

Mr. DOXEY. I can appreciate the gentleman's position, but if that provision is put in the bill it would be contrary to existing law, and the gentleman can see what a complicated ramification there would be in connection with this effort. There are many benefits to be derived from this bill. Here is a benefit that goes to the State that we have not considered under existing law. If there is any revenue from any of these forests, a portion of it goes to the State, which will be used for school and road purposes. I can cite you the case of the Pisgah National Forest in North Carolina. The income from that forest has amounted to more than all the taxes that would have been collected if they had been collecting taxes on the land within that forest since it was established as a national forest. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, we have no requests for time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. No cooperative agreement shall be entered into or continued in force under the authority of this act or any land acquired hereunder turned over to the cooperating State for administration, development, and management unless the State concerned, as a consideration for the benefits extended to it thereunder, complies in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of Agriculture with the following conditions and requirements which shall constitute a part of every such agreement:

(a) In order to reduce the need for public expenditures in the acquisition of lands which may be brought into public ownership through the enforcement of appropriate tax delinquency laws, and, by bringing about the handling of such lands upon a sound social and economic basis, to terminate a system of indeterminate and unsound ownership injurious to the private and public interest alike, no additional lands shall be acquired within any State by the United States under this act after June 30, 1942, unless the State concerned has prior thereto provided by law for the reversion of title to the State or a political unit thereof of tax-delinquent lands and for blocking into State or other public forests the areas which are more suitable for public than private ownership, and which in the public interest should be devoted primarily to the production of timber crops and/or the maintenance of forests for watershed protection, and for the enforcement of such law: Provided, That in the administration of this act prior to June 30, 1942, preference will be given to States applying for cooperation hereunder which provide by law for such reversion of title under tax delinquency laws.

(b) In order to insure a stable and efficient organization for the development and administration of the lands acquired under this act, the State shall provide for the employment of a State forester, who shall be a professionally trained forester of recognized standing, and of a State forest organization in which the personnel is technically qualified and employed, advanced, and retained upon the basis of merit. In the administration of this act preference will be given to those States which have provided by law for such employment on a merit basis.

(c) The Secretary of Agriculture and the appropriate authorities of each cooperating State shall work out a mutually satisfactory plan defining forest areas within the State which can be most effectively and economically administered by said State, which plan shall constitute a part of the cooperative agreement between the United States and the State concerned: Provided, That nothing herein shall be held to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from later agreeing with the proper State authorities to desirable modifications in such plan.

(d) No payment of Federal funds shall be made for land selected for purchase by the United States under this act until such proposed purchase has been submitted to and approved by the National Forest Reservation Commission created by section 4 of the act approved March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 9661; U. S. C., title 16, sec. 513).

(e) Subject to the approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay out of any available money appropriated for carrying out the purposes of this act any State, county, and/or town taxes, exclusive of penalties, due or accrued on any forest lands acquired by the United States under donations from the owners thereof and which lands are to be included in a State or other public forest pursuant to this act.

(f) The State shall prepare such standards of forest administration, development, and management as are necessary to insure maximum feasible utility for timber production and watershed protection, and are acceptable to the Secretary of Agriculture and shall apply the same to lands acquired and placed under the jurisdiction of the State pursuant to this act.

(g) That with the exception of such Federal expenditures as may be made for unemployment relief, the State shall pay without assistance from the Federal Government the entire future cost of administering, developing, and managing all forest lands acquired and over which it has been given jurisdiction under this act.

(h) During the period any cooperative agreement made under this act remains in force, one-half of the gross proceeds from all lands covered by said agreement and to which the United States holds title shall be paid by the State to the United States and covered into the Treasury. All such payments shall be credited to the purchase price the State is to pay the United States for said land, such purchase price to be an amount equal to the total sum expended by the United States in acquiring said lands. Upon payments of the full purchase price, either as herein provided or otherwise, title to said lands shall be transferred from the Federal Government to the State, and the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to take such action and incur such expenditures as may be necessary to effectuate such transfer.

(i) Upon the request of the State concerned, any agreement made pursuant to this act may be terminated by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture may on his own motion terminate any such agreement for any violation of its terms and/or the provisions of this act. If such an agreement is terminated, the Federal-owned lands affected by it shall thereafter be held and administered as are national-forest lands acquired by the United States under the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 961), as amended; but the United States shall reimburse the State for so much of the State funds as have been expended in the administration, development, and management of the lands involved as the Secretary of Agriculture may decide to be fair and equitable.

(j) The State shall furnish the Secretary of Agriculture with such annual, periodic, or special reports as he may require respecting the State's operations under its agreement with him.

(k) When a State or political unit thereof acquires under tax-delinquency laws title to forest lands without cost to the United States and which lands are included within a State or other public forest, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the Federal Government, may contribute annually out of any funds made available under this act not to exceed one-half the cost of administering, developing, and managing said lands.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEHRMANN: On page 6, line 18, strike out all of subsection (i) of section 2, down to and including line 5, on page 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(i) Upon the request of the State concerned, any agreement made pursuant to this act may be terminated by the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture may, with the consent and approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission, after due notice given the State and hearing held by said Commission, terminate any such agreement for violations of its terms and/or the provisions of this act. If such agreement is terminated, the United States shall reimburse the State for so much of the State funds as have been expended, in the administration, development, and management of the lands involved as the Secretary of Agriculture may decide to be fair and equitable."

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was sent to me through Senator LA FOLLETTE, who had received it from Mr. Immel, chairman of the Wisconsin Conservation Commission.

The amendment would leave the language practically as it is now, except, as the bill is now, it provides that the Secretary of Agriculture, upon his own motion, without consulting anyone else, can terminate any such agreements.

The amendment provides that he must first have the consent of the National Forest Reservation Commission, which is also a Government agency, and that the State may ask for a hearing to be held. After this the matter is left up to the Commissioner just the same as the bill provides with respect to the amount that may be paid the State or the amount the State is to be reimbursed.

So the amendment does not change the bill except to provide that they must have the consent of the Reservation Commission and must notify the State conservation commission and if they so desire they may demand a hearing. This is all the change that is involved in the amendment.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question to clear the matter in my own mind?

Mr. GEHRMANN. Yes.

Mr. DOXEY. If the State makes a request to be released or asks that the contract be terminated, who would submit any objection to the Secretary of Agriculture objecting to the Secretary doing the very thing that he has been requested to do by the other party to the contract? I think it is an entirely useless amendment, because the whole thing comes at the request of the very people that the gentleman feels may not have a voice in the matter.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me, let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if the effect of his amendment is not simply to take away from the Secretary of Agriculture the arbitrary power of terminating these agreements, and does not the amendment provide that they may only be terminated after the matter has been submitted to the National Forest Reservation Commission? As I understand it, this is the only change of any importance. It provides that the National Forest Reservation Commission must pass upon the matter of terminating the agreement rather than leaving it entirely in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. DOXEY. I want to do anything that will make the measure more effective, but the membership of the National Forest Reservation Commission when Congress is not in session is scattered throughout the United States. We are not here except when Congress is in session and when we are called it is on some very important matter. It looks to me as if the language of the bill is proper and right and would be in the interest of the expeditious handling of the matter, and, to be frank, I do not see why it should be necessary for the National Forest Reservation Commission to have to pass on this at all. If I could agree with the gentleman, I would be very pleased to do so.

Mr. HOPE. If the gentleman will permit further, this is a rather drastic power which is given the Secretary of Agriculture, because it provides that he may, on his own motion, terminate any such agreement for any violation of its terms and/or the provisions of this act. It makes the Secretary of Agriculture the accuser, the judge, and the jury, and everything else. The Secretary of Agriculture would have to initiate the proceedings and then pass on it. It seems to me it is only fair it should be passed on by some other tribunal, and as I understand it, this is all the amendment attempts to do.

Mr. GEHRMANN. The conservation commission of my State feels that the National Forest Reservation Commission, in the first place, must pass on the validity or the advisability of buying these lands. Mr. Immel, the chairman of the conservation commission, is a particular friend of our present Secretary of Agriculture, but, as he says, we do not know who may be in the chair as Secretary of Agriculture in the future, and in the friendliest of spirit he has advised us this should be changed, because it should not be left to one man's judgment, and there should be more than one man to pass on whether or not they should terminate their agreement with any State. This is the only reason for the amendment, and it is simply a precautionary measure for the future.

In my district we have one million and a half acres of land under Government supervision, and Mr. Immel stated that it is of more importance to my district than any other, and that is why he sent this proposed amendment to me.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEHRMANN. Certainly.

Mr. DOXEY. I believe that any Secretary of Agriculture, if he knows the spirit of this legislation, is going to do everything he can to get the States to continue to operate these forests and improve them, because it is a State matter, you may say, instead of a Federal Government matter. I do not believe any Secretary of Agriculture would want to go out and say, unjustifiably, that a State should terminate its activities unless there should be a flagrant violation. I know we are anxious to vote on this matter; and if my other colleagues agree with me, I do not see any harm in the amendment, and if the gentleman insists and it is agreeable to my friends here, we will accept the amendment.

Mr. GEHRMANN. One paragraph of this letter to me reads:

This, in my judgment, makes it possible for the Government or the Secretary of Agriculture in the future, through manipulation, to get control of the area and preclude the State from having any further control or jurisdiction of the same.

I do not doubt that the present administration would be fair and would not do anything injurious to any State; but this is to be a long-term program, and we should not have to be dependent on any one man that may be the Secretary of Agriculture in the future to be the sole judge whether or not any State has violated any agreement made with the Federal Government.

I am afraid of the future and not of the present.

Mr. DOXEY. Let me ask the gentleman a question: Without again reading your amendment, would you let your amendment say "the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission", and then leave the other language like it is? I think, if you do that, it would answer the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. GEHRMANN. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. DOXEY. Let it read:

The Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission, may terminate—

And so forth.

Mr. JONES. I believe the amendment is better as it is, so that the veto power would be in the Commission.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. DOXEY. Now, in lieu of the language in the amendment, let it read, "The Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission, may terminate", and so forth.

Mr. GEHRMANN. The only objection would be that it should read, "after due notice of a hearing" that would compel them to allow the State to be heard before they actually canceled agreements. I will be satisfied for the chairman of the committee to fix it up having that in mind.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this in order that we may have sufficient time to come to an agreement. I understand the language of the present section of the bill provides that upon request the State concerned and the Secretary of Agriculture can terminate the agreement. The amendment does not change that. The bill, however, gives the Secretary of Agriculture, on his own motion, the right to terminate the agreement for violation of its terms, and it seems to me that the States should have some notice and a hearing before this is done. The amendment gives a State an opportunity for a hearing, and the Secretary must have the approval of the Forest Reservation Commission before he can terminate the agreement for alleged violations of the agreement or the law. In other words, it gives the State some protection. It gives an opportunity for a hearing, and makes it necessary for the approval of the Commission before the Secretary of Agriculture can terminate the agreement on his own motion. It seems to me to be a very reasonable provision, and I sincerely hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will accept the amendment.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The bill provides that if a State wants to terminate an agreement, it makes application to the Secretary?

Mr. BOILEAU. That is right.

Mr. ANDRESEN. I really cannot see the necessity for a hearing if the State makes the request.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is perfectly all right. My colleague's amendment does not change that in any respect, but the next sentence reads that upon the Secretary's own motion he may terminate the agreement for violation of the terms of the agreement. In that case the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin permits the State to have an opportunity for a hearing and makes the action of the Secretary subject to the approval of the Commission.

Mr. JONES. Why would it not correct the situation by simply inserting the words "after notice and opportunity for hearing"?

Mr. BOILEAU. My recollection is that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DoxeY] applies only to the first sentence. There does not seem to be any necessity for changing that.

Mr. JONES. But I am talking about the second sentence. You would be compelled to have a hearing, regardless of how trivial it might be.

Mr. BOILEAU. Where would the gentleman suggest putting in that language?

Mr. JONES. Why not make it read "the Secretary of Agriculture may, after notice and opportunity for hearing"?

Mr. BOILEAU. And subject to the approval of the Commission?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think that accomplishes the same thing as the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. JONES. As I read the amendment, you would be compelled to have a hearing.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Of course, this was drafted by the Conservation Commission, but the intent is not to have a hearing when the State asks to terminate this contract, but when the Secretary of Agriculture thinks there has been a violation, there must be a hearing, so that he, upon his own motion, cannot terminate the contract. In that case only will it give them some protection and give them a chance for a hearing.

Mr. JONES. Well, "opportunity for a hearing", but you would not want to require a hearing to be conducted on a small matter.

Mr. GEHRMANN. I would think, if the Secretary of Agriculture charges some irregularity or claims that the State has not lived up to its contract, the State then should be allowed a hearing.

Mr. JONES. The only change I suggest is "opportunity for a hearing", without requiring a hearing. Suppose they give notice of a hearing and they tell them that they do not want a hearing?

Mr. GEHRMANN. That is the way my amendment reads. If both parties deem it necessary that a hearing be had, then it shall be given. It provides that a hearing may be held. I am quite sure that is the way it reads. It does not say "must."

Mr. BOILEAU. Certainly the State could waive its right to a hearing, even though the law gave the State the right to demand a hearing. If it was such a trivial matter, the State would perhaps not demand a hearing.

Mr. JONES. It says:

The Secretary of Agriculture may, with the consent and approval of the Commission, after due notice given the State and hearing held.

Mr. BOILEAU. Could we not correct the entire matter by accepting the gentleman's amendment and having it read "after due notice and opportunity for hearing"?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman be satisfied with the amendment if it reads "after due notice and opportunity for hearing"?

Mr. JONES. I think that would be all right. The amendment as it now reads would require a hearing.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment to include the words "and opportunity for a hearing."

Mr. JONES. Strike out "and hearing held" and insert in lieu thereof "an opportunity for a hearing by said commission."

Mr. GEHRMANN. That is satisfactory to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN] asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEHRMANN to the amendment: Strike out "and hearing held" and insert "an opportunity for a hearing."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to say that the State of West Virginia, through its conservation commission, has given its unqualified approval of the legislation which bears the name of our colleague [Mr. FULMER]. In West Virginia we now have about 1,000,000 acres in the Monongahela National Forest. It is the largest national forest east of the Mississippi River. We also have thousands of acres contained in the George Washington National Forest. At the present time we are trying to coordinate the Federal acquisition of forest lands with our State forest policy, and Maj. H. W. Shawhan, who is leading in the conservation movement in West Virginia from the standpoint of State activities, has given his approval to this measure.

I simply want to add at this time the backing of the State of West Virginia, through its conservation commission, and to express my personal appreciation of the bringing of such legislation to this floor, because I believe it will be most helpful in the coordinating of Federal and State activities in forestry policies and conservation in future years.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McLAUGHLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6914) to authorize cooperation with the several States for the purpose of stimulating the acquisition, development, and proper administration and management of State forests and coordinating Federal and State activities in carrying out a national program of forest-land management, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 223, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOY SCOUT JAMBOREE, 1935

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes for the purpose of propounding a request for the present consideration of House

Joint Resolution 285, with the end in view of saving considerable time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has favorably reported to this House Joint Resolution 285 to permit the admission of Boy Scouts and their officials and executives from foreign countries for the purpose of participating in the national jamboree that is to take place this summer in the city of Washington, without payment of visa fees, head tax, or customs duties on personal effects or paraphernalia to be used in connection with that jamboree.

This is the first thing of the kind that has taken place in the history of our Republic. The President of the United States has invited the Boy Scouts of other nations to participate with our American Boy Scouts. Heretofore, several times, other countries have invited our American Boy Scouts, their officials, their executives, and also parents and guardians to come to foreign shores, and they were well treated and well taken care of, and this measure only seeks to assist our Boy Scouts to extend the same kind of treatment to their Boy Scout guests from other lands.

This resolution permits the Boy Scouts and their officers and their executives to come into this country for the purpose of attending this jamboree without paying the usual visa fees and without paying the $8 head tax and without having to pay customs duties on their effects. I feel this privilege may well be extended to accompanying parents and guardians of these alien Boy Scout participants.

There are certain amendments to the resolution which were agreed to by the committee at our meeting this morning.

At the proper time these supplementary amendments will be submitted for your consideration. I am not now submitting them, but I desire now simply to give you the purpose of them. First, we would permit waiver of payment of visa fees, head tax, and certain customs duty in the cases of any parents or guardians of these alien Boy Scout participants just in the same way this resolution as reported does with regard to Boy Scout participants, Boy Scout officials, and Boy Scout executives; second, we will propose a new proviso at the end of section 1, which would place all these aliens benefited by this resolution under proper regulations to safeguard their return abroad at the conclusion of their visit here for this jamboree.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 285 as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not—we, who had some objections to the resolution, have had an understanding with the chairman of the committee that he will ask for the passage of the amended bill as it was reported by his committee on May 14. With that understanding there will be no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That was agreed upon.

Mr. BLANTON. With such agreement from the chairman, there will be no objection. But there would have been objection, had the gentleman sought to place in the bill the amendments he had his committee agree to this morning, which would have permitted the parents and guardians of foreign Boy Scouts to have accompanied them.

When, on May 10, 1935, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] introduced this House Joint Resolution 285, it embraced the following language:

That alien participants, officials, and other accredited members of delegations—

And also the following all-embracing language—and members of the immediate families of the foregoing—

Which was objected to because under such language a horde of foreigners could get into the United States. I went before his committee, in its hearing on the bill, and urged the committee to amend the bill, and the committee did amend it, and I quote from the commendable report of the committee, filed by our distinguished friend and colleague from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] on May 14, 1935, Report No. 887, the following, to-wit:

The committee amendments are as follows:

First. On page 1, in line 2, after the word "alien", insert the words "Boy Scout."

Second. On page 1, line 3, after the comma, following the word "participants", strike out the words "officials, and other" and in lieu thereof insert the words "Boy Scout officials, and Boy Scout executives, who are."

Third. On page 1, in lines 5 and 6, after the numerals "1935", strike out the comma and the words "and members of the immediate families of the foregoing."

Hence, Mr. Speaker, with the amendments adopted by the committee, the language in the amended bill now reads:

That alien Boy Scout participants, Boy Scout officials, and Boy Scout executives who are accredited members of delegations to the National Boy Scout Jamboree to be held in the United States in 1935—

And so forth; and the words "and members of the immediate families of the foregoing" has been stricken out of the bill.

The gentlemen from New York at a meeting this morning had some kind of an amendment authorized, again attempting to allow "parents and guardians" to come with the Boy Scouts, to which we could not agree. On no hike taken by any Boy Scouts have they ever taken their parents and guardians with them. They do not hike with parents and guardians. Hence it is not necessary for them to jamboree with parents and guardians. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has agreed not to offer any amendments considered in the meeting this morning but to pass the amended bill just as his committee reported it on May 14, 1935, through the report, no. 887, filed by Mr. STARNES; hence we are willing to help him pass the bill so amended May 14, 1935, by unanimous consent.

The report shows that 60 foreign countries have been invited and are expected to send delegations of alien Boy Scouts, Scout officials, and Scout executives. That will bring quite a lot of foreigners into the United States without bringing their parents and guardians.

The committee report, No. 887, shows that the above amendments now in the bill we are to pass are approved by the representatives of the Boy Scouts of America and the representatives of the State Department, the Department of Labor, and the Treasury Department.

Under the above circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to help pass the properly amended bill and have no objection to it.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill does not in any way permit them to remain here, does it?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

Mr. GREEN. It permits them to come in for this event only?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That alien participants, officials, and other accredited members of delegations to the National Boy Scout Jamboree to be held in the United States in 1935, and members of the immediate families of the foregoing, all of whom are nonimmigrants, if otherwise admissible into the United States under the immigration laws, shall be exempted from the payment of the tax of $8 prescribed by section 2 of the Immigration Act of 1917, and exempted from the fees prescribed by law to be collected in connection with executing an application for a visa and visaing the passport or other travel document of an alien for the purpose of entering the United States as a nonimmigrant, and such aliens shall not be required to present official passports issued by the governments to which they owe allegiance: Provided, That aliens shall be in possession of official Boy Scout identity cards issued by their own government or issued by the International Committee of the Boy Scouts indicating their Boy Scout status and nationality, and duly visaed without charge by American consular officers abroad:

And provided further, That such aliens shall comply with regulations not inconsistent with the foregoing provisions which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of Labor and Secretary of State: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall relieve an alien from being required to obtain a gratis nonimmigration visa if coming to the United States as a nonimmigrant, or an immigration visa if coming to the United States as an immigrant.

SEC. 2. That such aliens shall be permitted the free entry of their personal effects and their equipment to be used in connection with the National Boy Scout Jamboree, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, lines 3 and 4, strike out "That alien participants, officials, and other accredited members" and insert in lieu thereof "That alien Boy Scout participants, Boy Scout officials, and Boy Scout executives who are accredited members."

Page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "and members of the immediate families of the foregoing."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

House Resolution 224 was laid on the table.

MALISSA WORTHLEY

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 216 (Rept. No. 977)

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Malissa Worthley, of Cordell, Okla., mother of Vivian Worthley, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' compensation of the said Vivian Worthley, at the rate of $125 per month, and an additional amount, not to exceed $250, to defray funeral expenses of the said Vivian Worthley.

The resolution was agreed to; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMERICAN RETAIL FEDERATION

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 226 (Rept. No. 978)

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 203, incurred by the special committee to investigate the American Retail Federation, acting as a whole or by a subcommittee, not to exceed $2,500, including expenditures for the employment of experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, or by any subcommittee thereof conducting such investigation, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

With the following committee amendment:

At the end of the resolution add the following:

"Sec. 2. That the official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meeting in the District of Columbia."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is this the Cochran resolution to investigate retail merchants who have been distributing propaganda regarding legislation pending in Congress?

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2105) to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, be recommitted to the committee in order that the committee may submit a corrected report thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those Members who spoke on the bill H. R. 6914, the forest land management bill, may have the privilege of revising and extending their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

GENERAL CASIMIR PULASKI

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table House Joint Resolution 107, authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11 of each year General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and directed to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all governmental buildings on October 11 of each year and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies in commemoration of the death of Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, strike out "11 of each year" and insert in lieu thereof "11, 1935."

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1935, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes, to explain the urgency existing for the immediate consideration of a bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

COMPACT BETWEEN STATES OF NEW MEXICO, COLORADO, AND TEXAS

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill introduced by myself and favorably reported by the Committee on Irrigation and merely extends for the term of 2 years the life of a compact between the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas, enabling these States to make an equitable division of the waters of the Rio Grande, which compact was ratified by an act of the Seventy-first Congress on June 17, 1930. The date for the completion of performance by the States under the compact, which has not yet been perfected, expires June 1 next. This means there are only 8 days remaining to get this bill through both Houses of Congress and to the President.

The legislatures of the three States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas have each by recent joint resolutions ratified this extension for 2 years and memorialized the Congress to grant the extension. There is no controversy involved in the bill, and there is no expenditure involved. If it were not for the urgency of time, I would not be on the floor begging you for consideration.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior on this bill, which is brief, is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 10, 1935.

HON. COMPTON I. WHITE,
Chairman Committee on Immigration and Reclamation,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WHITE: I have received your letter of May 4, enclosing for report by me a copy of H. R. 7873, to give the consent and approval of Congress to a 2-year extension from June 1, 1935, of the provisions of the existing Rio Grande compact, approved by Congress June 17, 1930 (46 Stat. 767).

The files do not contain a showing that the proposed extension has been adopted by Texas or by Colorado. Section 1 of the bill recites that the extension was ratified by Colorado by act approved April 13, 1935, and by Texas by act approved April 18, 1935. On the assumption that such recital corresponds to the facts, there is no objection on the part of the Department to the enactment of the bill.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

As soon as I learned from the report that the ratifying acts of the States of Colorado and Texas had not been filed with the Secretary of the Interior, I wired Hon. Paul P. Prosser, attorney general of Colorado, who secured prompt compliance, and these ratifications have been filed by me in the proper office.

This compact is of the utmost importance to the three States concerned. Duly authorized commissions of each State have held a series of conferences to effect an understanding and agreement between them with respect to an equitable division of the waters of the Rio Grande River, which originates in my district. The proposed extension of time will be ample to enable them to determine whether they can or cannot agree. I believe they can. There are imperative reasons, which I have not the time now to go into, why they should. If they fail, the Government can suffer no harm through the extension prayed for.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7873) to give the consent and approval of Congress to the extension of the terms and provisions of the present Rio Grande compact signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on February 12, 1929, and heretofore approved by act of Congress dated June 17, 1930 (Public, No. 370, 71st Cong., 46 Stat. 767).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas the duly accredited commissioners representing the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas, respectively, signed the Rio Grande compact at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on the 12th day of February 1929, and which said compact was thereafter duly ratified by the legislature of each of the aforesaid States and approved by act of Congress on June 17, 1930 (Public, No. 370, 71st Cong., 46 Stat. 767); and

Whereas the legislature of each of the aforesaid States has by appropriate legislation, and pursuant to the express provisions of article 14 of said compact, extended the said compact for the term of 2 years from June 1, 1935, to June 1, 1937: Now, therefore, Be it enacted, etc., That the consent and approval of Congress is hereby given to the extension of the provisions of said Rio Grande compact, and all the terms thereof for the period of 2 years from June 1, 1935, to June 1, 1937, as heretofore ratified by the Legislature of the State of Colorado by act approved April 13, 1935, by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico by act approved February 25, 1935, and by the Legislature of the State of Texas by act approved April 18, 1935.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, for over 2 months the Committee on Patents has been holding hearings on H. R. 4523. Serious charges have been preferred against certain men. The committee unanimously voted to send a letter requesting these men to appear before our committee. This request was ignored. The committee unanimously voted a second time to notify these people to come before the committee. The second request was ignored. The committee then unanimously voted—Republican, Democratic, and Farmer-Laborite members—to request the House to have the privilege of issuing subpoenas summoning these witnesses to testify before our committee, and to do such other acts described in House Resolution 196 as may be necessary. It is in conformity with that sentiment unanimously expressed that I at this time ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration and passage by the House of House Resolution 196.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas various witnesses invited and requested to appear before the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives at hearings on H. R. 4523 have failed to appear and have not appeared before the committee, so that the committee was unable to continue its hearings on the bill; and

Whereas at an executive session of the Committee on Patents held March 7, 1935, the chairman was unanimously authorized by the committee to prepare a resolution to be brought before the Rules Committee of the House, which resolution would empower the Committee on Patents to take such action as would enable the committee to determine the advisability of carrying to realization the principles embodied in H. R. 4523, to sift evidence and testimony that had been brought before the committee at previous hearings and to bring such witnesses before the committee as would enable the committee to ascertain the truth or falsity of the serious charges made at these hearings: Therefore be it

Resolved, That for the purpose of securing information relative to the matters contained in H. R. 4523 the Committee on Patents, as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman and may be served by any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to H. R. 4523, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest that the gentleman leave out all of the "whereases." Outside of that I have no objection to the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this form of resolution authorizing one of the standing committees to have power to subpoena witnesses is usually referred to the Committee on Rules. We have a great number of these resolutions pending. They are always considered with a great deal of care, because some of the experiences in the past have not justified the granting of that power. We recently granted the District of Columbia Committee in connection with the crime investigation this power which has given rise to a great deal of comment on both sides of the question. The Committee on Rules has not had a hearing on this matter for the reason it has been busy with a number of measures, principally those on the administration program. We have it on our calendar. We take up these things when we get to them, but we cannot possibly handle all the rules requested in 1 week on the 8,600 bills which have been introduced during this session of Congress and the thousand bills which have been reported out of committees. That is physically impossible. I think the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], for 8 years Chairman of the Rules Committee, will corroborate me, that it would be impossible for the Rules Committee to report out all of the rules requested by the standing committees, all of which were important to the introducers and all of which are of some importance to the committee which reported them.

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to this resolution, requested by my dear friend from New York [Mr. SROVICH], but, as I say, it is a matter that is still pending before the Rules Committee.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, in order to preserve the orderly and regular procedure I object and ask that this go back to the Rules Committee.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LAWRENCE RIVER AT OGDENSBURG, N. Y.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2311) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdens-burg, N. Y., and immediately consider the bill. I may say there is a similar House bill on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Ogdensburg, N. Y., authorized to be built by the St. Lawrence Bridge Commission by an act of Congress approved June 14, 1933, heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved June 8, 1934, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from June 14, 1935.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 6780) was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS RIO GRANDE AT RIO GRANDE CITY, TEX.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6630) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande, at or near Rio Grande City, Tex., authorized to be built by the Rio Grande City-Camargo Bridge Co., by an act of Congress approved February 15, 1929, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved January 31, 1931, and March 2, 1933, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from February 15, 1935.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RIO GRANDE NEAR BOCA CHICA, TEX.

Mr. WEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7291) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Boca Chica, Tex.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande, at or near Boca Chica, Tex., authorized to be built by the Boca Chica Bridge Co. by an act of Congress approved June 10, 1932, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 1, 1933, and June 19, 1934, are hereby further extended 2 and 4 years, respectively, from June 19, 1935.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have asked this time for the purpose of reading a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Corsicana (Tex.) Chamber of Commerce, adopted on May 14, 1935:

Resolved by the board of directors of the Corsicana (Tex.) Chamber of Commerce, That the resolutions criticizing the national administration passed by the United States Chamber of Commerce at its recent Washington meeting does not reflect the views of this organization and, it is not believed, those of the vast body of citizens composing its local units throughout the country.

We condemn as unwarranted this assumption to speak for and to commit absent members and organizations to this wholesale attack without first submitting such items to a general referendum, as provided by the constitution and bylaws.

We know of no surer way to disrupt the national organization and lose to it the membership of the smaller groups than to repeat the performance recently enacted. When it ceases to reflect the views of the average man and the average community and, in fact, speaks only for the concentrated few who seem to control it, it ought to, and we believe will, lose the sympathy, support, and influence of those who have no ax to grind, but who look only to the spiritual and economic welfare of the country at large.

C. L. JESTER,
C. C. ROBERTS,
LOWRY MARTIN,
Resolutions Committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the majority leader what is to be the program for tomorrow and Friday.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The first bill on the program tomorrow is an amendment to the measure known as "the Taylor Grazing Act." I think this will only take a little while. It will be brought up under a rule. After this, frankly, I do not know that the program has been determined.

Mr. SNELL. There is nothing else on the program now.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order tomorrow and Friday to call the Private Calendar under the rule, preference to be given to omnibus bills.

Under the rule, on Tuesday of this week this would have been the order of business, but this was set aside on account of the memorial exercises.

Mr. SNELL. I understand the gentleman wants to take up the Private Calendar under the new rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not ask that, because there are Members here who are doing hard work on these bills and they are not expecting such a request. They have made up their program for the week, and I do not think this would be fair.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What is their program for Friday, if we do not do this?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York has his program for Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, and so have other Members. They may have other plans for Thursday and Friday.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It has been talked for several days that when the Private Calendar was lost on Tuesday on account of memorial exercises, they would be given an opportunity at the very earliest possible moment. Friday is an opportunity to give it to them. If they do not get a chance on Friday, it will be 1 month before they get another chance.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever the Members know of any agreement that the leaders make, I have never known of a case where they did not follow such agreement, but the Members have not had any understanding about this matter coming up.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It has been talked generally. If the gentleman does not know about it, he is one of the very few who does not know of it.

Mr. BLANTON. We found out too late once during consideration of the Patman bill about an agreement among a few Members, and as soon as we found it out we went along with it and helped them out on their agreement; but there are Members here who watch these bills and they do not know about the possibility of this calendar coming up Thursday or Friday, and I am constrained, Mr. Speaker, to object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Is the gentleman opposed to the Private Calendar coming up on Friday in any manner?

Mr. BLANTON. I would not object to its coming up under the old rules of the House, but there is no way to stop bad bills under this new rule except by concerted action of certain men who have studied them and who are prepared to stop them.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Concerted action of two, if the gentleman wants to call that concerted action.

Mr. BLANTON. It is the concerted action of Members who study these bills, and are prepared to stop unmeritorious bills.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There are only two, and the House usually knows who those two are going to be.

Mr. BLANTON. There are more than two here watching the Federal Treasury, I will state to the gentleman. There is a bunch of us here, and they are getting so they are watching it with effectiveness, and whenever a bad bill comes up they are prepared to stop it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, they watched it today, all right.

Mr. SNELL. Not a very large group.

Mr. BLANTON. They watched it today, 322 Members voting as I did to 98 against.

Mr. O'CONNOR. To the tune of $2,200,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. In the interest of World War veterans who in France carried our flag to victory and saved the civilization of the world.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KENNEY. My parliamentary inquiry is whether the Ways and Means Committee has made any request for permission to sit during the sessions of the House in order to hold hearings on the bill I have introduced for a national lottery?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information on the subject. [Laughter.]

BRIDGE ACROSS RAINY RIVER, MINN.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6834, to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing Vernon W. O'Connor, of St. Paul, Minn., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rainy River at or near Baudette, Minn."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved March 8, 1932, authorizing Vernon W. O'Connor, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rainy River, at or near Baudette, Minn., be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of the bridge herein referred to be commenced within 1 year and completed within 3 years from the date of approval hereof.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT'S WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include three radio addresses delivered by the Secretary of the Interior Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, and Hon. Frank B. Walker, concerning the procedure under which they expect to handle the $4,000,000,000 Public Works relief funds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, do they explain how workmen are going to live on $12 to $94 monthly wages?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. They give in detail the procedure by which they expect to handle that fund, and I am sure it will be very helpful and instructive information for the Members of the House and Senate, as well as the public generally.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object and my colleague from Colorado knows why I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include herewith the three addresses broadcast over the Columbia and National Broadcasting networks at Washington, D. C., on May 16, 1935, by Hon. Frank C. Walker, Executive Director of the National Emergency Council; the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Allotments; and Hon. Harry L. Hopkins, Works Program Director, explaining the procedure and the coordination of the work allotted to each of them in the administration of the $4,000,000,000 public-relief appropriation recently authorized by Congress.

These addresses set forth very clearly and definitely the respective authority and duties of each of those officials and the methods of administering the work that is designated to those three departments, and gives a vast amount of instructive information.

My reason for asking to have these addresses inserted in the RECORD is to as far as possible avoid confusion and be helpful to the public in general, and more particularly to the Members of Congress, who every day are confronted with a great many questions in relation to the apportionment of these funds and the necessary course for applicants to take in relation thereto. I am sure the addresses will be of great importance for those purposes.

The addresses in the order in which they were delivered are as follows:

REMARKS OF FRANK C. WALKER, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY COUNCIL.

The President's works program is discussed before you this evening with the hope that its objectives and procedure may be so clarified that there will be a minimum of time elapse before the millions in this country on direct relief will be engaged in useful employment.

This is one program. It has one objective. It must take 3,500,000 persons from their dole-receiving status of today and place them at work upon publicly useful projects.

A new conception of a public-works program is necessary. In the past, public works have meant long-time constructions of buildings, of dams, canalizations, bridges, and highways. The prime elements of consideration have been utility, engineering, soundness, and legal authority. Now comes an added consideration, viz, the undertaking of projects on the simple basis that they will provide employment at places easily accessible to the millions now obliged to exist on outright grants of relief.

A new yardstick must be applied to all works projects. This new yardstick must conform to the principles enunciated by the President in his discussion of this works program.

In the first instance, these projects must be useful. The President does not intend to provide allotments of funds for undertakings from which there is not apparently a very definite public benefit.

In the next instance, the projects must be of a nature which will produce the maximum of employment for the money spent. In tackling the colossal task of reemploying 3,500,000 persons with the expenditure of approximately $4,000,000,000, emphasis must be given to those undertakings which will spend a large portion of their allotment for labor.

The projects must, as far as possible, represent undertakings capable of liquidating themselves and returning to the Treasury as large as possible a percentage of the outlay.

Because of the immediate pressure for liquidating direct relief rolls, funds allotted under the act must be promptly spent and not permitted to stagnate over a period of years.

It is also necessary that projects be selected with the extremely primary objective of getting people off the relief rolls. In other words, the type and character of the projects must be such that it will provide for the type and character of persons now receiving direct relief.

Accessibility of the projects to the centers of unemployment must be considered an important factor. Nothing can be gained for the broad objective in starting projects so far removed from the actual areas of distress that family removals and general migration at high cost would be necessary. To tackle the problems speedily and effectively, it is essential that sound projects be selected as near as possible to the locations of the extreme relief loads.

The President has divided the responsibility for carrying out these principles and has placed it upon three definite agencies:

1. The Division of Applications and Information of the National Emergency Council, which will be directed by your speaker.
2. The Advisory Committee on Allotments, which is headed by the Secretary of the Interior, Harold L. Ickes.

3. The Works Progress Administration, under the supervision of Mr. Harry L. Hopkins.

May I give you a brief outline of the functions and the objective of the Application Division and its relationship to the President's works program? Mr. Ickes and Mr. Hopkins will explain in detail the very important parts which their organizations will play in attaining the general objective.

A basic principle of this program has been that there should be no unusual increase in Government agencies, as few as possible new administrations, and no unusual additions to the Federal pay roll. In other words, the President intends that existing governmental agencies shall do the work. Some 60 of them are now ready to undertake their shares. The three major divisions which have been mentioned are designed to coordinate their efforts and, to consolidate their accomplishments and to establish a single policy—that of substituting useful employment for direct relief.

The office of this Division has been developed solely on the principle that it should use existing agencies. No new duplications of governmental machinery will be permitted.

The speed with which this program must be put into action of necessity means that there must be decentralization and that most of the examination must be done in the field offices. Congestion or anything approaching a bottleneck must be avoided. For that reason it is intended that examinations will be carried out as far as possible in the States.

To this end both the Public Works Administration and the Works Progress Administration will examine applications in the field. The part of the State directors for the National Emergency Council will be to assist these two agencies within the States in coordinating their two programs and in assisting all applicants for projects to get their proposals into the proper channels and into the stage of real action. To this end the State directors for N. E. C. will operate general clearing houses of information on all project proposals. They will be open at all times to assist States, municipalities, other political subdivisions, and private individuals in getting their work relief ideas into acceptable form and into the hands of the officials who can appropriately consider them.

All Federal projects originate in the departments or agencies themselves.

Non-Federal projects are handled in a different way. The original application for the project is made to the State director of the Public Works Administration. The actual allotment applications will be prepared by the P. W. A. from such project applications, recommendations, and suggestions submitted to its State directors by individuals, States, counties, cities, and other Governmental agencies. These proposals will be coordinated as to relief needs locally.

After the State director of P. W. A. transmits a project proposal to his Washington headquarters, that agency will immediately obtain comments from all governmental agencies having partial or technical jurisdiction over such undertakings, or which might have at their command special knowledge concerning them.

P. W. A. will then prepare the allotment application and transmit it to the Division of Applications and Information, which will cause it to be examined and reviewed. The allotment application also will be referred to the Works Progress Administration for report as to its effect in lifting the unemployment relief load.

After scrutiny by the Works Progress Administration, applications will be returned to this Division. They are now assuming final shape. The next step is transmittal to the Advisory Committee on Allotments which recommends approval or disapproval of the applications to the President.

The work-relief projects, as set forth by the President in his Executive order, will be handled through a different channel. They are projects designed to insure a maximum of employment and will be proposed and carried out through the Works Project Administration.

Proposals for such projects will be received by the State and local administrators of the Works Progress Administration. They will be carefully examined and coordinated with the pending project proposals in the hands of the P. W. A. State director.

They will then be sent to Washington for final review, and if found eligible under the fundamental principles of the statutory requirements of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, the Works Progress Administration will prepare allotment applications and transmit them to this Division, which, in turn, will transmit them to the Advisory Committee on Allotments.

The information service which has been set up in connection with this Division will be at your service. Experts, specialists, technicians in sixty-odd Government agencies, including executive departments, will, as necessity arises, review and study these allotment applications. A study and comparison of the usefulness of all plans submitted will be made by the Division, and plans will be singled out for special consideration in the proportion that they promise relief within an accessible geographical area.

This Division is seeking to overlook no opportunity to use effective cooperation between the agencies and divisions in speeding up the program. Within our own office are works advisers from the Works Progress Administration, from the Public Works Administration, and from the principal agencies engaged in carrying out the program. In addition, this Division has works advisers in all of the other agencies engaged in carrying out the program who will be available for expert advice and assistance in clearing up difficulties which may arise in the consideration of any project. These, with the information service, are planned as the channels which will truly facilitate this tremendous social and economic readjustment.

It is the duty of each governmental agency involved to see to it that the allotment and expenditure of this huge sum shall be so controlled that its fullest use and benefit shall go to the regions, the communities, and the purposes for which it is appropriated. Every last effort within our power will be given to provide swift, simplified, businesslike direction, because this is a business job, to be executed intelligently by sane and orderly methods.

When the President some time since discussed with you the works program, he said:

"Feel free to criticize. Tell me of instances where work can be done better or where improper practices prevail. Neither you nor I want criticism conceived in a purely faultfinding or partisan spirit, but I am jealous of the right of every citizen to call to the attention of his Government examples of how the public money can be more effectively spent for the benefit of the American people."

May we suggest that you follow the President's advice literally and transmit your thought and suggestions to the existing agencies to the end that the work may be done honestly and efficiently and may accomplish the greatest good.

REMARKS BY HON. HAROLD L. ICKES, SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR AND PUBLIC-WORKS ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. Frank C. Walker, appointed head of the Division of Applications and Information under the new works-relief program, has just told you the part that his division will play in what is expected to be the final drive to rout the depression that this administration inherited from its predecessor. In my judgment, the President could not have chosen a better qualified man than Mr. Walker for this important post. He has sound judgment, a broad and varied experience, and ability to inspire confidence.

Following me, Mr. Harry L. Hopkins will tell you of the plans that he has formulated for driving forward that part of the program that the President has entrusted to him as head of the Works Progress Administration. Mr. Hopkins has already done an outstanding piece of work as F. E. R. A. administrator, and as C. W. A. administrator. He has energy, drive, and imagination, and the will to achieve his object regardless of whatever difficulties may lie in the way.

Under orders from the President, I am serving as chairman of the Advisory Committee on Allotments of 21 members, the third of the major divisions set up by the President to carry out the objects and purposes of the works-relief program.

It is the duty of the Advisory Committee on Allotments to pass upon all applications for funds and then recommend action to the President, who will have the final determination whether or not any project is to be granted money out of the $4,000,000,000 appropriated by the Congress. The procedure will be something like this:

Technically applications will be received by Mr. Walker's Division of Applications and Information. He may delegate authority to other agencies to receive applications as the representatives of his division. He has already indicated that applications originating in the various States may be received by the respective directors of P. W. A. They will then be examined by the P. W. A. State division and forwarded to Washington. This is in the interest of saving time, which is one of the primary considerations of the works-relief organization.

Whether or not applications are received directly or through another agency, they will be promptly forwarded for examination to that agency within whose jurisdiction the particular project naturally would fall. For instance, a P. W. A. project would be forwarded to P. W. A. for examination, and a works-relief project would be forwarded to Mr. Hopkins' division. After examination, the project will be sent on to Mr. Walker with a recommendation for approval or for disapproval, and subject, to his review, it will be ready to be forwarded to the Advisory Committee on Allotments, which in its turn will pass upon the project. If the action of the Advisory Committee on Allotments is favorable, it will go to the President for final action.

If the President says "go ahead", then the project will be sent to that particular agency which will be charged with responsibility either for building or for supervising the building of the project. For instance, if it is a matter that comes within the purview of the Army engineers, the project will be sent there. If it is a reclamation project, it will go to the Bureau of Reclamation in the Interior Department. If it is a road project, it will go to the Bureau of Roads of the Department of Agriculture.

The new program will be based strictly upon the need for work in the various sections of the country. Mr. Hopkins will determine what that need is and will see to it that the work is kept moving. The purpose Congress had in making this huge appropriation of $4,000,000,000 was to provide money to take as many men as possible off of relief rolls. We are, therefore, charged with the responsibility of allocating this money for projects in those sections of the country where there are men and women ready and able to work but who have no work. So far as may be, the greatest number of projects are to be gotten under way in or near the centers of greatest unemployment. If we can, we want to take the work to those who need it. Obviously it would be both difficult and expensive to set up a project in a section of the country where there are comparatively few unemployed and then move men to that site from distant centers of unemployment.

In our new program, just as with the one which is now drawing to a close, there will be no place for political logrolling. No part of this huge sum of the people's money will go into a pork barrel.

Our object is to get men off of relief rolls, regardless of politics or local considerations. There never has been an inside track to Public Works money, and there will be no back-door entrance to work-relief allotments and projects. The sooner that all communities accept this proposition in full faith the better it will be for the general welfare and the quicker the idle will move from relief rolls onto pay rolls.

As with the P. W. A. program, certain standards have been set. Among the principles laid down by the President we find the following:

- (1) The projects must be useful.
- (2) The projects must be of such a nature that a large proportion of the money spent will go into wages for direct labor at the site.
- (3) Projects promising an ultimate return to the Federal Treasury of a considerable share of the cost will be given preference.
- (4) Funds provided for each project must be promptly put to work, since it is the purpose, so far as possible, to complete all projects by July 1, 1936.

I think the country is glad to know that P. W. A. is to be continued as an agency of the Federal Government. P. W. A. has more than justified itself. Thanks to the P. W. A. program, there has been actual construction work in 3,049 of the 3,073 counties of the United States. These projects have a high social value. They have been undertaken and built in the confident expectation that they will prove to be real assets of the various communities for many years to come. P. W. A. will continue to offer its services to those communities that want to avail themselves of those services. We will be glad to cooperate with you in building such useful and socially desirable public works as sewage systems, waterworks, schools, power plants, bridges, public buildings, etc.

In order to facilitate the P. W. A. program I have set about to decentralize the P. W. A. organization. This will have the twofold beneficial effect of clearing the applications faster and of bringing P. W. A. into closer contact with the local communities. In each State there will be set up a miniature of the general P. W. A. administration at Washington. A State P. W. A. director will be in charge, and associated with him will be an engineering, a legal, and a finance staff, varying in size, but adequate to carry out expeditiously the work that will be entrusted to it. We are able to do this at this time because we now have experienced men in these various divisions in Washington who are qualified to go into the States and move the program at an accelerated pace.

P. W. A. projects should be submitted promptly to the P. W. A. director in each State. Instead of forwarding the applications to Washington for approval they will be examined on the ground. This will make for much greater speed. Since the local staff will be in close touch with the various communities it will be able to get whatever information it may need. The applications will then be sent on to Washington where, after a brief review by the P. W. A. general staff, they will follow the procedure that has already been outlined.

As has been said, preference will be given to the projects the cost of which will be shared between the Federal and the local governments. It is our ambition to help to finance as many such projects as possible. We will want to continue the fine record of P. W. A. throughout the country. Over 17,000 P. W. A. projects, either completed or under construction, now dot the map of the United States. They gave direct work on actual construction to millions of men and indirect work to additional millions who produced and fabricated and moved the materials used at the sites.

See to it that your local projects are of a quality and usefulness of which you will be proud. See to it that they are a type to acquire which you would willingly pay local taxes. Remember that Federal money is your money just the same as if it came from your local school, sewer, water, city, or county tax assessments. Your community has resources and in honor and patriotism must bear its share of the burden. The Federal Government stands ready to aid, but it expects every community to do its bit.

ADDRESS OF HARRY L. HOPKINS, WORKS-PROGRESS ADMINISTRATOR

The President, in his recent radio address on work relief, definitely declared that the primary objective of the new Work Relief Act is to put to work three and a half million people now on relief rolls throughout the country on the basis of a national, useful work program.

The activities of the Works Progress Administration, one of the agencies established by the President, are completely directed toward the accomplishment of such primary objective. The Works Progress Administration has been specifically designated by the President to be responsible to him for the honest, efficient, speedy, and coordinated execution of the work-relief program as a whole, and for the execution of that program, in such manner as to move from the relief rolls, to work on such projects, or in providing employment, the maximum number of persons in the shortest time possible.

To accomplish this end the Works Progress Administration has been given various powers and duties. Essentially they may be divided into (a) the carrying on of useful projects throughout the country, designed to assure a maximum of employment in all localities, and (b) the coordination of the various activities to be conducted by the other agencies operating under the Work Relief Act to assure the accomplishment of the end desired.

The machinery of the Works Progress Administration is now in the process of being established. It will be simple and yet based on the notion that the success of the Work Relief program depends upon speed and efficiency. To accomplish this end there will be a decentralization of activity and responsibility, with, however, a constant supervision and check from Washington.

State works progress administrators will have the authority to set up such branch offices in the localities as are necessary and desirable. General instructions and advice as to major policies, with respect to the conduct of the activities of the State and local units, will issue currently from the Works Progress Administrator in Washington.

The State works progress administrators and their local units will be primarily responsible for the initiation and carrying through in their locality of the small and useful works-relief projects which are designed to insure a maximum of continuous employment in all localities. All applications for such projects should be filed with the local representative of the Works Progress Administration. This type of work-relief projects includes projects to be carried on as Federal projects, and also projects of States, municipalities, agencies thereof, or other public bodies for which only a grant of Federal funds is to be made.

These administrators will be available in the immediate future to plan with local public officials and citizens projects which will give useful work to the needy unemployed.

Applications for such projects, when filed with the local representative, will be forwarded to Washington, through the appropriate State works progress administrator. The applications will be made on appropriate forms which will be available at the local offices.

Allotment of funds will be made by the President for the work program to be conducted by the Works Progress Administration. Each State works progress administrator will be advised, from time to time, as to the specific work projects which have been thus approved, and for which allotments of funds have been made.

The Works Progress Administration, in connection with its functions, will have the task of prescribing the necessary rules:

- (a) To assure that as many of the persons employed on all work projects as is feasible shall be persons receiving relief;
- (b) To govern the selection of such persons for employment on work projects; and
- (c) To assure a coordinated work-relief program which will actually employ the three and a half million employable persons now on relief.

The eligibility of works projects, whether under the supervision of the Works Progress Administration or of any other agency, will be determined by the criteria established in such rules.

The responsibility for coordinating the activities of the various agencies will make it necessary for the Works Progress Administration, through its State and local representatives, to check each proposed project, to ascertain the relationship between the cost involved, the number of persons to be employed on the project, and the number of such workers on relief rolls available in the areas where such project will be undertaken. Such initial check will not be all, because even after a project is approved it will be the function of the Works Progress Administration, again through its State and local representatives, to furnish the necessary number of persons from the relief rolls required on the project, and also to constantly check as to whether this number is being maintained in employment on such project.

Coordinating the activities of the various agencies involves several other tasks. For instance, the Works Progress Administration will require uniform, periodical reports of progress on all work projects. Where delay appears the Works Progress Administration may recommend to the President appropriate measures for eliminating such delay, and also possibly recommend the termination of projects where it develops that they are not affording the amount of employment warranting their continuance. Further, because of the utmost importance that the work-relief program be carried through without any tinge of dishonesty or fraud, the Works Progress Administration has been directed to establish and operate a division of progress investigation, and to coordinate the pertinent work of existing investigative agencies of the Government.

The Works Progress Administration has also been designated as an agency to provide for the coordination of such data-compiling projects as form a part of the work-relief program, and of such portion of other research activities as may be necessary or useful in carrying out such program.

Under the Work Relief Act the President is authorized to prescribe the working conditions and the rates of pay to be paid to workers employed on the work projects. The Works Progress Administration has been directed by the President to investigate wages and working conditions in order to submit to the President such findings as will aid the President in fulfilling such function.

At the risk of repetition, it should be finally stated that all of the activities of the Works Progress Administration and of every other agency operating under the Work Relief Act will definitely be directed toward carrying out the primary objective of the President to give employment on a national work program to three and a half million persons now on relief rolls who are anxious and desirous and capable of performing useful work.

This program represents a great Nation's obligation to the unemployed. Its operations will be extended to every city and town in America.

The work will be done promptly, efficiently. It will be carried out not only in the best interests of the unemployed but as a great national endeavor, the results of which will be of benefit to the Nation and all of its citizens.

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLARD] has withdrawn his objection to the consideration of House Resolution 196. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, and I ask unanimous consent that the preamble may be stricken out.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 23, 1935

(Legislative day of Monday, May 13, 1935)

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, May 22, 1935, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES—VETO MESSAGE

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday, the Chair lays before the Senate for reconsideration House bill 3896, being the so-called "Patman bonus bill"; and the question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Reynolds
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Robinson
Austin	Costigan	Lewis	Russell
Bachman	Couzens	Logan	Schall
Bailey	Davis	Loneragan	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Dickinson	Long	Sheppard
Barbour	Dieterich	McAdoo	Shipstead
Barkley	Donahey	McCarran	Smith
Bilbo	Duffy	McGill	Steiwer
Black	Fletcher	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Frazier	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Borah	George	Metcalf	Townsend
Brown	Gerry	Minton	Trammell
Bulkley	Gibson	Moore	Truman
Bulow	Glass	Murphy	Tydings
Burke	Gore	Murray	Vandenberg
Byrd	Guffey	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Capper	Harrison	Nye	Walsh
Caraway	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Carey	Hatch	Overton	White
Chavez	Hayden	Pittman
Clark	Johnson	Pope
Connally	Keyes	Radcliffe

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], who is detained from the Senate on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there is now pending before the Senate the question of the reconsideration of the bill known as the "Patman bonus bill." After consideration of this question during the past 24 hours, it appears that there is very little if anything new that may be said upon the question of the necessity or desirability of enacting the proposed legislation.

Eighteen years ago and more the Senate, in conjunction with the House of Representatives, declared war on what were known as the Central Powers of Europe. After war was declared, 4,750,000 soldiers were called to the colors. Of that number, 2,375,000 were conducted overseas, and 1,400,000 served upon the battle front. While some of these 4,750,000 soldiers volunteered in the war, the great majority were drafted into the service.

These men who were inducted into the service received the magnificent sum of $30 per month or $1 per day. Those who could get across received a bonus of 10 percent because of the opportunity to fight a foreign enemy on foreign soil. Men who did not have to go to war had the benefit of plenty of employment at high wages. In my section of the country the lowest wage paid for common labor was something like $4 per day or $100 per month.

These boys, for they were boys in those days, out of their $30 per month were forced to contribute to an insurance fund to insure each other's lives. In addition to being forced to contribute to the insurance fund to insure their comrades' lives, these boys were forced to buy bonds, to give up part of their salary to pay the expenses of that war.

In addition to receiving the magnificent sum of $1 per day, they received their board and keep, which cost the Government less than 50 cents per day.

When the war was over and these millions of our youth returned to the United States they saw unnumbered millionaires who had been made as a result of excessive war profits. They saw the profits made by corporations and stockholders in corporations. They saw the money that had been made by their compatriots who did not have to go to war. Then it dawned upon them that they had not received a fair compensation for the services they had rendered their Government and their country.

Because of these conditions the boys asked for an adjustment of the salaries paid to them and the salaries paid to others here at home. After years of demand upon the Government the Congress made its own adjustment and gave the soldiers the magnificent sum of $1 per day for the time they actually served in the Army and those who were sent overseas had an additional 25 cents per day added because of such foreign service. So the dollar which they received while in the service and the dollar which they received because of this adjustment made for them a magnificent sum of $2 to $2.25 per day. Thus, we arrive at the total remuneration which these millions of the youth received, and are to receive, for the honor of serving in the United States Army at home and abroad in 1917 and 1918.

To get the $2 or the $2.25 per day as just set forth, this bill must be passed by this Senate. With this bill passed and the added money paid the veterans then their total wages or salary for fighting for our Government will be only about one-half the wages paid common labor during the war.

Mr. President, this question should be approached from a strictly business viewpoint and as a strictly practical proposition. The House on three occasions has voted the payment of the so-called "soldiers' bonus." During this Congress the House passed the bill by a vote of approximately 4 to 1. Thereafter the bill came to the Senate and the Senate passed the bill by a vote of 55 to 33. In constitutional course the bill was sent to the President. The President saw fit to veto the measure and returned the bill to the House of Representatives. The President yesterday set forth his reasons for the veto. The reasons apparently are sufficient unto the President. Apparently the President said all in opposition to the bill that could be said. On yesterday the House of Representatives reconsidered the bill in the light of the veto of the President, and upon roll call cast a vote of 322 for overriding the veto and 98 for sustaining such veto.

The bill and the veto are now before the Senate for our consideration and action.

Mr. President, if the so-called "wage or salary adjustment" is not paid prior to 1945—and no one can prophesy the future accurately—yet as I see the situation, while the soldiers will receive the money due them at that time dollar for dollar, I doubt if those dollars in 1945 will have the buying power that the dollars of today have at this moment.

Because of the depression we have now reached that period where we have inflation of bonds uncontrolled. Because of this depression we have now reached that point where we have inflation of credit uncontrolled. We are spending this year $10,000,000,000 to run the Nation and pay for the unusual expenses because of the depression. If we have to spend $10,000,000,000 next year and $5,000,000,000 the following year—and we may have to do it, though I hope we do not—the money can only be secured by borrowing, and the more we borrow the cheaper eventually the dollar must be made.

The veterans now know that in terms of gold they have already lost 40 percent of the value of the adjustment which was given them in 1925. At that time, had they been paid in gold dollars, such dollars would have weighed 25.8 grains of gold 0.9 fine. If they were paid today in gold dollars, such dollars would weigh only 15½ grains of gold 0.9 fine. So already the soldiers have lost 40 percent of their value of their compensation measured in terms of gold.

While it is true that in 1945 the soldiers will receive what is due them according to contract, I must remind Senators that already 3,000,000 of these soldiers have borrowed upon their contracts. Many of the 3,000,000 who have borrowed one-half the amount due them have been unable to pay the interest on the loan. The interest is being added daily to the amount they owe the Government. In the final adjustment the interest will be subtracted. I have been told, though I have not made the computation, that if those who have a $1,000 certificate in the first instance had borrowed $500 and if the interest is not paid, in 1945 such a soldier will have less than $100 due him. If the soldier has not borrowed, in 1945 he will have the full $1,000 due him. But if these dollars are worth only a fraction of what they are worth today, how much value will that soldier have in 1945? In terms of gold he has already lost 40 cents out of each dollar.

Mr. President, in the veto message which we have before us the Chief Executive said yesterday that if the adjusted compensation were paid now the insurance feature of the certificate would be destroyed. In other words, if we pay the soldiers now, the dependents of the soldiers will have no protection left. Already 3,000,000 of these soldiers have borrowed on their certificates to the extent of one-half their value. If they are unable to pay the interest, then at the end of the period they will have practically nothing left, because the interest on what they have borrowed will eat up and consume the balance due them on their contracts. Thus it is obvious that if the veto message is sustained the value of 3,000,000 certificates will be thereby practically destroyed.

Mr. President, permit me to call attention to another phase of this question. One hundred and thirty thousand were killed in the war. Since the war closed in 1918, 440,000 have died. According to the tables of mortality, between now and 1945, 916,000 more of the soldiers will probably die. Add the 130,000 who were killed in the war, the 440,000 who have died since the war closed, and the 916,000 who will probably die between now and 1945, and what do you have? We have a total of approximately a million and a half of the soldiers who will not be alive when their adjusted-compensation certificates shall fall due in 1945.

Mr. President, which class of the soldiers are the ones most likely not to be here in 1945? In the case of the able-bodied man who was not injured in the war, the chances are that he will be alive in 1945. He can and will collect; but the man who was injured, the man who was wounded, the man who was gassed, the man who contracted disease, will probably not be here then. Twenty-seven years after the war closed the wounded, the maimed, and the diseased will be gone. They will receive no compensation whatever except the meager amounts they will have received prior to their death. The able-bodied men, those of them who are still alive in 1945, will receive the compensation. They will get the benefit. So, Mr. President, the postponement of the payment of these certificates is in the interest and for the benefit of the able-bodied men and to the disadvantage and detriment of the wounded, the gassed, the maimed, the diseased, and the sick.

It was said on yesterday that the payment of this sum now would be in favor of the able-bodied man and against the interest of the man who was diseased, sick, injured, or wounded. I construe the situation in exactly the opposite way. The payment of this amount now would be in the interest of the disabled, the maimed, the wounded, the injured, and the sick, because if it is not paid before 1945 some million and one-half of the veterans will not be here to collect on their certificates.

Mr. President, deaths on the battlefield are not the only casualties of war. Three years ago we had pending before the Congress the Patman bonus bill. At that time we had a President who vetoed that bonus bill before the Congress had even a chance to vote upon it—that is, he said he would veto it. He threatened a veto. He pledged a veto. The House, however, passed the bill by about 3 to 1, and the bill came to this Senate for consideration, and after consideration the roll was called and 20 Senators voted in favor of the passage of the bill in 1932. Twenty voted for it. Sixty voted against it.

After the roll was called, and before the result was announced, my distinguished colleague from Alabama, Mr. BANKHEAD, addressed the Chair and asked permission to change his vote from "yea" to "nay" in order that he might enter a motion for reconsideration. I did the same thing on that historic occasion. I addressed the Chair and changed my vote from "yea" to "nay" in order that I likewise might assist if necessary in entering a motion for reconsideration. After those two motions had been entered, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. REED, with Mr. Vice President CURTIS in the chair, made a motion that the Bankhead motion and the Thomas motion be tabled. No sooner had the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania made the motion to table the two motions which had just been entered than the distinguished Senator from Utah, Mr. SMOOT, and the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. MOSES, both addressed the Chair, and both moved to lay these motions on the table. The Vice President recognized the Senator from New Hampshire over the protests of the Senator from Alabama and myself; but the motion was put, the vote was had, the motion carried, and the bonus bill was dead.

Mr. President, since 1932 there have been two elections held to elect United States Senators. At each election one-third of the membership of this body is elected. One-third of 96 is 32. In the past two elections we have elected 64 United States Senators. Twenty-three seats held by Senators voting against the bill are changed today as a result of those two recent senatorial elections. Twenty-three Senators who voted against the bonus bill in 1932 are not here today.

Mr. President, where is the President who vetoed the bill 3 years ago? Where is the Vice President who broke a precedent in recognizing the Senator from Pennsylvania to make a motion to reconsider when two motions to reconsider had already been entered? Where is the Senator from New Hampshire who made the motion to table? Where is the Senator from Utah who tried to move to table? Where are these 23 casualties? Mr. President, they are gone. They have joined the long list of the politically unknown and forgotten.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LONG. My attention was distracted. I beg the Senator's pardon. Had he referred to the President who vetoed the last bonus bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The President in power in 1932, who threatened to veto the bill even before the Congress passed it; I referred to President Hoover.

Mr. LONG. And the Senator referred to some 23 men. Did he mean Senators?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I mean 23 Senators who voted against the Patman bill in 1932. They are not here today; and among them is the distinguished former Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Reed, coming from a State which went 700,000 in favor of his party only a few years ago.

Mr. President, this is a practical proposition. Eighty percent of the House and Senate jointly have gone on record already in this Congress in favor of this legislation. I cannot speak for other States, but in my judgment the State which permits me to serve in this body is 95 percent in favor of the passage of the bill. Oklahoma is so universally in favor of the passage of the bill that I have received but few protests against its passage.

Mr. President, when the public opinion of the country becomes crystallized behind legislation it is only a question of time until that legislation is passed by the Congress. If the sitting Members will not pass the legislation which the country demands, the country has a way of enacting its legislation; and that way is obvious to every Member of the Congress. If this veto shall be sustained today, this issue will not be dead. An issue affecting directly 4,750,000 veterans who with their wives, brothers, sisters, fathers, mothers, and friends number some 10,000,000 American citizens cannot die. It will be more alive tomorrow morning than it is at this good hour.

Mr. President, I have used practically my allotted time. In 30 minutes there is no occasion to consider the various points in the President's message. He has set forth to the very best advantage the arguments against the bill. He has left out nothing. If those reasons appeal to the Senators, of course, they will vote to sustain his veto. On the other hand, if they do not appeal to the reason and good judgment of the Senators, they will vote to override the veto.

So far as I am concerned, I am ready for the roll to be called, and when it is called I will vote to pass the bill, notwithstanding the veto of the President.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I do not assume that anything that might be said in this Chamber will influence a single vote; yet when an issue of this kind becomes so misunderstood as this issue evidently is, sometimes, as a matter of self-protection, a Senator must rise to express himself and place his position in the Record.

I do not assume that there is anyone on this floor who harbors any ill-will toward the American soldier. I do not assume there is anyone on this floor but who is willing to see that justice is done to the service men. If that were all that is involved in this measure I should not be addressing this body on this day.

The bill which was returned to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States with his disapproval contains three important provisions: First, it directs the payment of the adjusted-service certificates to the service men. Second, it specifies that money shall be issued in the amount necessary to make payment of those certificates. Third, it provides for a contraction and expansion of the national bank and Federal Reserve currencies.

The matter of the payment of the bonus is, as I regard it, only an incident to the two other provisions. The second and third provisions could well have been left to independent legislation, because they have nothing whatever to do with the payment of the adjusted-service certificates.

The third provides for the retirement of certain of our moneys based upon a computation of the Department of Labor, under which the Treasury can retire from circulation national bank and Federal Reserve notes.

This computation is based upon what is termed the index number of wholesale all commodity prices as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. I venture to say that of the 322 Members of the House of Representatives who voted to override the veto and permit this measure to become a law, there were not three who understood that computation or its effect upon the currencies of this country. I venture to say that in this Chamber, with the exception of perhaps one or two Members, there is not a single Senator who understands that computation or understands its effect upon the currencies of the United States.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President, I refuse to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. However, upon that computation, not understood by the Senate, made by a bureau which could adopt a different method tomorrow, which could change its calculations at its will, we are asked to delegate the authority to say whether or not the national bank and Federal Reserve currencies may be contracted.

The second subdivision provides for the issuance of money. It is true that the Congress has the power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. It is also true that money is something about which people know very little. I have even heard Members of the Congress who had served here for a long period declare that they knew nothing about money, and I present the following thought with that in view.

Those things about which we know nothing, those things which we are unable to reason out for ourselves, we accept on faith, we believe. So, in considering things concerning which we know nothing, we perhaps seek the most authentic source of information we can find, and follow that leadership in our beliefs, and when once a belief is created in a people it is not easily destroyed; it is as hard to destroy as the belief in man's religion.

The particular question before us is in this category, that there are not necessarily different schools of thought, but there are different beliefs. By insidious propaganda there has been built up the belief that this Government, under the provisions of the bill and in the manner provided by the bill, can issue currency rather than borrow the money and extend its credit to meet this obligation. It is a hard thing to break down that belief when once the propaganda has disseminated it to our people.

I, perhaps like other Members of the Senate, have tried as best I could to learn something about money. I thought that perhaps in all the discussions there would arise someone sufficiently familiar with the subject to be able to tell us what amount of circulating medium there should be in order conveniently to accommodate the business of this country. I thought that perhaps someone would be able to tell us what that quantity of currency was related to and give us some intelligent idea of what quantity of currency would be necessary, as I have said, to enable our people conveniently to transact the business of the country. But I listened in vain. No such information has been given to us by those who know, if there are any who do know.

Mr. President, a knowledge of these things is necessary in order to enable us to determine the soundness of this bill. I am not going to prolong a discussion of money, the history of money and its uses. One of the reasons is that I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject to enable me to present anything which might be of benefit to the Senate. But there is one thing we do know, there is one thing that is thoroughly understood and that is that money is not credit, that the matter of extending credit and the matter of issuing money are two separate things.

There is another thing we know, namely, that our money is the basis of our credit, and that when the base is destroyed, the structure must necessarily fall, and in my view of this measure, the issuing of the estimated amount of some $2,200,000,000 would so impair the currency as not only to destroy the base, but also affect the credit of this country.

These are the serious things involved in the bill. The expansion of the currency, and the matter of dealing with the moneys of the country, are the prime reasons for much support of the bill, and the matter of paying adjusted-service certificates is a secondary consideration.

I do not say that selfishness inspires this movement, but I say that there are selfish interests which are wrapped around these inflationary measures attempted to be passed through Congress, which have "hitch hiked" on every piece of legislation that looked as if it had a chance to pass the Congress. These inflationary measures are in some instances advocated by selfishness.

The matter of the payment of the adjusted-service certificates is a different thing from the matter of inflating the currency. I have made an effort to ascertain the condition of the Federal Treasury. What I am now about to present is gathered from the Treasury statement of March 31, 1935, pertaining to the circulation.

The figures under several of the headings in the circulation statement of the United States Treasury as of March 31, 1935, are not truly comparable with the figures under the same headings in similar statements previous to January 1, 1933. The same method of accounting is followed, but the fundamental change in our monetary system gives to figures in the same category now an entirely different meaning.

Then gold coins and gold certificates were money. Now they are not money. For them to be in the possession of the public as money is unlawful. No longer should they be treated as money in statements of our monetary condition. Gold should be accounted for merely as bullion in a column reckoning the metal base that supports our new monetary system. Gold certificates—so long as any of them remain in existence—should be treated in monetary statements not as money, but as records of the earmarking for the time being of certain quantities of gold for specific reserves or accounts.

With this point of view in mind analysis of the circulation statement of March 31, 1935, brings to light the terrific danger that lurks in those provisions of the Patman bill which provide for the printing of $2,200,000,000 of paper money with which to pay the soldiers' bonus. This danger is not only the menace of immediate and wild monetary inflation, but of the far more terrible catastrophe of a complete break-down of our monetary system which will drive us along the road toward ruin that many foreign nations are already traveling.

The method of accounting in the statement referred to divides all the money of the United States into two great classifications: Money in the Treasury of the United States, and money not in the Treasury of the United States.

The second classification—money not in the Treasury of the United States—is further differentiated into money in Federal Reserve banks, and "money in circulation." "Money in circulation" is money that is not in the Treasury and not in Federal Reserve banks.

Our entire stock of monetary gold is held in the Treasury. It has the enormous value of $8,567,024,342; but it does not lie there irresponsible and without claims against it. It is the core of our present sound monetary system, and its promise of security must not be vitiated by a flood of paper promises.

That stock of gold is now earmarked, as it were, for several Treasury accounts and reserves; $5,714,600,580 of gold certificates stand against it; a stabilization fund of $1,800,000,000 in gold is part of it; a reserve of $156,039,431 in gold against United States notes is also a part of it.

Of the gold certificates, $4,921,208,571 are held in the Treasury for the account of Federal Reserve banks and fiscal agents, $670,463,090 more are held by Federal Reserve banks and agents, and $122,928,919 are still part of what is termed "money in circulation", presumably in the secret hoards of private individuals.

If all these claims are taken into account, the value of the portion remaining free from specific charges—the value of the stock of gold upon which we base our monetary system—is $896,384,331, not $8,567,024,342.

It is entirely true that for every dollar in circulation there is more than $1.50 worth of gold in the United States Treasury, but this does not mean that the whole stock of gold is free from charges against it within the Treasury itself.

Turn for a moment to consideration of silver, the other metal that goes into the foundation of our monetary system. In the Treasury are 510,654,241 standard silver dollars, and silver bullion to the value of $263,337,146. The charges against this are $732,439,178 worth of silver certificates and $1,182,924 worth of Treasury notes of 1890 that are outside the Treasury in Federal Reserve banks and in circulation.

Obviously the bulk of this silver cannot be counted as money in the Treasury. It is almost entirely security for the paper money named that is outside the Treasury. Only the surplus of 40,369,285 standard silver dollars can be counted as money in the Treasury.

The total amount of money in the Treasury, then, is: Silver dollars, 40,369,285; subsidiary silver, $3,609,953; minor coin, $3,508,159; United States notes, $2,115,552; Federal Reserve notes, $15,439,695; Federal Reserve bank notes, $1,727,327; and national-bank notes, $20,342,499; a total of $87,112,470.

To present a true picture of what the statement of our monetary condition means, no account of gold, or gold certificates or silver that stands as security for silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 should be included in the category of money.

A proper statement of our monetary condition on March 31, 1935, reads thus:

The total amount of money in circulation on March 31, 1935, was $5,370,208,822.

The total amount of money in Federal Reserve banks was $498,440,076.

The total amount of money in the Treasury was $87,112,470.

The total metallic base with no specific charges against it held in the Treasury was gold to the value of $896,384,331.

To print over $2,000,000,000 of paper money in accordance with the provisions of the Patman bill would be to rush upon monetary ruin and economic destruction.

I am in favor of paying the soldiers' bonus, but I want to see it paid in the right way. I do not want to see poured out in this payment paper money, the mere issuance of every succeeding dollar of which will depreciate the value of every dollar that is issued.

It was by such means that John Law brought France to rack and ruin with the Mississippi bubble early in the eighteenth century.

It was by such means that England tried to pay off her national debt about the same time and ruined the country with the South Sea bubble.

It is silly to say that it is unnecessary for a government to borrow money—that it need only print it and save the interest on loans. The national debt of every country in the world is proof of the absurdity of this contention.

One thing is certain about money: Money is not credit.

When a nation, or an individual, requires credit, it has to be paid for with interest in money.

I said there were some who were sponsoring this measure perhaps from selfish motives. I can conceive of two classes of citizens which are interested in the passage of the pending bill, not by reason of the fact that it provides for the payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates but because it provides for the inflation of currency. If any persons who are interested in the production of the metals which are used as the basis of our currency—gold and silver—were to pursue a selfish idea, they necessarily would be for the inflation of the currency.

Another class of citizens which would be for the inflation of paper currency and the cheapening of the paper dollar is composed of citizens who owe vast sums of money upon their enterprises and upon their physical property, because they could discharge those debts much easier with inflated money than they could with the sound money of this country.

If perchance both those classes are among those who have circulated propaganda on this subject, that is, both those interested in the production of the metals and those involved in debt, then it would be impossible to discriminate whether patriotic motives to aid the veterans inspired their action, or whether they were inspired by selfish interest to serve their own purposes.

I say this because the issue has been misrepresented. I believe that every Member of the Senate desires to see the service man treated fairly. I believe the greatest injustice that could be done the service man would be to pass the pending bill and destroy the financial structure of the country which the service man fought to preserve.

I thank the Senate.

A HALF TRUTH AND AN UNFAIR IMPOSITION ON THE SOLDIERS

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I was so much affected by the remarks of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] I almost changed my notion. I had fully decided that I would not say a word this morning, but I thought I had read that my friend from Illinois, when he was a Member of the House in 1932, had voted for the Patman bill. If I am in error about that, I should like to be corrected.

Mr. DIETERICH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. DIETERICH. I voted for the Patman bill in the House in 1932. It contained no inflationary provision. I voted for the Vinson bill in the Senate as a substitute for the committee amendment. My position on the matter of paying the soldiers' bonus is perfectly clear. My position is against paying the soldiers in the kind of money which the Senator from Louisiana and others would like to circulate in this country.

Mr. LONG. I simply desire to say that I had the distinct honor—which I conferred on myself—to have offered the Patman bill of 1932 in the Senate, and if there is any difference whatever between the present bill and the Patman bill of 1932, for which my friend from Illinois voted as a Member of the House, I have never been able to find it, nor have any of my colleagues who have been pushing this fight in the Senate since the pending bill has been here been able to find any difference between them.

They are the same bill, and I regret that my friend from Illinois and others like him who voted in 1932 for this bill, or, whether they voted for it or not, felt kindly toward it, have become confused on the money question since that time. I am sorry that they have not as good a mind on the money question as they had during those days of candidacies.

Mr. President, since I have taken the floor I will make one correction. My friend from Illinois says that no one understands the effect on the currency the enactment of the Patman bill would have. That is a rather late statement to be made in this body, because the entire Democratic side and the Republican side practically solidly voted for the same thing that is in the Patman bill, and the President of the United States, the man who is now in the White House, has signed identically the same currency proposition that is contained in the Patman bill. The Patman bill provides that an obligation of the Government payable in 1945 may be placed in the Treasury and currency of an equal value issued for it. That is the same as the thing that has been done ever since this President has been in office. We voted specifically that the bonds held by the bankers, payable in the year 1945, might be put up and an equivalent amount issued in currency. So for any of us to say we do not know what the effect will be, I fear, is placing ourselves in a very dubious position, because three times we have gone on record to that effect. I gave the list of those who voted for it here the other day. I am satisfied my friend from Illinois voted that way. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] voted that way; the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] voted that way; I voted that way, and the Republicans, practically to a man, voted the same way. Three times we voted that the money obligations of the United States Government not due and not payable until 1945 could be put up by the banks that held them and that the banks could have issued to them an equal amount of Treasury notes for circulation as money in the United States.

Now, however, we have a beclouded situation, and in some gentlemen's minds they cannot see how it can be done. They are confused; they say they have got to rely upon a faith somewhere, somehow; some undiscovered hope rules them; some undiscovered prophet tells them to beware, be still, move not to the right, move not to the left, change not, notwithstanding the fact that three times they stood here on this floor and sounded out their voices "aye" in favor of the banker taking up a bond which he had and which was just like the soldier's bond of today, which, the President says, is not due until 1945. The bankers drew down the full amount of money on their bonds, but, none the less, the soldier is not to have it.

Yesterday the President in his message said that the soldier was not due any more money than any other man who performed his daily work during the war. The President could have gone a little further. Some few days ago he had made the remark that it was as bad to state a half truth as it was to state a complete falsehood. Now the President says that the soldier is not due any more money than the man who loaded the ships. All we are trying to do by the Patman bill is to give the soldier the same amount of money that a deckhand drew for the same length of time. Why could not the President have gone a little bit further and have said, "I, the President, maintaining that a soldier should draw only so much money as a man who gave his work in civil life for a similar period of time, realize that, had I signed this bill I would have only given to the man who fought in the trenches the same amount of money per day, or per week, for fighting that he would have earned had he been in civil life during the same days and the same months?"

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator would not object to a correction, I wish to call his attention to the fact that during the World War the laborers of this country enjoyed the highest wages which, I take it, were ever known in the history of the world. There was no attempt in the Adjusted Compensation Act to adjust the soldiers' compensation on a basis equal to that of civilian employees. The committee report discloses that the purpose of the legislation was to make that compensation something near that of the lowest paid common laborer in America during the war.

Mr. LONG. That is correct.

Mr. STEIWER. And not to make it comparable to the wages of civilian labor generally.

Mr. LONG. That is correct. The statement I am making is an understatement so far as the soldiers are concerned; it does not set forth the whole facts. The committee report recited that if a soldier were given the adjusted compensation now provided under the Patman bill, adding what he has already had to what he will get, he would get as much as the sorriest field hand or road hand who worked during the time the war was going on. Not a single man who was in the battles of France will get as much money, if he shall receive this adjusted compensation, as was received by the commonest field hand during the time the war was going on. So, for the President to come before Congress and make a great play, stating that a soldier is entitled to no more than a civilian, and then veto a bill that does not give the soldier even as much as a civilian, without giving the entire facts, is certainly, I fear, being neither frank with himself, nor with the Congress, nor with the public.

Now, one other thing: The President takes the view that the enactment of this bill may result in inflating the currency. He says, however, that its enactment will not impair the national credit. I call that statement to the attention of Senators; that, in the words of the President of the United States, this bill will not impair the credit or the financial position or the solvency of the Treasury of the United States. That is what he said. The Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board says that; the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation says that; a former Secretary of the Treasury during the World War says that; and, I take it, at least, for one thing, that no one in here doubts that, after paying the bonus as provided by the Patman bill, the condition of the Treasury of the United States will not be impaired in any respect. Therefore, what is the basis upon which this just compensation is denied?

The President says, in answer, that we must be fair. This obligation, he says, is not due until 1945. If that be true, why did he not take the same position on the 9th day of March 1933, 5 days after he took the oath of office, when he signed a bill providing that the bonds held by the banks, not due until 1945, could be put up by the banks and dollar for dollar in currency be drawn by the banks on the bonds that were not due until 1945?

Not only did he sign a bill that allowed the bankers to cash their bonds that were not due for 12 years, but he allowed them to draw from 3 to 4 percent interest on those bonds, notwithstanding the fact that they had drawn 100 cents on the dollar in currency in the meantime. It seems rather late for the President now to be taking the position to the contrary.

Now, to those who have said the argument of the President is unanswerable, let us see what his arguments are: First, he has made the point that we ought not to regard the soldier as being any better than the civilian during the war. If the Congress will consider the question only in that light, they will not vote against the Patman bill but will vote for it, and so would the President have approved it had he realized the effect of his statement.

Second, that an obligation of 1945 should not be regarded in the soldier's hands any differently from an obligation in a civilian's hands. Well, inasmuch as he has cashed the 1945 obligations of bankers and given them the interest of 1945 to boot, can we not give the soldier the amount which he should have in 1945, without interest?

The only difference between the bond of the soldier and the bond of the banker is that in the soldier's case he gets no interest and in the banker's case he is drawing interest today, notwithstanding the fact that for 2 years' time he has been able to take his bonds, put them up, and get all the money which could be issued on them.

I know that nothing I say is going to change any votes, and I had not intended to say anything. It will not be the first time that I have been beaten, and I can take my beatings as well as can any other man. If I were the one being defeated in this matter it would not be so difficult to take it, but the soldiers having these certificates have already calculated that this bonus bill is passed; today they think the Senate is going to override the veto. I know it is not; I think I know how every Senator is going to vote. I knew 2 or 3 days ago that our cause was hopeless; that the powers of politics and finance that had been thrown into the scale against this payment were going to be too great to overcome. I know that that is true today. But I also know that the soldiers have knelt in front of the fireplace with their wives and with their children and figured out what they were going to do with the $500 coming to them from the bonus. Each and every one of them, no doubt, has calculated that he will pay a bill he owes to the grocer, that he will pay for the suit of clothes he bought year before last and which he is still wearing, if there is a thread left of it; he has thought that perhaps he will be able to send to school a son or a daughter who was born while he was fighting in the trenches. The soldiers have made all those calculations. A few dollars would place them in a position where they could have a few days' surcease during this depression, which some say was brought on as a result of the war. Those hopes are going to be all dashed to the bowwows by the vote here today. I am very sorry more of my colleagues cannot see it my way. I am sorry that they cannot see that the soldier has the same right to cash his obligation as have the civilian bankers to cash theirs. I impute nothing against the good motives of my friends in the Senate, but I think the action of those who will vote to sustain the veto will be a source of very deep regret to all who wish to do the President and the Democratic Party a favor.

Mr. LONG subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, at the close of my speech on the veto message, an address and a letter which I send to the desk.

There being no objection, the address and the letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDRESS BY SENATOR HUEY P. LONG, OF LOUISIANA, ENTITLED "A FAIR DEAL FOR THE VETERANS", MADE OVER A NATIONAL BROADCASTING CO. NETWORK, SATURDAY NIGHT, MAY 11, 1935, UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS

The Congress of the United States, by an overwhelming majority in both Houses, has voted to pay in full what is generally called the "soldiers' bonus", but what, in reality, is not a soldiers' bonus at all, but the adjusted-service wages—and very poor wages, at that—which the Government allowed to the soldiers for the days that they served in the World War.

We have generally referred to this proposition as the soldiers' bonus. But here is what it was:

When the boys came back from the war in 1918 and 1919, and some as late as 1920, the Government said that since all common labor had been paid from $3 to $4 per day during the war, without taking any chance of being shot down, or of having their legs shot off, or their eyes shot out, that they would pay the soldiers for the time that they worked, fought, and risked their lives and bodies the same amount per day as the commonest kind of laborer was paid for the same day's work during the war.

Now, since they figured that the soldier had already been paid around $30 to $40 per month while he was in the war, they deducted the $1 or $1.25 per day, and gave him a certificate for the balance, so that, when his certificate was paid, the soldier would receive as much money for the days that he stood in the trenches as the commonest kind of laborer received for the same days that he worked.

Now, I think you or I or most any other person would say that, as a general rule, the man who worked and fought, who slept in the trenches, on the ground, in the rain, and in the mud, and who took a chance of never coming back, was entitled to get a little bit more money for that kind of service than the man who lived in comfort in his home, and took no such chance of being maimed or killed.

But we did not regard it that way when we gave the soldiers their certificates for service. We took the view that they were not entitled to any more money than the sorriest kind of field hand, or work hand; and that is the certificate which they hold today, which is called the soldiers' bonus.

A few years ago Congress provided that the soldiers could borrow about half the money that was due on their certificates. Now, what we have done here this week is to provide to pay them the balance, equal to the face value of the certificates issued by the Government for their services. Some people talk as though the soldiers had already been paid one bonus. That is not true at all. We have not paid the soldiers the bonus once, or twice, or anything of the kind. What we did was to issue a certificate to each man, giving him an allowance to be paid later, and we have allowed them to borrow on this certificate up to one-half the face value, but we have never paid the obligation at all. That is what we are trying to do now.

Now we propose, and have passed a law, to pay the amount in full. The law which has been passed is known as the Patman bill. It is the same bill that previously passed the House of Representatives. Last year I offered this bill as an amendment to another bill in the United States Senate. It failed to pass. But in this session of Congress this same Patman bill was voted in the House of Representatives by an overwhelming majority. It came to the Senate, and it was voted there by a very large majority.

It will become the law, if the President signs it. But, even though the President vetoes the bill it will become the law anyway, if two-thirds of the United States Senators will vote to override the President's veto. We are very near to the mark of getting two-thirds of the Senators to vote to override the veto. It is a shame to have a few votes help the President to sustain a veto doing this wrong to the men who fought our battles.

That being the case, every person, whether he has or has not written to the President, should immediately write or wire to his United States Senators, asking them to vote to override the veto on the soldiers' bonus bill in case he vetoes the bill. We hear the President is being urged to turn a deaf ear to the people's plea. Therefore, wire your Senators.

Now, the President tells us that he was a veteran of the World War, too, and that he understands it somewhat better than we may think. Well, it is true that Mr. Roosevelt was a veteran of the World War. He was Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He stayed up here on Pennsylvania Avenue in the daytime, and in a very fine home during the nighttime, and he drew $10,000 a year for his services. He was 3,000 miles away from gunfire. Of course, he had an income besides that, which made him say that he did not need the $10,000, but we paid him that, anyway. And nobody is trying to take it away from him.

But the man that he does not seem to have learned about, is the man that did not stay on Pennsylvania Avenue, and who did not stay in any luxurious home, but the man who scoured the seas, who walked and slept in the rain, who stood in the mud waist deep in the trenches, who went over the top and faced the German guns, who breathed the poisonous gases, and who not only went through 14 kinds of carnage worse than the fires of hell itself, but who, when he came back, found his occupation destroyed, and the job which he had held gone.

But Mr. Roosevelt forgets that his pay of $10,000 per year was 10 to 20 times the amount which we are trying to get for the soldier who crossed the seas, who faced the enemy, and probably came back home not half fit to live. Someone said to me that some soldiers they knew ought not to be paid the bonus because they had turned out to be bums. Who was it that made them bums? The Government sent them into the fires of death and I wonder that as many came out as well as they did. That's no argument against paying the bonus.

And Mr. Roosevelt forgets, further, that he got his $10,000 right on the barrel-head for every day that he worked or did not work, and enjoyed Washington society to the full limit in the meantime; whereas the soldier has now waited 17 years for his money, and they are still fighting to keep him from having it.

I am somewhat in the position of Mr. Roosevelt on the war. He didn't go and I didn't go. The only difference is that I didn't get $10,000 a year not to go. If he wants to place me in his status, all he has to do is to send me a check for $5,000 for every year the war went on and we will be 50-50 on the war—neither ever heard a cap snap and both with $5,000 per year, instead of him with the whole $10,000 by himself.

It is true that he advocated going into the war and I advocated not going into the war. I was against the war, and now so is everybody else who has seen how we came out; but, outside of that, the only thing that keeps me from being the same kind of soldier that Mr. Roosevelt was is that I did not get any $10,000 and I did not try to make anybody else go to war.

Now, the Government of the United States has issued its certificate for this money to every one of these soldiers. It is due and required to be paid in the year 1945; that is 10 years from now. What we have done in Congress and in the United States Senate by the Patman bill is to provide that the soldier can put up this Government certificate and get Government currency, of Government money, for an amount that is equal to the face value of the service certificate, just like they allow bankers to draw face value in money on obligations of the Government which they hold.

In other words, let us say that the soldier holds a service certificate for $500. Under our bill he could put up that certificate and the Government would pay him $500 in cash. There is nothing new about that. Everybody else that holds a Government bond or certificate can put it up and get the Government money on it. Right today a bank can take any bond or obligation that it has of the United States and put that bond up and draw the money in cash on the bond—and that doesn't half tell the story.

Not only can the bank draw the money on the bond that it has, but they can draw the interest on the bond, notwithstanding the fact that they have drawn the money on it; and when the bond becomes due they will have drawn interest all the time, and still have had all the money all the time to do with just as they desired.

Nearly every Member in the Congress, and nearly every Member in the United States Senate, has voted at least three times within the last 3 years to allow the bankers to take the bonds and obligations of the United States Government and put them up with the Treasury Department and secure as much money on the bonds as the face value of the bonds represented, and then the bonds stood there, in their name, and they could draw the interest until their maturity date, and never pay out a cent of their money in the meantime.

But they are not willing to do half that good by the soldier. All that the soldier is asking to do, under the Patman bonus bill, is to put up his adjusted-service certificate, and, if it is for $500, that he be given $500 of Treasury notes, which is the same kind of paper money that you have in your pocket today, if you have any. The soldier would not get any interest on his service certificate, like the banks do on the bonds and obligations that they put up to get money, and the only thing today that we have to decide, is: Will we say to the soldier with the $500 bond, "No, we won't let you have the $500 in money"; and then turn around to the bankers, who have a million dollars' worth of bonds, and say, "We not only will give you the $1,000,000 in paper money for your $1,000,000 of bonds, but we will also pay you 4 percent interest on the bonds until the date of their payment arrives."

Why on March 9, 1933, 5 days after Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt took the office as President of the United States, we had another one of these bills up, and we passed it, allowing all banks to put up the bonds of the Government, and to get circulating money, dollar for dollar, and allowing them to draw their interest, just the same, while they had the money. Why didn't Mr. Roosevelt veto that?

Now, the argument has been made that to issue these soldiers this money is opening up the printing press to print money. This is a very flimsy pretense, particularly when Mr. Roosevelt has signed two bills to print all the money that the bankers wanted issued for their bonds.

There is today in the United States Treasury $9,000,000,000 in gold. As against that gold, we have only five and one-half billions of dollars in money in the United States. If we issue the money on every one of these adjusted-service-certificate bonds held by the soldiers and sailors, we would only pay out around $2,000,000,000, which means that, with the money we now have outstanding, and the other money that we would have outstanding, we would have in circulation money of all kinds amounting to about seven and one-half billions, and, as against that seven and one-half billions, we would have over $9,000,000,000 in the Treasury in gold alone, to say nothing of the silver, with which to pay off the money on demand.

But the people are not allowed to ask for their money in gold today. Your paper money says on the face of it that you have a right to demand its payment in gold at the Treasury; but we have another law which says that if you go there to get the money in gold that you would be put in jail for getting it. So where is Mr. Roosevelt to stand when he vetoes the soldiers' right to cash his service-certificate bond?

But even if we were on a gold standard, who could say that we would be issuing printing-press money? Our sound gold law only requires 40 cents in gold in the United States Treasury to back up a dollar of outstanding paper money. That would mean that the United States Government today, with the $9,000,000,000 in gold it has, could issue up to twenty-two and one-half billions of dollars in paper currency, and still be on the soundest kind of gold standard based upon the gold reserve of nine billions that we have in the Treasury; and there would not be any inflation about it. Yet they stand against us having Government money to pay off the soldiers, when we would have only seven and one-half billion dollars in money covered by $9,000,000,000 in gold, or $1.20 in gold for every paper dollar that was outstanding after paying the bonus.

The soldier is entitled to be paid this bonus; he has done his work; he has made his fight; he has taken his chance; he has made his sacrifice; he has kept the faith; and he is the only one who never was paid the daily wage for the days he worked during the war. No one has been more badly treated than the average man who risked his life in the service of this country, to be paid the lowest wages of all, on the chance of losing his life, and then wait 17 years and still not have the low wages he was promised.

Maybe we cannot get the President of the United States to see it, but the bankers have been given everything for which they have asked, and if they have been allowed to put up their bonds and get money on them, and still draw the interest on the bonds, at the very least we ought to let the soldier put up his certificate and be paid the money on it, when he is not allowed interest, as the banker has been allowed.

It is hard to understand how the President could have framed himself into a mind that opposes paying this obligation which the Government now owes to the soldiers. The other night, in his speech over the radio, he said that because he could not find out the touch of the American people, he sometimes went out fishing on the Nourmahal yacht of Vincent Astor, so as to get a better conception of the feeling of the American people. I am afraid that his sailing on that $5,000,000 yacht, into the British waters, where he visited with the Duke and Duchess of Kent, the son and daughter-in-law of King George the Fifth and Queen Mary, the four-fifths, has distorted the viewpoint of the President, rather than giving him the common perspective of the common people in this country.

I hope that he will pay attention to the letters and telegrams which he is receiving, and judge that as being nearer the impression of the American people, rather than the views of the high aristocracy with which he surrounded himself upon this late pleasant cruise into the British waters.

Wire your United States Senators now, or, if you do not feel like sending the money to wire, then write them a letter. Ask them to put their shoulders to the wheel to help override the veto of the President. Do not take any chances. Ask them to do the same justice by the soldiers as has been done by the captains of finance.

Great good would be done this country if we paid this two and one-quarter billion dollars into the channels of our commerce. It would stimulate business everywhere. It would do the people more good than it would the soldiers.

In truth and in fact, we are simply asking that the soldier now be paid, after 17 years of waiting, the commonest kind of wages which others were paid during the time when he fought in the trenches.

Wire your Senators! Wire your Senators!

THE SHARE OUR WEALTH PRINCIPLES—ROOSEVELT PROMISED TO FULFILL THEM—HOOVER DECLARED THEM HIS CONCEPTION OF AMERICA—BUT ONLY ORGANIZED SOCIETIES CAN FORCE THE KEEPING OF SUCH PLEDGES—THE LAW OF THE BIBLE—THE COMPACT OF THE PILGRIMS IN 1620—THE GUARANTY OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE—THE BASIS FOR OUR CONSTITUTION—AMERICA'S ONLY SALVATION—"HE WHO FALLS IN THIS FIGHT FALLS IN THE RADIANCE OF THE FUTURE!"

(The Share Our Wealth Society proposes to enforce the traditions on which this country was founded, rather than to have them harmed; we aim to carry out the guaranties of our immortal Declaration of Independence and our Constitution of the United States, as interpreted by our forefathers who wrote them and who gave them to us; we will make the works and compacts of the pilgrim fathers, taken from the Laws of God, from which we were warned never to depart, breathe into our Government again that spirit of liberty, justice, and mercy which they inspired in our founders in the days when they gave life and hope to our country. God has beckoned fullness and peace to our land; our forefathers have set the guide stakes so that none need fall to share in this abundance. Will we now have our generation, and the generations which are to come, cheated of such heritage because of the greed and control of wealth and opportunity by 600 families?)

To members and well-wishers of the Share Our Wealth Society: For 20 years I have been in the battle to provide that, so long as America has, or can produce, an abundance of the things which make life comfortable and happy, that none should own so much of the things which he does not need and cannot use as to deprive the balance of the people of a reasonable proportion of the necessities and conveniences of life. The whole line of my political thought has always been that America must face the time when the whole country would shoulder the obligation which it owes to every child born on earth—that is, a fair chance to life, liberty, and happiness.

I had been in the United States Senate only a few days when I began my effort to make the battle for a distribution of wealth among all the people a national issue for the coming elections. On July 2, 1932, pursuant to a promise made, I heard Franklin Delano Roosevelt, accepting the nomination of the Democratic Party at the Chicago convention for President of the United States, use the following words:

"Throughout the Nation, men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government for the last years, look to us here for guidance and for a more equitable opportunity to share in the distribution of the national wealth."

It therefore seemed that all we had to do was to elect our candidate and that then my object in public life would be accomplished.

But a few nights before the Presidential election I listened to Mr. Herbert Hoover deliver his speech in Madison Square Garden, and he used these words:

"My conception of America is a land where men and women may walk in ordered liberty, where they may enjoy the advantages of wealth, not concentrated in the hands of a few, but diffused through the lives of all."

So it seems that so popular had become the demand for a redistribution of wealth in America that Mr. Hoover had been compelled to somewhat yield to that for which Mr. Roosevelt had previously declared without reservation.

It is not out of place for me to say that the support which I brought to Mr. Roosevelt to secure his nomination and election as President—and without which it was hardly probable he would ever have been nominated—was on the assurances which I had that he would take the proper stand for the redistribution of wealth in the campaign. He did that much in the campaign; but after his election, what then? I need not tell you the story. We have not time to cry over our disappointments, over promises which others did not keep, and over pledges which were broken.

We have not a moment to lose.

It was after my disappointment over the Roosevelt policy, after he became President, that I saw the light. I soon began to understand that, regardless of what we had been promised, our only chance of securing the fulfillment of such pledges was to organize the men and the women of the United States so that they were a force capable of action, and capable of requiring such a policy from the lawmakers and from the President after they took office. That was the beginning of the Share Our Wealth Society movement.

Let me say to the members and well-wishers that in this movement, the principles of which have received the endorsement of every leader of this time, and of other times, I am not concerned over my personal position or political fortune; I am only interested in the success of the cause; and on any day or at any time when, by our going for any person or for any party, we can better, or more surely or more quickly secure home, comfort, education, and happiness for our people, that there is no ambition of mine which will stand in the way. But there can be no minimum of success until every child in this land is fed, clothed, and housed comfortably and made happy with opportunity for education and a chance in life.

Even after the present President of the United States had thrown down the pledge which he had made time after time, and rather indicated the desire, instead, to have all the common people of America fed from a half-starvation dole, while the plutocrats of the United States were allowed to wax richer and richer, even after that, I made the public proposition that if he would return to his promise and carry out the pledge given to the people and to me that, regardless of all that had passed, I would again support his administration to the limit of my ability.

Of course, however, I was not blind; I had long since come to the understanding that he was chained to other purposes and to other interests which made impossible his keeping the words which he uttered to the people.

I delayed using this form of call to the members and well-wishers of the Share Our Wealth Society until we had progressed so far as to convince me that we could succeed either before or in the next national election of November 1936. Until I became certain that the spirit of the people could be aroused throughout the United States, and that, without any money—because I have none, except such little as I am given—the people could be persuaded to perfect organizations throughout the counties and communities of the country, I did not want to give false hopes to any of those engaged with me in this noble work. But I have seen and checked back enough, based upon the experiences which I have had in my public career, to know that we can, with much more ease, win the present fight, either between now and the next national campaign, or else in the next national campaign—I say with much more ease than many other battles which I have won in the past but which did not mean near so much.

We now have enough societies and enough members, to say nothing of the well-wishers, who—if they will put their shoulders to the wheel and give us one-half of the time which they do not need for anything else—can force the principles of the Share Our Wealth Society to the forefront, to where no person participating in national affairs can ignore them further.

Now, here is what I ask the officers and members and well-wishers of all the Share Our Wealth Societies to do—two things, to wit:

First. If you have a Share Our Wealth Society in your neighborhood—or, if you have not one, organize one—meet regularly, and let all members, men and women, go to work as quickly and as hard as they can to get every person in the neighborhood to become a member and to go out with them to get more members for the society. If members do not want to go into the society already organized in their community, let them organize another society. We must have them as members in the movement, so that, by having their cooperation, on short notice we can all act as one person for the one object and purpose of providing that in the land of plenty there shall be comfort for all. The organized 600 families who control the wealth of America have been able to keep the 125,000,000 people in bondage because they have never once known how to effectually strike for their fair demands.

Second. Get a number of members of the Share Our Wealth Society to immediately go into all other neighborhoods of your county and into the neighborhoods of the adjoining counties, so as to get the people in the other communities and in the other counties to organize more Share Our Wealth Societies there; that will mean we can soon get about the work of perfecting a complete, unified organization that will not only hear promises but will compel the fulfillment of pledges made to the people.

It is impossible for the United States to preserve itself as a republic or as a democracy when 600 families own more of this Nation's wealth—in fact, twice as much—as all the balance of the people put together. Ninety-six percent of our people live below the poverty line, while 4 percent own 87 percent of the wealth. America can have enough for all to live in comfort and still permit millionaires to own more than they can ever spend and to have more than they can ever use; but America cannot allow the multimillionaires and the billionaires, a mere handful of them, to own everything unless we are willing to inflict starvation upon 125,000,000 people.

We looked upon the year 1929 as the year when too much was produced for the people to consume. We were told, and we believed, that the farmers raised too much cotton and wool for the people to wear and too much food for the people to eat. Therefore, much of it went to waste, some rotted, and much of it was burned or thrown into the river or into the ocean. But, when we picked up the bulletin of the Department of Agriculture for that year 1929, we found that, according to the diet which they said everyone should eat in order to be healthy, multiplying it by 120,000,000, the number of people we had in 1929, had all of our people had the things which the Government said they should eat in order to live well, we did not have enough even in 1929 to feed the people. In fact, these statistics show that in some instances we had from one-third to one-half less than the people needed, particularly of milk, eggs, butter, and dried fruits.

But why in the year 1929 did it appear we had too much? Because the people could not buy the things they wanted to eat, and needed to eat. That showed the need for and duty of the Government then and there, to have forced a sharing of our wealth, and a redistribution, and Roosevelt was elected on the pledge to do that very thing.

But what was done? Cotton was plowed under the ground. Hogs and cattle were burned by the millions. The same was done to wheat and corn, and farmers were paid starvation money not to raise and not to plant because of the fact that we did not want so much because of people having no money with which to buy. Less and less was produced, when already there was less produced than the people needed if they ate what the Government said they needed to sustain life. God forgave those rulers who burned hogs, threw milk in the river, and plowed under cotton while little children cried for meat and milk and something to put on their naked backs!

But the good God who placed this race on earth did not leave us without an understanding of how to meet such problems; nor did the Pilgrim fathers who landed at Plymouth in 1620 fail to set an example as to how a country and a nation of people should act under such circumstances, and our great statesmen like Thomas Jefferson, Daniel Webster, Abraham Lincoln, Theodore Roosevelt, and Ralph Waldo Emerson did not fail to explain the need and necessity for following the precedents and purposes, which are necessary, even in a land of abundance, if all the people are to share the fruits produced therein. God's law commanded that the wealth of the country should be redistributed ever so often, so that none should become too rich and none should become too poor; it commanded that debts should be canceled and released ever so often, so that the human race would not be loaded with a burden which it could never pay. When the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth in 1620, they established their law by compact, signed by everyone who was on board the Mayflower, and it provided that at the end of every 7 years the finances of their newly founded country would be readjusted and that all debts would be released and property redistributed, so that none should starve in the land of plenty, and none should have an abundance of more than he needed. These principles were preserved in the Declaration of Independence, signed in 1776, and in our Constitution. Our great statesmen, such men as James Madison, who wrote the Constitution of the United States, and Daniel Webster, its greatest exponent, admonished the generations of America to come that they must never forget to require the redistribution of wealth if they desired that their Republic should live.

And, now, what of America? Will we allow the political sports, the high heelers, the wisecracks, and those who ridicule us in our misery and poverty to keep us from organizing these societies in every hamlet so that they may bring back to life this law and custom of God and of this country? Is there a man or woman with a child born on the earth, or who expects ever to have a child born on earth, who is willing to have it raised under the present-day practices of piracy, where it comes into life burdened with debt, condemned to a system of slavery by which the sweat of its brow throughout its existence must go to satisfy the vanity and the luxury of a leisurely few, who can never be made to see that they are destroying the root and branch of the greatest country ever to have risen? Our country is calling; the laws of the Lord are calling; the graves of our forefathers would open today if their occupants could see the bloom and flower of their creation withering and dying because the greed of the financial masters of this country has starved and withheld from mankind those things produced by his own labor. To hell with the ridicule of the wise street-corner politician. Pay no attention to any newspaper or magazine that has sold its columns to perpetuate this crime against the people of America. Save this country. Save mankind. Who can be wrong in such a work, and who cares what consequences may come following the mandates of the Lord, of the Pilgrims, of Jefferson, Webster, and Lincoln? He who falls in this fight falls in the radiance of the future. Better to make this fight and lose than to be a party to a system that strangles humanity.

It took the genius of labor and the lives of all Americans to produce the wealth of this land. If any man, or 100 men, wind up with all that has been produced by 120,000,000 people, that does not mean that those 100 men produced the wealth of the country; it means that those 100 men stole, directly or indirectly, what 125,000,000 people produced. Let no one tell you that the money masters made this country. They did no such thing. Very few of them ever hewed the forest; very few ever hacked a crosstie; very few ever nailed a board; fewer of them ever laid a brick. Their fortunes came from manipulated finance, control of government, rigging of markets, the spider webs that have grabbed all businesses; they grab the fruits of the land, the conveniences and the luxuries that are intended for 125,000,000 people, and run their heelers to our meetings to set up the cry, "We earned it honestly." The Lord says they did no such thing. The voices of our forefathers say they did no such thing. In this land of abundance, they have no right to impose starvation, misery, and pestilence for the purpose of vaunting their own pride and greed.

Whenever any newspaper or person, whether he be a private individual or an officer of the Government, says that our effort to limit the size of fortunes is contrary to the principles of our Government, he is too ignorant to deserve attention. Either he knows that what he says is untrue or else he is too ignorant to know what the truth is.

We can go further than that: Whenever any person says that he is following any Christian religion; or, if he be a Jew, if he says he is following the religion of the Jews; or even if he be a Chinaman, if he is following the teachings of Confucius, he cannot say that he thinks his own religion is sound unless he is willing to follow the principles to share the wealth of the land. Such is taught and required in the lines of the Bible, both in the New Testament and in the Old Testament, and the divine warning of those pages, repeated time and again, is that unless there is a comfortable living guaranteed to the man at the bottom, and unless the size of the big man's fortune is so limited as to allow the common run of people a fair share of the earth's fruits and blessings, that a race of people cannot survive.

If a man declare himself to be an American, and a believer in the American principles, then from the day that this country was founded until the present time, whether it be by the French or by the English, he must profess the share-our-wealth principles, or else he is not following the American doctrine. When the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth, here was a part of their compact and law:

"5. That at ye end of ye 7 years, ye capital & profits, viz., the houses, lands, goods, and chatties, be equally devided betwixte ye adventurers, and planters; wch done, every man shall be free from other of them of any debt or detriment concerning this adventure."

When the Declaration of Independence was written in 1776, here was a part of that immortal document:

"We hold these truths to be self evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights (of life, liberty, and happiness), governments are instituted among them, deriving their power from the consent of the governed. That whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends (of life, liberty, and happiness), it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it; and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its power in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

When James Madison, the father of the Constitution of this country, looked over the situation, here is what he said:

"We are free today substantially, but the day will come when our Republic will be an impossibility. It will be an impossibility because wealth will be concentrated in the hands of a few. A republic cannot stand upon bayonets, and when that day comes, when the wealth of the Nation will be in the hands of a few, then we must rely upon the wisdom of the best elements in the country to adjust the laws of the Nation to the changed conditions."

When the greatest exponent of our Constitution and of our Union, Daniel Webster, spoke of this principle, he said this:

"The freest government, if it could exist, would not be long acceptable if the tendencies of the law were to create a rapid accumulation of property in few hands and to render the great mass of the population dependent. Universal suffrage, for example, could not long exist in a community where there was a great inequality of property. In the nature of things, those who have not property and see their neighbors possess much more than they think them to need cannot be favorable to laws made for the protection of property."

And so, even if this principle born of the Creator when he placed the first man on earth, reaffirmed by Christ and the Apostles, and which was made a part of this country from the day that the Pilgrims first landed, is now to be cast aside, if it is to be misrepresented by some of the newspapers and magazines and by bought-out politicians and hired perverters of the truth, none the less the common run of mankind cannot escape the calamity unless the wealth of our land is distributed. To see men, politicians, and journals engaged in a business to betray mankind, to spread untruths and ridicule so that men and women may be lowered into the turmoil of distress, misery, and death; to see people with talent willing to sell their genius and to use their efforts to curse and destroy their fellow beings, is almost inconceivable in the sight of God and man. Nevertheless, the greatest institution of America today is that concerted group of multimillionaire and billionaire families, whose organization has written "liar" across the heart of men of ability, of whom they make use to thwart justice, equity, and mercy among mankind.

We are calling upon people whose souls cannot be cankered by the lure of wealth and corruption. We are calling upon people who have at heart, above their own nefarious possessions, the welfare of this country and of its humanity. We are calling upon them, we are calling upon you, we are calling upon the people of America, upon the men and women who love this country, and who would save their children and their neighbors from calamity and distress, to call in the people whom they know, to acquaint them with the purposes of this society and secure organization and cooperation among everyone willing to lend his hand to this worthy work. Fear of ridicule? Fear of reprisal? Fear of being taken off of the starvation dole? It is too late for our people to have such fears. I have undergone them all. There is nothing under the canopy of heaven which has not been sent to ridicule and embarrass my efforts in this work. And yet, despite such ridicule, face to face in any argument I have yet to see the one of them who dares to gainsay the principle to share our wealth. On the contrary, when their feet are put to the fire, each and every one of them declare that they are in favor of sharing the wealth, and the redistribution of wealth. But then some get suddenly ignorant and say they do not know how to do it. Oh, ye of little faith! God told them how. Apparently they are too lazy in mind or body to want to learn, so long as their ignorance is for the benefit of the 600 ruling families of America who have forged chains of slavery around the wrists and ankles of 125,000,000 free-born citizens. Lincoln freed the black man, but today the white and the black are shackled far worse than any colored person in 1860.

The debt structure alone has condemned the American people to bondage worse than the Egyptians ever forged upon the Israelites. Right now America's debts, public and private, are $262,000,000,000, and nearly all of it has been laid on the shoulders of those who have nothing. It is a debt of more than $2,000 to every man, woman, or child. They can never pay it. They never have paid such debts. No one expects them to pay it. But such is the new form of slavery imposed upon the civilization of America; and the street-corner sports and hired political tricksters, with the newspapers whom they have perverted, undertake to laugh to scorn the efforts of the people to throw off this yoke and bondage; but we were told to do so by the Lord, we were told to do so by the Pilgrim Fathers, we were guaranteed such should be done by our Declaration of Independence and by the Constitution of the United States.

Here is the whole sum and substance of the share-our-wealth movement:

1. Every family to be furnished by the Government a home-stead allowance, free of debt, of not less than one-third the average family wealth of the country, which means, at the lowest, that every family shall have the reasonable comforts of life up to a value of from $5,000 to $6,000. No person to have a fortune of more than 100 to 300 times the average family fortune, which means that the limit to fortunes is between $1,500,000 and $5,000,000, with annual capital levy taxes imposed on all above $1,000,000.

2. The yearly income of every family shall be not less than one-third of the average family income, which means that, according to the estimates of the statisticians of the United States Government and Wall Street, no family's annual income would be less than from $2,000 to $2,500. No yearly income shall be allowed to any person larger than from 100 to 300 times the size of the average family income, which means that no person would be allowed to earn in any year more than from $600,000 to $1,800,000, all to be subject to present income-tax laws.

3. To limit or regulate the hours of work to such an extent as to prevent overproduction; the most modern and efficient machinery would be encouraged, so that as much would be produced as possible so as to satisfy all demands of the people, but to also allow the maximum time to the workers for recreation, convenience, education, and luxuries of life.

4. An old-age pension to the persons over 60.

5. To balance agricultural production with what can be consumed according to the laws of God, which includes the preserving and storage of surplus commodities to be paid for and held by the Government for the emergencies when such are needed. Please bear in mind, however, that when the people of America have had money to buy things they needed, we have never had a surplus of any commodity. This plan of God does not call for destroying any of the things raised to eat or wear, nor does it countenance wholesale destruction of hogs, cattle, or milk.

6. To pay the veterans of our wars what we owe them and to care for their disabled.

7. Education and training for all children to be equal in opportunity in all schools, colleges, universities, and other institutions for training in the professions and vocations of life; to be regulated on the capacity of children to learn, and not on the ability of parents to pay the costs. Training for life's work to be as much universal and thorough for all walks in life as has been the training in the arts of killing.

8. The raising of revenue and taxes for the support of this program to come from the reduction of swollen fortunes from the top, as well as for the support of public works to give employment whenever there may be any slackening necessary in private enterprise.

I now ask those who read this circular to help us at once in this work of giving life and happiness to our people—not a starvation dole upon which someone may live in misery from week to week. Before this miserable system of wreckage has destroyed the life germ of respect and culture in our American people let us save what was here, merely by having none too poor and none too rich. The theory of the Share Our Wealth Society is to have enough for all, but not to have one with so much that less than enough remains for the balance of the people.

Please, therefore, let me ask you who read this document—please help this work before it is too late for us to be of help to our people. We ask you now, (1) help to get your neighbor into the work of this society and (2) help get other Share Our Wealth societies started in your county and in adjoining counties and get them to go out to organize other societies.

To print and mail out this circular costs about 60 cents per hundred, or $6 per thousand. Anyone who reads this who wants more circulars of this kind to use in the work, can get them for that price by sending the money to me, and I will pay the printer for him. Better still, if you can have this circular reprinted in your own town or city.

Let everyone who feels he wishes to help in our work start right out and go ahead. One man or woman is as important as any other. Take up the fight! Do not wait for someone else to tell you what to do. There are no high lights in this effort. We have no State managers and no city managers. Everyone can take up the work, and as many societies can be organized as there are people to organize them. One is the same as another. The reward and compensation is the salvation of humanity. Fear no opposition. "He who falls in this fight falls in the radiance of the future!"

Yours sincerely,

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, the great message of our President yesterday is by all odds the most superb argument that could be made in favor of sustaining the veto. Yet I for one find it entirely inadequate. I do not want to talk on all the phases of money and all the phases of the history of the soldiers' bonus. I wish to limit my remarks to the ideas expressed by two groups of Senators who have spoken both privately and in public in regard to the present measure.

In the first place, I desire to speak concerning those who say they are for the bonus, that they are willing to vote for a bonus, that they have always voted for a bonus, but because this particular bonus bill is an inflationary measure they cannot vote for it. Then, I wish to pay attention to those who want to vote to sustain the veto on the score of loyalty to their President.

Probably as an introduction to the first part of my remarks on the inflationary phase it would be well to point out that which the President said in the following paraphrased paragraph:

The President held that the proposal was not in the best interests of the Nation, because it would create printing-press money, would open the gates to further coercion by other minorities, thereby eventually impairing the Government credit, and inviting vicious inflation which would strike first at the small man on a fixed income; that payment of the bonus would be followed at once by political pressure for general pension legislation.

Mr. President, the President remarked yesterday that two wrongs do not make a right, and today in passing I would remark that three wrongs will not make a right. Of the three wrongs, one is based upon an assumption and two are based upon imaginary actions of the future. Such three wrongs cannot under any circumstances make a right, the right meaning a vote in favor of sustaining the veto.

It probably is necessary for us to point out that if we are discussing money conditions in the United States today and dealing with what some people call inflationary ideas, it is absolutely necessary that we base our premises upon facts. For us to turn to the historical past and try to imagine for one moment that the issuance in payment of an obligation at the present time of $2,000,000,000 of money by the United States is inflation in the sense that the Germans inflated, in the sense that the Russians inflated, in the sense that the French in the last part of the eighteenth century inflated, in the sense that the Chinese after their revolution inflated, is accepting a premise which is not based upon an historical fact. We must argue the question of present-day economics from the standpoint of present-day conditions. The only way in which we can understand the money situation of the United States today is to accept the money situation of the United States as our fundamental premise.

It was my ill luck or good fortune, whichever way one may look at it, to have been in Germany during the time of her great inflationary period. It was also my good fortune or ill luck to have been in China in the time of her great inflationary period. I was also in France during the recent French inflationary period, and I was there at the time the French stabilized the franc. While, of course, these experiences may mean nothing to Senators they mean very much to me because I know the purposes and I know the consequences behind those three great inflationary movements which then took place.

All the imaginings which have been uttered here in regard to these inflationary periods are truly mere imaginings. For us to assume, as has been assumed by some of the thinkers of our country and some of our editorial writers, that France, just before the French Revolution, started out on her period of inflation without knowing what she was doing, is utterly ridiculous. The best economic and the best financial minds of the French Government at that time were in charge of France's finances. The reason she started on an inflationary period was because there was nothing else to do, and other historical factors, one at a time and many put together, brought about that action and made that action necessary.

Inflation was not the cause of the ills of France. That which preceded inflation was the cause of those ills of France. We have said here in our own country, and the President said yesterday, that we passed through a miserable generation overcoming the paper money of the Civil War. That, of course, is true; but it was not the paper money which caused the ills. It was the things which made the paper money necessary which caused the ills.

We fought the Civil War, we fought the Revolutionary War, on paper money. Are people forgetful of that fact? The Germans were in the World War. Are people forgetful of that fact? The French went through the World War. Are people forgetful of that fact? The Chinese were following the wake of a mighty revolution where hundreds of thousands of people had been killed and the whole eco-conomic process had been destroyed. Are people forgetful of that fact?

Let us be historically exact when we draw our conclusions about these things. Let us refer, when we speak of the Civil War, to the truth, not to a fallacy. The reason why we issued paper money in Civil War times was because there was no other way known to man to carry on that war. As said above, the Revolutionary War was won on paper money, our Civil War was won on paper money, and if there are any two wars in the history of man which can be justified, those two are wars which I would use to justify war as a medium of overcoming ills.

That which we intend to do under this bill is not inflationary according to any of the definitions of inflation which I have been able to find. True, there is contemplated an increase in money, but we must remember these facts: Those who have argued that there is a difference between a promise to pay in the future and a promise to pay today have failed to remember that each is a promise to pay; and that whenever a promise in the future gets down to the fine point wherein the interest charge amounts only to something like 1 percent or 1½ percent, the line between a promise to pay in the present and a promise to pay in the future is very, very thin, indeed.

Great stones may be used still in the island of Yap, for example; silver slugs may be used in the Malay States; but that is not their money system. Silver coins—Mexican, American, and Chinese—are used in China; but for the most part gold, as is true in many places of silver, has gone out of common use in almost all the countries of the world. We cannot ever think consistently if we fail to realize the fact that every bit of paper money that is issued is a promise to pay, and nothing but a promise to pay.

It has been said that there is a difference between money and credit. There is no difference between money and credit when the paper money is a promise to pay, because that promise to pay rests upon the Government's credit, and it is issued on the basis of ability to pay, or it is issued on the basis of something like our silver certificates, which, in exchange, are a representation of some other commodity.

Now we come to the question as to whether or not the manner of paying the soldiers' bonus constitutes inflation. If we should ask for definitions of just what is meant by the word "inflation", probably no two Senators present would give the same definition. The word is as loose in its scientific and scholarly application as it is in its colloquial application. The words "inflation" and "deflation" have been used in the last generation generally to refer to conditions which have taken place in the nations of the world as a result of the World War. Russia's inflation was deliberate. Russia's purpose was to overcome private property and to destroy it in the way in which the concept of private property was held under the Czarist regime. This was done both by destruction of the credit of the debt structure and by making valueless in terms of money all privately controlled property. There was, of course, a leveling as far as debts were concerned. Germany's inflation was deliberate also. Her purpose was to overcome debt, especially with the obligations which the state owed its people. The easiest way to do it was, of course, to increase the currency to such an extent that the measure of debt became impossible.

These two outstanding examples of a governmental process to accomplish given purposes strike terror, and justly strike terror, into our hearts. There is no intention in the United States to bring about the end of private property, nor is there any intention on the part of the United States to destroy the debt structure of the country. In fact, practically every bit of fiscal legislation which the United States has adopted in the past 2½ years has been for the purpose of strengthening the debt structure, and will ultimately have that effect. To assume that the payment of a given obligation in United States non-interest-bearing notes is inflation in the German or Russian sense is entirely beside the point.

In the first place, the Federal Government is merely paying ahead of time an obligation which it has already assumed. Secondly, it will do it by paying in money. This money normally will add, of course, to the circulating medium; but it may not if at the same time credit should be withdrawn; it may not if the purchasing power should diminish; it may not if our industrial activity should change. All of these phenomena are related phenomena. Probably no two sums that are used to pay the soldiers' certificates will be used by the soldiers themselves in exactly the same way. The obligation which the Government owes the holders of the certificates is an individual obligation. Some certificates have been used as collateral. That means that some of the money will be used to pay debts. That means that the debt structure in the United States in general will be reduced by a certain amount. The debt structure of the United States will remain constant, excepting for the one fact that the United States is paying obligations not yet due as far as the face of the certificates is concerned. There is no inflation in that. There will be increased bank deposits, but there will be decreased loans against those deposits. There will, of course, be an increased purchasing power, but this will not in any sense be as great as those who are supporting the Patman bill believe, because they think it is an inflationary measure.

I am supporting the Patman bill myself, first, because I believe persons to whom the Government has made certain promises are entitled to the value of those promises.

And, secondly, I am supporting it because I believe it is not only timely to pay those obligations now, due to the economic conditions of our country and the economic conditions of the holders of the certificates, but I believe it is downright good business to pay an outstanding obligation before it comes due. Such an action increases confidence. Such an action puts money to work before it was anticipated, and in the turnover some increased wealth must result from the transactions to our whole country.

There is only one possible definition for inflation which can be used to describe the contemplated action under the Patman bill. That is the very loose and improper use of the word "inflation" when it is used to describe a time when there is much money in circulation in contrast to a time when there is little money in circulation. Inflation can come only when there is so much money in circulation in relation to the need for money that money, as such, loses its value. This, of course, cannot happen under the provisions of the Patman bill. The United States business can stand, and does stand, a fluctuation as great as $2,000,000,000 in its circulating medium; but through the provisions of the Patman bill the circulating medium would never be increased as much as that in actual practice. There were 2,400,000,000 more dollars in circulation in March 1933 than there were in March 1931. Surely the United States was not in an inflationary condition in March 1933. We must appreciate the facts of money, not just be lost by words which we do not properly understand and cannot define.

Think through all of the multiplicity of transactions which will take place from the time the Federal Government starts to pay the certificates, and you will not find a moment of actual inflation from the time the first certificate is paid to the time the United States bills are redeemed. You will find more money in circulation. You will find a shifting of obligations from the future to the present on the part of the Government. You will find obligations paid and turned into money. These, though, are ordinary business transactions, not transactions out of the ordinary, not transactions which are in any way feared in the business world, not transactions which can in any way bring ill. An increase of business does not mean inflation. The individual who receives his cash may foolishly spend it, and the Government probably is not doing a good turn to that individual. On the other hand, the thrifty individual may put his cash to good purpose and double it or treble it in the course of the next 2 years. That, gentlemen, is what is called thrift, and since the days of Benjamin Franklin we have always commended thrift.

The veto may be expedient, and our attempting to override the veto may be inexpedient. Each action may be politically wise, or it may be unwise; but I am not discussing the expediency of a financial action, I am attempting to show the utterly foolish reasoning of those who assume that the payment of the bonus in money instead of in bonds is an inflationary action.

Let us turn now to a consideration of inflation as such. We cannot get a proper definition for the term because of the great number of factors related to the concept. Shall we make our definition refer to the dishonest habits of the sweating of coins, clipping of coins, the recoinage into lighter weights, and the various types of profit-taking that unwise and dishonest governors or governments have indulged in since men started to coin and which are dignified today and properly used by the term "seigniorage", which is in its good sense the fee that the government charges for coinage? We use loosely such terms as "printing-press money", forgetting that even the best money is printing-press money. We use sometimes the term "flat money", which describes a notion that anything which any government declares money is money. But the flat principle is behind the money of every civilized country on earth. The principle is bad only when it is used dishonestly. Shall we consider inflation as it develops around price? Shall we consider it as it develops around the amount of money, or the kind of money, or the measure of an intrinsic value in money? Do we inflate the money of the United States by increasing our metallic reserve? Did we inflate when we decided to use silver as part of our metallic base? We expanded, of course, the substance and the worth of that substance by that action. Did that constitute inflation? It did in the minds of some men. It did not in the minds of others. When we reduced the gold content of the dollar, was that inflation? The dollar's value has changed very little at home. It immediately dropped, though, in international exchange. In one case we are unconscious that our dollar is worth less. In another case we become conscious of the fact. In other words, there is, after all, a difference between a dollar used in the United States for the purchase of domestic goods and a dollar used for the purchase of foreign moneys.

You see, when we mention even a few of the factors that go into the money problem, of money as it is related to business and banking and government finance—and there are many more factors that we have not mentioned, and many more bases on which we could build up our definition of inflation—it all goes to show how complex the problem is, how loosely we are thinking when we think of the Patman bill as an inflationary measure, and how sincerely disappointed the inflationary friends are going to be if the Patman bill becomes law. But there will be enough good economic results from it to offset any disappointments the sincere inflationists will experience.

Mr. President, the second thought I wish to discuss is too big a point for the time left me, but I desire to say that legislation in the United States rests upon a whole-hearted acceptance of the theory that there shall be cooperation between the Executive and the Congress in regard to legislation. I desire further to say that as we accepted yesterday the reasons which the President might have for vetoing the bill, we should today accept our own reasons, and we should accept them with the same sort of honesty which he displayed.

Our vote need not be justified, but if I were to justify it, or if I thought I might have to justify it, I would turn to the first great clause of the Declaration of Independence. This had to do with the veto power. There Thomas Jefferson called attention to the fact that the protests of our country against the King's not giving assent to the bills which had been passed by the legislatures of the Colonies was the first and one of the primary reasons why we were justified in demanding our independence from the mother country.

The history of the veto is one of the most interesting subjects in our governmental scheme. I wish that I might today talk about the theory of the veto as it affects those who are feeling that they must, because of loyalty to their President, vote to sustain his veto of yesterday.

If we trace the history of the veto down through the history of our country, we find that the first President in our land accepted the veto on the principle of cooperation between the executive and the legislative departments, and we find that when it came to vetoing bills, our first great President, Washington, vetoed but two—one of them because it was plainly unconstitutional, and that was the reason he gave; the other he vetoed out of a sense of expediency. So our first great President laid down the two principles by which other Presidents have justified themselves in vetoing measures.

As we come down through the history of the country we find that Adams and Jefferson saw no reason for vetoing any bills. Jefferson, of course, could not veto any bills consistently and stand for the principles which he had enunciated, unless the bills were out of harmony with the Constitution and constitutional principles.

It is interesting to trace the history of the veto. There were not very many vetoes until the time when we found ourselves getting into trouble and stress. President Tyler was the first President who had a real fight with Congress over the veto, and President Tyler changed his mind and did not veto the bill which he threatened to veto because of the tremendously great opposition which arose in both Houses of Congress at that time.

If Zachary Taylor had lived, he would have vetoed the compromise of 1850, but Fillmore came along and accepted it, giving us the great Western States as we have them today.

During Andrew Johnson's administration there were many vetoes because of the conflict between the President of the United States and the Congress.

During the whole period of Lincoln's administrations there were only three vetoes.

We come down to Grover Cleveland's time, when Grover Cleveland tried to put into force the logic of the mugwump supporters and of the Democratic Party. Cleveland vetoed over 400 bills during his two administrations. Most of them were pension bills.

Coming down to the period of the great Woodrow Wilson, in spite of the fact that Wilson served for 8 full years, in spite of the fact that for 2 of those years he had the Congress against him and there was a war, President Wilson vetoed but 44 bills, few of them of outstanding importance.

We come to our present Executive, and what is the tendency we find? Already the President of the United States, with a Congress in harmony with him, with the largest majority a President has had in the Senate within my memory, and with a House of Representatives completely in harmony with him, has vetoed nearly twice as many bills as President Wilson vetoed during the whole 8 years of his administrations, several times as many bills as Theodore Roosevelt vetoed in his first 2 years.

What do we discover from these veto messages? We discover the fact that the President in vetoing bills is deciding to stand by the ideas of chiefs and assistants who have advised him; and in the case of the pending veto message, instead of agreeing with the Congress of the United States, he is standing by those who advised President Harding, those who advised President Coolidge, those who advised President Hoover, and in complete opposition to that Congress which more conspicuously than any other Congress within our memory has sustained the President as a leader.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I make no concealment of and I offer no apology for the belief I entertain that this country needs a larger volume of currency. It is for that reason that I believe the so-called "bonus" bill harmonizes with the interests of the entire country.

I realize and fully appreciate the importance of this measure to the veterans, but I hold the effect of it upon the country will not be without beneficial results to all the people.

It would perhaps serve no good purpose to recall the history of the American soldier in the World War. If the facts could be known as they actually existed, I believe it could be truly said that his presence in the World War turned the tide from defeat to victory.

Neither would any good purpose be served, perhaps, by recalling the history of legislation for the adjustment of compensation to the soldier for his service. It ran through several years of consideration and debate. Suffice it to say that in 1924 the Congress, by an overwhelming vote, a vote sufficiently large to override the President's veto, agreed to pay the soldier additional compensation, what was called "adjusted compensation." Whatever differences of view existed prior to that act of Congress were merged and crystallized into the obligation which Congress created. The pledge of the Government became binding upon all, regardless of previous views.

There were those, among them myself, who did not believe in the theory of adjusted compensation. I did not feel that it was possible to place an estimate in the way of financial compensation upon the services of the American soldier in that great conflict. I thought it more or less ironical to contend that the payment of a dollar and a quarter a day to the American soldier would be compensation for entering the hell holes of Europe to rescue civilization from its thralldom. I could never bring myself to believe in the theory.

But the Congress determined otherwise, and entered into a contract to pay the soldier, and that contract having been made, of course must be kept. I did not believe in making the contract, but I do favor keeping the contract since it has been made. The only questions which have arisen since is as to the time when compensation shall be paid, and how it shall be paid.

Two principal objections have been raised by the very able veto message of the President against the measure he disapproved. The first contention is that the payment is not due, that the compensation certificates are not matured, that the Government at this time is not under obligation, therefore, to pay.

Technically, of course, that is true. As a matter of cold technicality, the adjusted-compensation certificates are not matured. But is time, under the circumstances, a controlling factor in this matter? In view of changed conditions should we hold the soldier to the letter of the bond? Have technical terms been regarded as a controlling factor?

It will be recalled that when this matter was before the Senate a few weeks ago there were three propositions brought to the Senate: The proposition offered by the able Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], which was declared to have the approval of the President; the Vinson bill, which was supposed to have and I presume did have the approval of the American Legion; and the present measure which is now before us under veto.

All these measures, including the measure which had the approval of the President, contemplated the waiving of the question of time. All these measures provided for the payment of the adjusted compensations within the immediate future. The program, from whatever source it came, acknowledged the fact that payment at this time was equitable and just. And under our economic conditions I think it is equitable and just.

Who has given consideration to the technical terms of contracts since this depression began? What contracts have been observed in their technical effects under the pressure of the cataclysm through which we are passing? Our Government itself has disregarded its contracts for the alleged purpose of meeting the depression. It disregarded the terms of the very obligations which raised the money to send the soldiers to Europe. The foreign governments which owe us have disregarded their contracts because as claimed of the present condition of affairs. Citizen and citizen, as between themselves, have disregarded the terms of their contracts because of the situation created by the depression. In no instance and in no way have we proceeded to deal with this depression upon the theory that anyone could hold to the technical terms of contracts which had been made in normal times. If we should hold the soldier to the technical terms of his contract, he would be the only person affected by this depression who would be so concluded according to the terms of his contract.

I might say, also, if the Government owed the soldier for service, the Government owed him from the day his service ended. Calculated upon that basis this compensation in justice and good conscience, this debt is overdue. If we had dated this obligation as of the date when the war ended, as in justice we should have done, the certificate would be overdue.

The depression has created a situation which has required a readjustment of all contracts and of all obligations in the interest of justice and in the interest of humanity, and that has been the policy not only of our Government but of all governments in this present situation. Shall we apply another rule to the soldier?

I have a letter which came to my desk this morning, which illustrates what it means to abide by the technical terms of the contract and to hold the soldier to the terms of the contract which he made under wholly different conditions from the conditions which now obtain. This letter is written by a veteran at St. Louis, Mo., who said:

I was drafted from a $2,000 position, sent to the front, granted compensation for 75 percent disability after my return, which was revoked through the so-called "economy act", and am forced to live on scant dole of $1.68 per week, in one room in a questionable rooming house with my family.

It seems to me that if the Government owes him he ought to have it now above all times. No just government will refuse what is coming to a soldier under such circumstances.

There are thousands, and I am told up to a million, of these ex-soldiers who are now upon dole who are being taken care of in this scant way by the Government. Would it be fair for the Government to say, "We owe you, we are indebted to you, we acknowledge the debt, but notwithstanding the changed conditions, notwithstanding the effect of the depression upon you, notwithstanding the fact that you and your family are in a questionable boarding house, and possibly on the way to a pauper's grave, we will not consider changing the technical terms of the contract?" "We stand by the bond, we insist upon the bond." Who has heard about the sanctity of contracts since the depression until the soldier's compensation was brought forward?

It would be a rule applied to no one else in this depression. It would be a rule applied not by governments nor by individuals. It seems to me entirely fair, entirely just, that all these proposals admitted the necessity of disregarding the question of time in the payment of this contract.

Mr. President, the controlling reason, however, and the one which undoubtedly was uppermost in the mind of the President and in the minds of those who are opposed to the pending measure, is the fear of what they call inflation—of printing-press money.

As was asked by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] a moment ago: Is there any inflation in this proposition? What is the proposal which is made, which is claimed to be inflationary? We are proposing to issue $2,200,000,000 of currency. Back of that currency is eight and one-half billion dollars of gold if the Government desires to use it.

Back of that currency is a billion and one-quarter dollars of silver, if the Government desires to use it. Back of it is the honor and good faith of the Government of the United States. Back of it is the same, precisely, as is behind the Government bond. Back of it is the same, precisely, as is behind the money which is in our pockets. There will be no difference, so far as the backing of the currency is concerned, between the money which will be issued under the pending bill and the money which has been issued, which is in existence, and which, in my judgment, is wholly insufficient to meet the situation. Inflation as the term is used by the opponents is not in this proposal. It does provide for an increase of currency but upon a perfectly sound reserve.

There is a wide difference between increasing the volume of currency in accordance with the reserves of the Government and the principles upon which the Government's money at this time rests, and in issuing currency in disregard of those principles. While the passage of the pending measure would result in putting out into circulation the $2,200,000,000 of currency—when it is out, what is the result? We still have behind all our currency over a hundred cents on the dollar.

We have now about four and one-half billion dollars of currency. When this new money is out we will have about six billion and something over seven hundred million dollars of currency, for a population of 125,000,000 people. Can that in any sense be regarded as an excess of money—as an excess of currency? Is that inflationary? When inflation is proposed it will be time enough to discuss the dangers of inflation.

I have observed when it comes to discussing the question of inflation, a wide distinction is made between inflation of credit and inflation of currency, and yet the most destructive inflation is credit inflation. Let us examine the situation as to these differences.

The national wealth at the present time is estimated at something less than $300,000,000,000. Our national indebtedness, public and private, is estimated at something over $260,000,000,000—possibly $280,000,000,000. Our annual tax bill is something over $9,000,000,000. Our annual interest charge is over $11,000,000,000. When we were considering the $4,000,000,000 relief bill and some Senators, including myself, wanted to reduce the amount we were severely criticized and told by the administration that the credit of the Government was sound. That transaction involved the payment of interest and taxes. The money secured for relief was to be provided in a way that would require the payment of almost as much interest in the 20 years as the amount appropriated.

We are spending, according to the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], $13,000 every minute of every day, and over $7,000 of that is on account of bonds upon which someone must pay interest and which posterity will have to take care of. We are daily mortgaging the energy and the brain power of the American people for the next quarter if not the next half century. In other words, we have reached the point where we have an inflation of credit to the extent of $260,000,000,000, and are increasing it constantly.

There is no complaint with reference to credit inflation from those sources of complaint with reference to the pending measure. It seems to be considered safe and sound to have some $260,000,000,000 of credit inflation upon the country, which means interest and taxes, but unsound to put into circulation $2,000,000,000 of currency without interest and without taxes.

Mr. President, this country has never suffered from currency inflation. This will be disputed. Its great suffering has come from credit inflation. In 1929 we know the result of credit inflation. It destroyed homes, it dissipated savings, it spread want and misery and poverty, and was one of the great contributing causes to this depression, but those who are now pleading against inflation of the currency raised no voice against the inflation of credit. It was all right, it was bringing millions into their coffers.

At a time when we have the credit structure which we now have, can anyone contend that the issuance of $2,000,000,000 of currency, giving altogether six and a half billion of currency, with eight and one-half billion dollars of gold in the Treasury, with a billion and a quarter of silver, and with the honor and the faith of the Government behind it is in any sense inflationary?

Mr. President, whenever it is proposed to issue non-interest-bearing obligations of the Government and make them legal tender, the argument is always made, and made with great force and effect, that once you start in that direction, once you take that step, there is no stopping on the hither side of complete national demoralization and complete national bankruptcy. It is not, we are told, that the pending measure of itself, as indicated in the message itself, is inflationary, but that it will start a movement which it is feared will result in inflation; once the move is made it cannot be stopped.

Those who so contend call up instances of history in support of their contention. They recall and retell the story of the assignats of France in language which vividly brings back all the scenes of blood and misery which accompanied the French Revolution. The whole panorama has been presented to us again in recent weeks. We hear the tumblers rattling down over the stone streets toward the guillotine, we hear the hungry mob cry out for the blood of the prisoners, we see their heads drop into the basket one by one, and we see the old ladies sitting by watching the scene and knitting from early dawn until the day dies out of the sky. We see Danton at the head of the Committee of Public Safety, we catch the tones of Robespierre's quavering voice as he gives order for massacre and the more murder. We witness the complete collapse of French credit—fortunes disappear overnight, and we see frenzied men and women tearing and scratching and biting one another like wild beasts. All this is the fearful story of the French assignats, as retold to the country in recent weeks.

Let me ask Senators, suppose the French had conceived, suppose they had had the financial genius to conceive the scheme of issuing tax-exempt interest-bearing obligations of the Government and of compelling banks to take the bonds and upon the bonds to issue money, would the collapse have been any less speedy? Would the break-down have been any less complete? Would the course of the French Revolution and the misery which followed have been any less profound? The policy of issuing interest-bearing obligations and of the government requiring banks to issue currency thereunder would have brought France to the same goal that she reached under the assignats. It was not, Mr. President, the fact that they issued the assignats, based upon real property, that resulted in the break-down in French monetary policy; it was the carrying it to the extreme to which they resorted in that instance. The result would have been the same under these tax-exempt interest-bearing obligations of the Government with the banks issuing the currency instead of the Government issuing currency. Looking at the world today buried beneath uncounted billions of interest-bearing bonds, it is my judgment that it is more difficult to stop issuing interest-bearing obligations of the Government than it would be to stop issuing non-interest-bearing obligations of the Government; there are always powerful interests in favor of the former; there are always powerful interests against the latter.

Another illustration is always cited, and that is of the Civil War and the greenbacks. When the Civil War came, gold, as is its habit, as is its inherent nature when trouble is at hand, went into hiding. Government bonds were selling for a discount as great as 40 percent within a short time after the trouble began. The Government turned to its own resources, its own honor, and its own good faith. It issued $150,000,000 of currency notes in February 1862, $150,000,000 in July 1862, and $150,000,000 in March 1863.

Then Mr. Chase, the Secretary of the Treasury at that time, said, "I think it unwise to make further issues; I think the Government should cease to issue greenbacks." The Government did cease; the Government stopped, and it stopped at a time when it was practically divided in twain. It stopped at a time when our military outlook was none too bright; it stopped at a time when one could hear the guns of civil strife from the steps of the White House; but it stopped. Mr. Lincoln said that those currency notes enabled the Government to carry on; that without them it could not have done so; and the Supreme Court of the United States has said that they enabled the Union to carry to a conclusion its military activities. The greenback has always been derided, but it was the only friend the Union had in the monetary world in that unfortunate struggle.

But it is said—and this is the deadly warning—that the greenbacks went down to 50 cents on the dollar, and so they did, and so did the bonds of the Government at that time go down to 50 cents on the dollar. The decrease in the value of bonds which bore interest kept pace with the decrease in the value of the currency notes which did not bear interest. But, while the bonds were down to 50 cents on the dollar, those who owned them continued to collect interest at a hundred cents on the dollar, and when the war was over bonds were restored to par, notwithstanding they had been purchased at 50 cents on the dollar. As between the currency notes which bore no interest and the bonds which bore interest, I ask you, Mr. President, which was the greater friend of the Union in its hour of distress?

Mr. President, I am not arguing these matters because I am in favor of an inflationary movement of that nature or because I believe the enactment of this bill would result in inflation. I am discussing these matters because they have been advanced and placed in this debate; the perfectly absurd argument has been advanced that they are relevant. We are, however, proposing nothing of that kind. There is no relevancy between the assignats and this proposal; there is nothing that can possibly happen under this bill, if it should be passed, such as happened in those instances. There is no relevancy between the issuance of greenbacks during the Civil War and this proposal. Back of the greenbacks there was no gold; back of the greenbacks there was no silver; back of the greenbacks there was nothing but the promise of the Government; while back of the money which would be issued under the Patman bill is our gold and there is ample, our silver, and everything else that represents the honor and credit of the Government.

Now, the question is, Is it unwise to put $2,000,000,000 of currency into circulation? Is it unsafe? Whom will it injure? It is true, Mr. President, as has been said, that the bankers have plenty of money; but it is also true that nobody can get that money. There is inflation already in the bank vaults. But the design of this bill is to put the money into circulation in every corner and precinct of the United States.

What have we been doing for the last few years? And I am not now criticizing it. We have been endeavoring during the last few years to get money out into circulation. We have taken it from the Treasury and sent it out in this way and in that way. Those in authority said they were "going to prime the pump." In other words, we wanted to restore purchasing power; we wanted to place money out among the masses.

The President referred in his message to the fact that the passage of this bill would help retail business but that the condition of retail business now was almost on a par with its condition in 1929. The condition of retail business is on a par with its condition in 1929 because the money has been put out through these different processes in the various parts of the country; but it has been put out by issuing bonds upon which the people must pay interest, which increases taxes. Why not put it out in the payment of a debt instead of in creating a debt?

Mr. President, the President in his message quoted from a very humble authority as follows:

The soldier of this country cannot be aided except as the country itself is rehabilitated. The soldier cannot come back except as the people as a whole come back. The soldier cannot prosper unless the people prosper. He has now gone back and intermingled and become a part of the citizenship of the country; he is wrapped up in its welfare or in its adversity. The handing out to him of a few dollars will not benefit him under such circumstances, whereas it will greatly injure the prospects of the country and the restoration of normal conditions.

I quote an additional paragraph which was a part of the same statement.

In my judgment that which would be of far greater value to the ex-service man than a cash bonus would be the chance to get on his feet. That opportunity he cannot have unless we pursue a course of rigid economy in government, reduce taxes, eliminate bureaus, cut down expenditures in every possible way, and build up the economic conditions of the country generally.

That statement was made by me 13 years ago, when I was opposing the creation of any bonus obligation whatever. But my view did not prevail and the Congress created the obligation, it made the contract. I am now considering the contract which others made. But even so I do not modify my views as I expressed them 13 years ago. I think it is a perfectly sound principle. I think the principle is applicable to this measure. I do not think we can aid nor should undertake to aid the soldier in disregard of the welfare of the country. A policy which undertakes to aid the soldier which does not take into consideration the entire country would be a failure as to the soldier. I have no doubt, as I said then, the welfare of the soldier is wrapped up in the welfare of the country. It is of my belief that the increase in the volume of the currency, the stimulation of business consequent upon putting this money into circulation in all quarters of the United States, will aid the country as a whole, at the same time we are paying the debt to the soldier. It is for this reason that I support the measure, and I support it in strict harmony with the principle which I announced 13 years ago.

Mr. President, I said in the beginning that I was in favor of an increased volume of currency. I advocated the bill introduced by the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] because it contemplated an increase in the currency of the country; I advocated the Thomas amendments because they contemplated an increase in the volume of currency; I advocated the silver bill because it seemed to me to be looking in that direction; I advocated the President's monetary policies because they seemed to me to have that object in view; and I advocate this measure for the controlling reason that, in my judgment, it will have a tendency to increase the volume of currency, not to any marked extent, but to some extent. I do not expect any great rise in prices as a result of the measure, but it pays a debt, and pays it without an increase of taxes or interest; it brings help to millions who stand in great need of help; it increases within safe bounds the volume of currency, and closes up a controversy which will be here every Congress until these certificates are paid. The question has been here in one form or another for 15 years. I want it settled, and this seems to me the best way to settle it.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, in the 2 years and more that I have been a Member of this body I have taken pride in the fact that I have been a loyal supporter of the administration. I glory in that fact at this time. I am frank to confess that on several occasions I have subordinated my personal viewpoint, my personal sentiments, in order to try to effectuate the great humane program which our leader had advanced.

I am one of the type of men who believe that when a general has been selected to conduct a great battle against depression he should very largely be given control as to how the battle shall be fought. I have not been in favor of the idea that when the battle orders have been given and the plan of campaign has been drawn some squirt of a second lieutenant out near the front somewhere should decide that he would not fight today or the next day. It seemed to me that kind of cooperation would be fatal to a successful carrying out of the battle.

So the duty I shall have to perform today is not exactly a pleasant one. However, in my campaign in 1932 I said to the people of my State that if I were elected to this high office I should vote for the immediate cash payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates. I have a very deep aversion to having various proposals hitched on as amendments to other kinds of legislation to which it has no possible reference or connection. I have on several occasions cast a negative vote against a bonus proposal of one kind or another, stating that when it came here on its merits I should be very glad to support it. Recently I have had the opportunity, as I see it, to carry out my promise to my people by voting either for the Vinson bill or the Patman bill. There was, of course, very great merit to the proposal submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], but I did not conceive that a vote for it would comply with the promise which I had made in my campaign.

The American Legion, an organization which I regard very highly and which on several occasions, both in the State and in the Nation, has rewarded me with high office, endorsed the Vinson bill. I think by and large that the soldiers are interested more in getting the cash out of their certificates than in the means by which that end should be accomplished. The American Legion properly declared for the Vinson bill in carrying out the mandate of their Miami convention, which was a declaration in favor of the cash payment of the bonus in full. They were not, as legionnaires, concerned with the method Congress should choose to carry out that purpose. I personally preferred the Patman bill. However, I would have been perfectly willing to have voted for the Vinson bill if it would have been the means of bringing the soldiers the cash upon their certificates.

I think it is grossly unfair and unjust to refer to the Vinson bill as a "bankers' bill." I have not known of any bankers who have been here advocating the passage of that legislation. They will have plenty of opportunity for the handling of Government bonds without the Vinson bill either being passed or rejected.

But it does seem to me that we should not be worried by the charge which has been made that because there has been incorporated in the Patman bill the method by which the bonus shall be paid it will bring dire consequences to the country. I personally cannot become seriously worried when we retire one kind of Government obligation with another kind of Government obligation. I do have some apprehension, which apparently is not shared by the Senator from California [Mr. McAdoo], because it may be claimed that this bill is a precedent. I think there will be many proposals presented to this body whereby we will be asked to issue similar Government notes, and where there will not be any exchange of present Government securities for such notes. That, to my mind, is an entirely different situation. In casting my vote today to override the President's veto, I do not want in any way to have it taken as an indication that any such future proposals, where there is no such exchange of Government securities, would meet with my favor.

Reluctant as I am not to be able to go along with our leader, as I have done consistently, I am today, not only in accordance with the pledge made to my people, but because I think it is right and just, going to vote to try to put into effect the so-called "Patman bill" to enable the soldier to obtain cash on his Government obligation.

I think the President unwittingly made one mistake yesterday in his statement that if this bill should become a law it would be at the expense of the disabled soldier. If that were the case, in my opinion, if I believed that to be the fact, in spite of the pledges I made to my people I should not be willing to support the legislation; but I cannot for the life of me, after giving it careful consideration, see that that will be the effect. I cannot believe that it will be dangerous to the country. I believe it will be a great measure of justice to the men who fought and who, in my opinion, are entitled to perhaps a small amount of preferential treatment.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the veto message delivered yesterday by the President of the United States to the House of Representatives is entirely temperate in its tone and from the standpoint of the President I regard it as a candid statement. It proceeds, however, upon a theory and announces a philosophy which I cannot accept and to which I desire to enter my dissent.

We all realize, I think, that nothing said upon this occasion will change the vote of any Senator. There is hope, however, that the utterances made here may find some faint echo somewhere else in the United States, and that the correct presentation of the viewpoint in favor of the legislation may do something to answer the arguments which the President made yesterday. His expressions were widely circulated and may, if unanswered, lead our people into a conclusion respecting this matter which they would not otherwise reach.

Before I discuss that which I desire most to discuss, and which relates to the philosophy of the President's opposition to the legislation, I desire to invite attention to two or three details which, in my judgment, ought to be corrected.

First, I invite attention to a statement on page 2 of the President's message, in which it is said:

Out of this vast army, consisting of the whole working population of the Nation, four and three-quarter million men volunteered or were drafted into the armed forces of the United States. One-half of them remained within our American continental limits. The other half served overseas.

Mr. President, I am sure it was not the purpose of the author of the veto message, by the language just quoted, to mislead. In my judgment, however, that statement unwittingly gives support to a conclusion that of the total amount involved in the legislation, about one-half would be paid to those who never saw overseas service. At least one newspaper in an editorial this morning placed that logical construction upon the President's statement. Nothing, however, could be more erroneous.

It will be recalled that soldiers were trained at the camps in the United States for fairly limited periods. Some of them were trained 2 months, some 3 months, possibly some 6 months, and then they were sent abroad. I have not been able to establish the average training period, but of the 2,000,000 soldiers who were retained in the United States, I estimate the average length of service would not exceed 3 or 4 or 5 months.

Let it be remembered that those veterans whose adjusted-service awards did not exceed $50 were paid in cash, and that they are not involved at this time. Let it be remembered also that $60 of clothing allowance, or so-called "discharge bonus", was also deducted by subtracting 60 days from the length of service in making up the adjusted-compensation service credit. So a minimum of 111 days of service was required in order to have a certificate issued. In other words, those who served not to exceed 3 months and 20 days in the United States are not involved in this controversy at all.

Certificates are held by those who served more than 110 days. They are the soldiers who saw an extended period of service. I think it is true that of the whole amount involved in this controversy at least 75 percent of the money will be paid to those who served overseas. Therefore, it is not correct to conclude, as might be implied in the veto message, that this money would be divided, if paid, one-half to those who remained at home and one-half to those who served abroad.

The President also said:

As a result of this liberal legislation for disability and for death compensation, 1,140,000 men and women have been benefited.

That statement, I think, is literally true; and yet it is also misleading, because, although the number stated is the total number who have been benefited, it is not the number presently being benefited. It contains those who were at one time on the rolls and who have since been removed for various reasons; notably, over 450,000 of the 1,140,000 men and women to whom the President refers were awarded disability allowances, the authority for which was destroyed by the Economy Act, and has not since been restored. I am advised by the Veterans' Administration that at this time there are not 1,140,000 men and women who served in the World War being benefited by compensation and pension payments from the Federal Government, but that the actual number is less than one-half of that figure. The number who are so benefited as of April 30, 1935, was 478,975.

The President's language was that these men and women have been "benefited." Of whom is he speaking? He is referring principally to the recipients of compensation payments. He is talking about those who have sustained physical disabilities, including loss of limbs and of impairment of health. He is talking in some cases about those who received death payments on account of the death of the veteran. Are they being benefited? In one sense, of course, they are. They are the recipients of the bounty of a generous Government, but it is wholly beside the mark to say that these people are being benefited when at the most they are merely receiving compensation for something which they have given or something which they have lost. Such compensation is never to be regarded as a benefit. They receive only economic restitution or partial restitution. They receive for their losses and impairment of ability to earn, only a small contribution toward restoration to their former economic basis. Our Government never has paid one cent for pain and suffering. We never have suggested the payment of one cent for the mutilation of the maimed. In a very real sense these people are not benefited. There is little justification for this language employed in the veto message.

We find also in the President's objections the contention that the payment of the adjusted compensation under the pending legislation would destroy the insurance protection for the dependents of the veterans provided in the original plan. The President says that for the remaining period of 10 years they would lose the advantage of this insurance.

Mr. President, in the next 10 years, according to the estimates of the Veterans' Administration, less than 300,000 of all the veterans will come to their death. Less, therefore, than 300,000 would be concerned, during the 10-year period, in the receipt of the insurance provided for in the certificates. So in making the point which the President makes at this place in his argument he is arraying a supposed advantage to less than 300,000 veterans against the interest of more than 3,000,000 veterans who would be benefited by the payment of the certificates at this time.

The President also said:

This bill favors the able-bodied veteran at the expense of the disabled veteran.

That would be true, if the bill produced inflation, to the extent that it would substantially increase the cost of living; for then, of course, it would adversely affect all having fixed incomes, including disabled veterans who receive compensation from their Government. If the assumption of such inflation is unsound, if it would not produce a substantial appreciation in the cost of living, then the argument is not good; but, whether sound or not, how can this argument be accepted now, in these days, in the midst of this administration, when the avowed policy of our Government, as declared by the President himself, is to increase price levels? How can this argument have been made by a President who is now urging the Congress to continue the National Recovery Act for another 2 years, resulting in higher costs of living? How can it be urged by a President who himself cut down the benefits of the disabled veterans of America 54 percent of every dollar that had been allowed them by our Government?

In my judgment, there is not a possibility of appreciation in price levels or in cost of living to an extent that will bring injury to the disabled veterans in proportion to the injury wrought upon them by the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, and by the regulations which the President made under that act; those regulations visited upon the helpless disabled veterans of America in excess of a 50-percent cut in their compensation. The harsh injustice of the Presidential regulations was corrected by legislation enacted over the veto of the President.

I cannot accept his argument. I cannot believe that there will be substantial appreciation in price levels or any substantial injury to anyone living upon fixed income, whether he be a disabled veteran of the war or not.

I rose, however, chiefly to develop another phase of this discussion.

I stated in the beginning that I found it impossible to accept the philosophy upon which this veto message has proceeded. I desire now, in order to make perfectly clear what I have in mind upon this score, to call attention to some further excerpts from the veto message delivered yesterday by the President to the House of Representatives.

We find throughout the message he is developing the thought that the veterans should not be given a privileged status. We find he assumes with respect to this bill that the veterans of the World War are given such a privileged status. Against such status he makes what appears to me to be a strong convincing argument. His argument is satisfactory if we accept the President's philosophy that the veteran is not entitled to any privilege; that he ought not to be placed in a privileged class; and that he ought to be dealt with exactly on the same basis as every other citizen of the Republic.

Let me read briefly from what the President has said upon this subject:

I hold that that able-bodied citizen should be accorded no treatment different from that accorded to other citizens who did not wear a uniform during the World War.

And from another place I quote as follows:

Is it not better to treat every able-bodied American alike and to carry out the great relief program adopted by this Congress in a spirit of equality to all?

Also, the following:

They are American citizens who should be accorded equal privileges and equal rights to enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—no less and no more.

And then, near the end of the message, these words:

I am thinking of those millions of men and women who increased crops, who made munitions, who ran our railroads, who worked in the mines, who loaded our ships during the war period.

Mr. President, these various statements all tend to one conclusion—namely, this bill would make the World War veteran a member of a privileged class; that he ought not to be accorded any privilege; and, therefore, this legislation ought not to be enacted. The philosophy of the President, if accepted, would have justified opposition to the Adjusted Compensation Act in 1924. It would have afforded an argument against that act. It is, to some degree, a justification for the idea that the adjusted-compensation certificates should never be paid. The argument which the President makes so forcefully is an argument that the whole idea of adjusted compensation is wrong in principle. I respectfully submit it is not a fair argument against the pending legislation at this time.

I am unable to accept his philosophy. The citizen who did not wear a uniform enjoyed the security of his home and received for his services the highest wages in history. Most of the citizens who wore the uniform received approximately a dollar a day during the period of military service. A part of the compensation paid was taken back by the Government in payment for insurance premiums. A meager allowance was made by the soldier, it will be remembered, for the support of his family so that net compensation was hardly sufficient to be taken into consideration.

Many came to the pay table and received nothing. Others received only meager sums, possibly sufficient to provide toilet articles. It is regrettably true that the American soldier of the World War, having family responsibilities, and attempting to carry the war-risk insurance, received practically nothing in cash for his services. Neither he nor his family fared as well as the neighbor who remained in civil life, and when he was discharged from the Army he discovered that his place in industry was occupied by another.

There is no escape from these facts. Most of the soldiers found employment, it is true, but subsequently the mechanization of industry and still later the depression which came over the country cheated them out of their jobs because they had lost their seniority, and, being last hired, they were the first fired. As the positions became fewer a great number of the World War veterans found themselves in time of peace still carrying on the sacrifice which had been undertaken first in time of war.

I can agree with the President's theory if it is interpreted to mean that the soldier should on the whole be accorded treatment and enjoy opportunities equal to the treatment and opportunities provided the citizen who did not wear the uniform. In the vast majority of cases his treatment has been different from that accorded other citizens, but not in the sense that it has been better. On the whole his treatment has been worse. The Adjusted Compensation Act of 1924 only partially corrects the inequality in this situation. Prepayment of the certificates is a further step toward equality for those who wore the uniform and common justice requires the step should be taken. I make bold to say that even the prepayment of the certificates at this time will not replace the American veteran upon a basis of parity with his civilian neighbors who remained at home during the war.

"No different treatment for the soldier", as suggested by the President, merely means the soldier will be treated differently. "No different treatment for the soldier" means he will not be treated as well as civilian workers were treated. It means we are adopting the philosophy of the National Economy League. It means we are adopting a philosophy which is acceptable in Wall Street generally, and which has been approved before committees of this body during this session by spokesmen for the munitions makers of the United States. It means we are adopting a philosophy which the profiteers everywhere have accepted. It means we are upholding the dubious rights of another privileged class, and we are preserving or attempting to preserve their profits of war at the expense of the American boy who walked through the blood and mud of the trenches.

I protest against this philosophy, Mr. President. I want to record the protest with all the vigor which I possess. I feel there is nothing more important in the United States today than to win back to our Government the love of the common people. We never can win it back upon a theory of privilege for the citizen who made money during the war and underprivilege for the citizen who served in uniform. We can never win it back on the theory upon which this veto message of yesterday was written. We can win it back upon a philosophy of justice, justice to the common man, justice to the common men and women who make up the rank and file of the Nation.

I submit that if there is one service the Congress could perform in restoring confidence and regaining the affection of our people in our Government, it is to see to it that no spurious philosophy of privilege is permitted to enter into this discussion. The American soldiers have no legal right to demand this payment from the Government at this time, because, as has been so ably pointed out by the Senator from Idaho, and as stated by the President, the payment is not yet due. But if the country is permitted to believe we are placing a premium upon privilege to those who made money during the war, and we are not willing to accord a generous measure of assistance to those who served in our armed forces, we will find difficulty in another national emergency in bringing young manhood to the defense of the flag of our country.

To me it seems perfectly clear that the national interest is promoted by paying the compensation at this time; it is further promoted by abstaining from any questionable theory of privilege, which is urged in this veto message.

I am for immediate payment, not because I am for inflation. I am for such payment because I think it does not introduce inflation into our monetary system, and because I think it is right to prepay the bill now, at a time when the veteran needs the money probably more than he ever needed it before, and I hope more than he may ever need it again.

I favor the payment because I feel the discharge of this obligation will accomplish all that any other spending could accomplish, and accomplish it without the creation of a new debt.

I favor it because it will stimulate business and at the same time will discharge an obligation.

Finally, I favor it because it provides justice to those who were willing to serve and to sacrifice, and to some who did sacrifice in a most substantial degree in order that their country might endure. If justice to the Nation's defenders is privilege let there be privilege, a privilege that will insure the perpetuity of the Republic. The pending measure to provide immediate payment of the adjusted compensation should be enacted notwithstanding the veto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. McADOO obtained the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Austin	Costigan	Lewis	Robinson
Bachman	Couzens	Logan	Russell
Bailey	Davis	Loneragan	Schall
Bankhead	Dickinson	Long	Schwellenbach

Connally	Keyes	Pope

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, the President of the United States in the exercise of his constitutional duty has sent a veto message of the so-called "Patman bill", which was but recently passed by the Congress of the United States. I was interested in hearing my distinguished friend who now sits in the chair, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]; advert to the veto power possessed by the President of the United States.

To override a Presidential veto requires a two-thirds vote of each House. The legislative function in that respect must, of course, be exercised with the same courage and the same independence as the President himself exhibits when he vetoes a measure. When either House is confronted with a veto it is essential that each shall act without regard to mere party loyalty or party consideration, but through the conscience of each Senator and each Member of the House of Representatives. That is highly important if we are to maintain the independence of the legislative branches of the Government. We all admit that their independence is essential to the vitality and permanence of American institutions.

I remember being brought up on the old adage that two heads are better than one. I am not so sure now of the correctness of this adage, especially in view of the fact that the fathers of our country, who formulated the Constitution, expressly provided in that instrument that one head is much better than many combined heads.

In order to override a Presidential veto the votes of 64 Members of this body and the votes of 290 Members of the House of Representatives are necessary. In other words, one man, under our present system of Government, if he be President of the United States, can override the will of Congress, provided only 63 Members in the Senate and 289 Members of the House vote against him.

I am not finding fault with the President, of course, for exercising his prerogative. I call attention to the fact, merely to emphasize the point, that when such a preponderant majority of both Houses of Congress are necessary to override a Presidential veto a double duty and responsibility rests upon every individual in each House to exercise an independent judgment when he casts his vote.

We hear talk sometimes about the split decisions of the Supreme Court—5-to-4 decisions—and yet under our system the members of the Supreme Court do not exercise anything like the same degree of authority and power as the President of the United States does when he exercises the veto power.

I hope it is not necessary for me to advert to what I think my friends will concede that I have been—the friend and supporter of the President—and that I still am. There are honest differences of opinion about the pending question. I feel that it is my duty to state my position and also to vote according to my conscience and conviction, whether in this particular instance it means overriding the President's veto or not.

The President in his veto message said:

During the war the Government started a system of voluntary insurance at peace-time rates for men and women in the service.

I am familiar with the war-risk insurance we gave the American soldiers. I hope I may say without immodesty that I had a somewhat important part in the formulation of the measure and its advocacy before the two Houses of Congress in 1917.

The President of the United States, then President Wilson, thoroughly approved the idea of providing insurance for our soldiers and benefits for their families while the soldiers were fighting at the front. It was a step the like of which had never been taken before in human history. No great government ever before had undertaken to insure the lives of its soldiers and to provide support for their families while the soldiers were at the front.

However, the impression must not be allowed to prevail that the Government furnished this insurance for nothing. The soldier paid for his insurance. In foreign service the soldier was paid $33 a month, and the soldier in camp at home was paid $1 a day, or $30 per month.

In other words, the Congress declared by the compensation which was paid to the soldier that it was worth $3 more a month to face German bullets and poison gases than it was to remain at home and be safe within the camps. I do not draw any distinction, so far as service is concerned, between the man who was kept at home and the man who went into the trenches in France, because whenever the strong arm of the Government reached out and took the head of the family, or the son, or the brother, and put the uniform on him and put him in a camp, he was subject to the orders of his Government, and it was not his fault that he was not sent to Europe and did not have the opportunity to fight in the trenches. We did, however, make a distinction in pay, but we gave all of them the right to buy insurance.

We provided in this insurance measure that every soldier should contribute each month $15 of his pay for the support of his wife and dependents. That amount was deducted from his pay right here in Washington. The administration of this act happened to be in the Treasury under my jurisdiction. We also required him to pay the premiums for the insurance granted to him. The rates averaged $6.60 per month for $10,000 of insurance at the age of 25 and, of course, was higher as the age increased.

Let us take the case of the man who was paid $33 a month in foreign service. First deduct the allowance of $15 a month for his wife and $6.60 per month for his $10,000 of insurance, a total of $21.60. This left the soldier in France $11.40 per month with which to supply his ordinary needs and to have a glorious (!) time when he happened to get a furlough.

Now, I wish to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that the soldier, even at $33 a month, was not overpaid. He helped to support his family out of the meager pay he received. The Government did the generous thing of contributing to the support of his family an equal amount, $15 a month, and an additional amount for each dependent child, $10 for the first child, $7.50 for the second, and $5 for each additional child. So a man who had a family consisting of a wife and two children gave $15 for their support; the Government contributed $15 to the wife and $17.50 for the two children; so that his wife and family had $47.50 a month on which to live while he was fighting in Europe.

Although we did pay a larger compensation to our soldiers than was paid by any other government in the world, whether we were generous or not, and whether all the benefits outlined by the President in his veto message were received or not, nevertheless, as the President said in his message:

It is generally conceded that the settlement by adjusted-compensation certificates made in 1924 was fair and it was accepted as fair by the overwhelming majority of World War veterans themselves.

So no matter what the soldier gets or what he claims or what his claims were before the settlement was made, all were merged into this settlement; and these adjusted-service certificates due in 1945 are now the subject of this discussion.

Only two questions are presented here. The first is a question of policy, and in that question of policy is involved the present payment of these certificates instead of waiting until 1945. Those who contend that they should not be paid now stand upon the technical claim that the contract calls for payment in 1945, and therefore that we must respect the contract, no matter what happens to the beneficiary. My view of the matter is that this is, in effect, a refunding operation of a Government obligation. We owe these soldiers a certain amount of money, due in 1945; they have borrowed under the law all the money they can borrow upon these certificates; and now it is only a question of paying the remainder due to them, $2,200,000,000 under the Patman plan. I think this refunding operation is not only justified but I believe it is important to the economy of the country; and, furthermore, that we are just as much justified, if not more justified, in refunding this debt to our soldiers as we are in refunding many of the outstanding bond issues which have been taken up from time to time by the Treasury.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to have the Senator explain the difficulty which arises in my mind. He says there is no difference between the refunding, as he used the word, of the certificates and the refunding of bonds. I understand bonds are being refunded by way of reducing the interest rate, but if the Patman bill may be considered a refunding measure, according to the President's statement, and, I think, according to the facts, it does not involve a reduction of interest rates, but represents an increase of the capital by $1,600,000,000. I should like to have the Senator explain if I am not right about that.

Mr. McADOO. I do not know how the President obtains those figures.

Mr. BAILEY. Let the Senator give his own figures. He is on the Finance Committee and he heard the statement.

Mr. McADOO. I beg the Senator's pardon; I am not a member of the Finance Committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought the Senator was; he should have been, by all means.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator object to yielding to me for a moment to offer a statement from the Veterans' Bureau on that point?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I have a statement from the Veterans' Bureau which was sent at my request. I asked that they give me the figures showing when this indebtedness would have been due if it had been computed on a 6-percent interest-bearing basis from the date of the armistice. Note this is not figured from the date the work was performed but from the date of the armistice. It was figured on a 6-percent basis, because the Government has been paying 6-percent interest on deferred payments to war contractors for munitions and other materials of war and also on tax refunds. I have before me the figures showing that on a 6-percent basis, if it had been computed from the armistice date, this indebtedness would have been due on the 1st day of January 1928. So on a 6-percent interest-bearing basis it is now 7 years past due, and even if it were reduced to a 4-percent basis, it would have been due and payable in January 1932. So that instead of not being due, it is past due. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. McADOO. Those figures are predicated, as I understand the Senator from Alabama, on the date of the armistice in 1918?

Mr. BLACK. These figures, supplied to me by the Veterans' Bureau, the gentleman who supplied them being at the present time in the Chamber, compute the interest from the date of the armistice, while the work, in the main, was performed before the armistice was declared.

Mr. McADOO. I thank the Senator from Alabama for the information; but, without regard to that, since the face of the certificate itself provides for payment in 1945, I contend that it is within the power of Congress to say that it shall mature earlier, or, to put it in another way, if we wish simply to refund it now at its face value in 1945, it is within our power to do so.

What is the objection to the payment of the certificates now? If we waive technicalities, there certainly is no objection, so far as the overwhelming majority of the House and a preponderant majority of the Senate are concerned.

So we come to the next question, and that is the one of financing the obligation if we undertake to pay it now.

Here we are confronted with the charge of inflation. That seems to be the chief reason urged by our opponents against the payment of this obligation in the manner provided by the Patman bill.

The President says in his message:

I cannot in honesty assert to you that to increase that deficit this year by $2,200,000,000 will in itself bankrupt the United States. Today the credit of the United States is safe. But it cannot ultimately be safe if we engage in a policy of yielding to each and all of the groups that are able to enforce upon the Congress claims for special consideration.

With reference to the word "enforce", I may say for myself—and I am quite sure that every Senator would say the same for himself—that whatever my vote has been, either for or against this measure, it has not been an enforced vote; that I have voted voluntarily and because of my own convictions.

The President further says:

To do so is to abandon the principle of government by and for the American people and to put in its place government by and for political coercion by minorities. We can afford all that we need, but we cannot afford all that we want.

So far as political coercion by minorities is concerned, I assume that the President meant that the Senate and the House of Representatives are being coerced by a minority representing the veterans of the World War. I think he is mistaken in that. The right of petition still exists under the Constitution, and I think that these soldiers have a right to come here and petition for the payment of their adjusted-service certificates. So far as I am concerned, no compulsion has been attempted upon me, and I doubt if any has been attempted upon any other Member of Congress. But if we are going into that, if that is a justification for not paying the soldiers' bonus, are we not being coerced by minorities here all the time?

The whole legislative history of this and of the preceding sessions of Congress shows that we have repeatedly enacted legislation to satisfy minorities, because we felt that by recognizing those minorities as we did we were conserving the welfare of the people of the United States. Special groups are frequently benefited by legislation. Let us take, for instance, the processing tax on wheat. That was legislation for a group. I think it was justifiable legislation, and I was glad to vote for it. We have the processing tax on cotton. I voted for it with the hope that it would benefit the cotton farmer. I need not go into further illustrations. Those are two outstanding ones.

In my judgment it is not a sound argument against the anticipated payment of the bonus to the soldiers that they happen to constitute a group of people in this country. We may say for them, and it is another justification for paying the bonus, that they do represent a particular class which is entitled to special consideration because they hold actual obligations of the Government, whereas many people who have been benefited by use of the taxing power of this Government, have not held special obligations of the Government in any form.

Shall we anticipate payment of the certificates now and give the veterans the means that many of them need to sustain themselves and their families, to pay off mortgages on their homes, to get a business started again, or shall we stick to the letter of the contract and demand that they wait until 1945? In my humble opinion, the overwhelming sentiment of the American people is in favor of paying the soldiers now. It is a grave mistake not to enact this legislation and not to pay these certificates at the earliest possible moment.

Coming back to the question of inflation, I have had an interesting experience recently as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the Senate. We have been holding hearings on the omnibus banking bill. I have been trying to get some of the leading bankers to tell me what inflation is and also to define sound money. I should like to read what some of them have said on that subject.

We had the Secretary of the Treasury before the committee a few days ago. He is the chief financial officer of the Government and is, of course, an important adviser of the President. I am sure that he is a very competent adviser. I asked him:

Mr. Secretary, we hear a good deal of talk about inflation these days. I wonder if you would give us your definition of inflation? Secretary MORGENTHAU. To go up against two Secretaries of the Treasury is kind of tough.

Senator GLASS. You are only up against one, now. I did not vote for the Patman bill.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Senator McAdoo, in view of the fact that that bill is pending before the President, I would like to be excused from answering your question.

Senator McAdoo. The definition of "inflation" has nothing to do with that. We are talking finance and economics now.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. If you do not mind, with the bill pending before the President, I would like to be excused.

Senator McAdoo. Of course, I will excuse you if you do not want to answer. On the other hand, I suppose you do not object to telling us what you think is sound money?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I am not a very good theorist on these things, Senator. I think the President put me in there as administrator and not as a money theorist.

Senator McAdoo. I am not asking your theories, but your judgment as a practical business man as to what you consider sound money.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I would be glad to hear from you, sir.

Senator McAdoo. I want information; I am looking for information. Would you consider United States notes, commonly called "greenbacks", that now have back of them, and have had for some time, a 40-percent gold reserve, to be sound money?

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Senator, I am not very smart at these things. I have just got to go back to your question. There is a bill pending before the President that has this question of greenbacks in it at this time, and, if you do not mind, I would like to be excused from getting into that discussion.

Senator McAdoo. We have had statements which show a little more than 40 percent of gold back of a certain amount of greenbacks. I was just curious to know whether you considered that sound money or not.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. Would this be fair? If, after the President has taken action on the bonus bill, and this committee still wants me to come here and theorize, I would be glad to do it then.

Senator McAdoo. This does not involve the question before the President at all, because there is no gold reserve back of this proposed note issue. I am just trying to get an idea, in view of the present state of our finances, what your view is as to sound money; that is, whether 40-percent gold back of our currency would be considered sound.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. We have got a lot of experts down at the Treasury who can discuss the theory of money and currency.

Senator McAdoo. I am not talking about theory. I am talking about actualities.

Secretary MORGENTHAU. I cannot qualify.

Senator McAdoo. All right.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. With that information from the Secretary of the Treasury, which certainly must be luminous to everyone, I assume that the former Secretary of the Treasury, the distinguished Senator from California, had no difficulty whatever in determining what is sound money or what inflation would be? [Laughter.]

Mr. McADOO. I am looking for information myself, and I am trying to get it from distinguished Senators who talk inflation but do not tell us what it is.

We had before the Committee on Banking and Currency Mr. Winthrop W. Aldrich, president of the Chase National Bank of New York, who is a very fine economist and financier. I asked him this question:

Senator McAdoo. Mr. Aldrich, what would you call sound currency in the present state of our financial affairs in this country?

Mr. ALDRICH. Well, I think that under the present circumstances the currency provisions of the present Federal Reserve Act, with the stabilization on the basis of gold as now provided, make sound currency.

Senator McAdoo. You are taking into consideration the fact that we are off gold, of course?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; and I have not taken into account the action that we might take under a bill such as this which permits an expansion of currency which would be out of any relation to gold. May I just state that more accurately? The amount of the currency available for payment is well regulated by the amount of gold.

Senator McAdoo. In what way?

Mr. ALDRICH. By those provisions of the Federal Reserve Act with regard to gold certificates.

Senator McAdoo. There is no gold reserve back of the certificates—

Mr. ALDRICH. The entire provision as to the payment of gold, either in currency or Government obligations, has been eliminated, but there is a provision for gold certificates, although you cannot get gold for them.

Senator McAdoo. Assuming that we have a gold base, how much gold backing would you consider we should have against currency to make it sound, without other security?

Mr. ALDRICH. I have not given any consideration to that, Senator. I have felt that the provisions of the original Federal Reserve Act, which provided for gold backing plus other commercial paper and other assets, were sufficiently sound. I have never given any thought to the percentage of gold backing that is necessary, because at the present time you could not get gold. The only possible effect of the provision is to limit the amount of currency outstanding to a certain ratio to the free gold available.

Senator McAdoo. What ratio would you say was reasonable to make the currency a sound currency?

Mr. ALDRICH. The present ratio provided is 40 percent, is it not?

Senator McAdoo. Yes. Do you think a currency based on 40 percent would be sound?

Mr. ALDRICH. Of course, it was not based on 40 percent of gold alone; it was based on 40 percent of gold plus certain certificates.

Senator McAdoo. I am talking about a currency based on gold, now. Take United States notes. We have about three hundred and forty-seven millions of outstanding notes and we have a little over 40 percent back of them. Do you consider that sound currency?

Mr. ALDRICH. I would think so; yes. Of course, I do not pretend to be an expert on the amount of gold backing that is necessary behind currency. I suppose, in theory, the purpose of setting 40-percent reserve is that in ordinary times that would be sufficient. At the present time, of course, it has no effect at all except for providing a theoretical limit to control the amount of currency in actual circulation.

Senator McAdoo. Yes; but I am disregarding that and asking you the question as to whether or not you regard a currency as sound that is backed by 40-percent gold reserve.

Mr. ALDRICH. If I had to answer that question with the small knowledge that I have—and I do not pretend to be an expert on the subject—I would say, yes.

Senator GLASS. If there is nothing else?

Mr. ALDRICH. Provided you had the other assets you have in the system as provided for.

Senator McAdoo. I am not speaking of the Federal Reserve System. We will take, for instance, United States notes which are backed by a little more than 40 percent of gold reserve. They once had no gold reserve, and we put 40 percent of gold back of them, or 44 percent. Is it not axiomatic that a gold reserve of 40 percent back of currency establishes it as sound money?

Mr. ALDRICH. I should say that that was so, although, as I have said, I do not pretend to be an expert on the subject.

Senator COUZENS. Is the Senator trying to get an answer from Mr. Aldrich as to the difference in value of those United States notes and Patman notes?

Senator McAdoo. No. I was just trying to find out what bankers regard as necessary, in the way of a gold reserve back of currency, to establish sound currency.

Mr. ALDRICH. I really ought not to try to answer the question, Senator, because I have not given it any serious consideration.

Senator McAdoo. Is it not axiomatic among bankers that 40 percent of gold is an adequate reserve, regardless of anything else?

Mr. ALDRICH. That would be my own impression.

Senator GLASS. That was not the view of bankers in 1913 when we adopted the Federal Reserve Act, because we put 60 percent of commercial paper behind the 40-percent gold reserve.

Senator McAdoo. One hundred percent of commercial paper.

Mr. ALDRICH. I may have misunderstood Senator McAdoo's question; but this act as it stands provides for 40-percent gold backing plus this other security.

Senator McAdoo. I understand that. I was just trying to develop what is, I think, the accepted axiom among bankers, that a 40-percent gold reserve back of currency is an adequate reserve to establish sound money.

Senator GLASS. We have not got any now.

Senator COUZENS. You mean, 40 percent of gold, not—

Senator McAdoo. Yes; 40 percent of gold back of currency is generally accepted as creating sound money.

Senator COUZENS. You would want something else besides that.

Senator McAdoo. Not necessarily. In the Federal Reserve Act we did, in the beginning, have a hundred percent, as I recall it.

Senator GLASS. At first, and then it was reduced to 60 percent.

Senator McAdoo. I mean, 100-percent commercial paper and a 40-percent gold reserve. And we had no currency before that time that was anything like so well secured as that. We had never had in the history of our country.

Senator COUZENS. Would you think that currency supported by 40-percent gold alone and without anything else would be adequate to establish a sound currency?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know of any such provision; I should not think it would be.

Senator McAdoo. It depends on whose currency it is, does it not?

Mr. ALDRICH. That may be.

Mr. Joseph H. Frost, of San Antonio, member of the Federal Reserve Advisory Council for the eleventh Federal Reserve district, testified as follows:

Senator McAdoo. Mr. Frost, I want to ask you about the provision in section 208, beginning at line 22—

Mr. Frost. Is that the Senate bill?

Senator McAdoo. That is the House bill, page 53 [reading]:

"Every Federal Reserve bank shall maintain reserves in lawful money (other than Federal Reserve notes or Federal Reserve bank notes) of not less than 35 percent against its deposits and reserves in gold certificates of not less than 40 percent against its Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation."

Do you think, in the present state of our finances, that that is an adequate reserve?

Mr. Frost. The question of a reserve against deposits and note issues is not really the important point, to my mind. The important point is what the entire security behind your note issue or your deposits may be.

Senator McAdoo. You always regard a certain amount of reserve as being of fundamental importance?

Mr. Frost. A certain amount of reserve is necessary; but it is not the important point as to whether currency or deposits are safe.

Senator McAdoo. No; it is not, of course. But let us restrict it to note issues. Do you think a 40-percent gold reserve and gold certificates we now issue are a sufficient reserve in gold?

Mr. Frost. Without any other security?

Senator McAdoo. I am talking merely of the reserve required in coin against note issues.

Mr. Frost. I would not consider, Senator, that a note issue is safe with 40 percent in gold behind it, unless there was something else behind it for the 60 percent.

Senator McAdoo. What is behind the other 60 percent? First of all, it is the credit of the United States, is it not?

Mr. Frost. Yes, sir.

Senator McAdoo. Nothing else?

Mr. Frost. I do not consider that enough.

Senator McAdoo. You do not consider that enough. The Government, of course, is primarily liable?

Mr. Frost. I think the Federal Reserve bank is primarily liable.

Senator McAdoo. All Federal Reserve notes run in the name of the Government of the United States.

Mr. Frost. The Government agrees to pay.

Senator McAdoo. The Government of the United States agrees to pay on demand. The Government has recourse, of course, on the banks, but the people look to the Government for those notes. They accept them at full faith and credit because the Government of the United States is issuing them. All of our money is issued by the United States Government; but, in view of the changed or altered condition of the currency since all the gold has been taken by the Government, I am wondering if you think that this kind of a reserve, plus the Government's credit for the remaining 60 percent, constitutes a good note?

Mr. Frost. No, sir; I do not think so.

Senator McAdoo. What would you consider a good note?

Mr. Frost. I would consider a note good when it is secured by either 100 percent of gold or any percent of gold not below 40 percent, plus self-liquidating assets up to the 100 percent.

Senator McAdoo. Suppose you have 40-percent gold and the Government has recourse on the banks for the remainder, then what do you think of it?

Mr. Frost. The recourse on the banks would only be good if the assets of the banks were invested in self-liquidating assets. If they are invested in Government bonds they have got recourse on the banks, but you have 60-percent fiat currency under that plan.

Senator McAdoo. You are up against that situation always, so far as our currency is concerned. Sixty percent of it has primarily Government responsibility.

Mr. Frost. No, sir; I do not agree with that.

Senator McAdoo. Why do you not agree with it?

Mr. Frost. Because, under the original Federal Reserve Act, you could not put up Government bonds as security. Your currency or Federal Reserve notes had 40-percent gold at least, and the balance in self-liquidating assets. So that your currency was 100 percent secured, part by gold and part by self-liquidating assets that were in no way dependent on the promise of the Government.

Senator McAdoo. On the contrary, you could not collect that note from the Federal Reserve bank; you had to collect it from the Government, and the Government had recourse on the banks.

But the point I am trying to bring out is that having a note with 40 percent of gold back of it and a responsible government for the other 60 percent, and that government in turn having recourse on the banks for the remaining 60 percent, I want to know if you think that is a good note?

Mr. Frost. I do not think it is safe currency.

Senator McAdoo. Do you think a national-bank note is safe?

Mr. Frost. I think a national-bank note is safe, for the reason that there are so few of them in comparison with the volume of currency in the country, and I think absolutely they are not sound.

Senator McAdoo. They have been sound for nearly 70 years, or something like that. They pass current.

Mr. Frost. They pass; yes.

Senator McAdoo. Is not any note good which the people are willing to accept at par in full payment for commodities or services or as legal tender for debts, public and private, or for taxes?

Mr. Frost. No, sir; I do not think so. You might just as well say that if a man can borrow money from a bank, is he not good for it? He may be and he may not be.

Senator McAdoo. You think a sound currency, then, is sound only if you have 100-percent gold back of it, or 40 percent of gold and some self-liquidating assets of a bank?

Mr. Frost. Yes.

Senator McAdoo. And you do not think that the Government of the United States back of a note adds anything to it?

Mr. Frost. I would not say it does not add anything to it, but I say it is fiat currency to that extent.

Senator McAdoo. It would be fiat currency of a bank, in a way, because you would have to depend upon the resources of the maker of the note.

Mr. Frost. It is fiat currency of a bank to the extent of 60 percent of it, but it has self-liquidating security behind it, and the Government only has its taxing power.

Senator McAdoo. Do you not think the taxing power of the United States is worth more than the assets of any bank?

Mr. Frost. No; not when they have continued deficits.

Howard A. Loeb, vice president of the Federal Reserve Advisory Council, representing the third Federal Reserve district, and chairman of the Tradesmen's National Bank & Trust Co. at Philadelphia, testified before the subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, May 20, 1935, as follows:

Senator McAdoo. You are addressing yourself to the subject of inflation now, and I am a little curious to know what you call inflation. I have asked a number of witnesses here to tell me what inflation is and I have not yet received a definition. Maybe you can give me one. Take the situation in the country today: When you talk about inflation you usually mean the amount of currency in circulation. We have $4,300,000,000 of currency, approximately, in circulation. Do you consider that inflation or do you consider that exactly right?

Mr. Loeb. I think that the mere setting of a figure is not the sole definition. Under an act which is construed by the people to be inflationary, you might have two things occur; you might get a withdrawal of gold or you might get a hoarding.

Senator McAdoo. How could you get any hoarding or withdrawal of gold now?

Mr. Loeb. You can get a withdrawal of foreign gold, I presume, through trade. Any laws that were enacted would react again on our industrial situation.

Senator McAdoo. You are engaging there in a wide field of speculation, and you have no definite factor to determine it by. The average man who discusses inflation relates it to the amount of currency in circulation. That is the popular conception of it. Do you think $4,300,000,000 as a circulating medium, considering the conditions in the country today, is inflation of the currency?

Mr. Loeb. No; I do not think so.

Senator McAdoo. What would you think would be the proper line? You have got to have scratch somewhere.

Mr. Loeb. Yes. It is not scientifically determinable; it is not a definitely determinable limit. Too many things are tied up in it.

Senator McAdoo. You cannot define it? That is the size of it?

Mr. Loeb. No. I do not think you can define it. You are talking only of one type of inflation.

Senator McAdoo. Everything that comes up is denounced as inflationary. I remember when the Federal Reserve Act was passed—and it has been a law for 20 years—the denunciation of the currency as fiat money, greenbacks, which was going to destroy the credit of the Government. Some of the most eminent men in the Senate denounced it, and the most eminent bankers of the country denounced it. The point I am making is that it is all just a matter of conjecture, of speculation.

Mr. Loeb. By that very token, as it impinges upon the opinion of the masses, it may develop into an inflation.

Senator McAdoo. How can you tell what the opinion of the masses is?

Mr. Loeb. You can tell, I suppose, by their attitude to investment in Government bonds, and hoarding, and the attitude of other nations.

Senator McAdoo. Would you think, Mr. Loeb, that $347,000,000 of greenbacks, so called, which are United States notes, circulating notes, against which there is a 40-percent gold reserve, would be fiat money?

Mr. Loeb. May I have that question again, Senator?

Senator McAdoo. We have outstanding $347,000,000 of money in United States notes, commonly called "greenbacks." Against them we have a gold reserve of about 40 percent. Do you consider those notes fiat money?

Mr. Loeb. No; I do not, because it has been tolerated. But you may get to a point where it will not be tolerated. I think, in other words, that you could go indefinitely, by the same argument, and add a billion here or two billion there and gradually build it up. I think it depends on what occurs or how these things impinge not only upon the investing public but upon their notions. I think it will come back. You may have your gold coverage, but that does not say it is going to remain with you. By the very act of creating these currency issues based on that gold, you may lose it.

Senator McAdoo. Has it not usually been considered an axiom among bankers that if you limit the currency to an amount which is covered by a gold reserve of 40 percent you have sound currency? That is usually what they have contended for. We carried that in the Federal Reserve Act. It is true we put there also 60 percent of commercial paper to represent the remaining 60 percent, but it is primarily a Government note. It is not a bank note. The Government has recourse on the banks, if necessary for that 60 percent. But we had 40-percent gold against these greenbacks—

Senator Glass. You have no reserve at all now.

Senator McAdoo. According to the daily Treasury statement, we have. The 60-percent fiat either had to be bank fiat or Government fiat. The Government's responsibility for 60-percent fiat was greater than that of any bank's responsibility for 60-percent fiat.

Mr. Loeb. I think that the practice or the custom or the tradition, if you want to call it that, of coverage of our circulation has a vast effect. I can easily conceive of the Government going on a wild orgy or continuing on an unbalanced Budget program for a long time and thus affecting the value of its currency.

Senator McAdoo. I agree that if the Government were to issue Treasury notes to pay running expenses of the Government it would be absolutely vicious and absolutely indefensible. I would not stand for that a moment. But I am not going into such an extreme case.

Mr. Loeb. If you were going to be around, perhaps, Senator, it would be all right; but we are setting up here—

Senator McAdoo. With a 40-percent gold reserve, every banker that I have ever known until recently has not hesitated to say he considered it the basis for a sound currency issue.

Mr. Loeb. You will have realized by this time, Senator, that I am not an economist.

Senator McAdoo. They all give me that excuse.

Mr. Loeb. Well, I am not, and I do approach it with a great amount of hesitation. I should like to discuss it with you some day.

Senator McAdoo. I should like to discuss it now.

Mr. Loeb. I want to think about it.

Senator McAdoo. The point that I want to bring out is that when you talk about inflation, it is just about every man's opinion, except that there are a few fundamental things. It is conjectural whether or not a certain amount of currency issued is going to be regarded as inflationary or is inflationary in fact. I have not found anybody who was willing to give any definition that would convey any idea of certainty.

Mr. Loeb. I do not want to "pass the buck", so to speak, but I think another member of our council will perhaps be able much more intelligently to discuss what apparently is in your mind, Senator.

Senator McAdoo. I would like to see him. I want to meet him.

It will be observed from the testimony of these eminent bankers that they have varying views about inflation and as to what constitutes sound money. If the bankers and economists cannot agree, how can a poor layman be expected to have any definite ideas on the subject?

The cry of inflation cannot be raised successfully against the issuance of $2,200,000,000 under the Patman bill.

I have previously stated on this floor that the issuance of this currency was, in my judgment, absolutely sound. It is backed by adequate gold in the Treasury and made as secure as any Government bond by the good faith and honor of the American people. If this currency is printing-press money, then every dollar in circulation today is printing-press money; and every bond issued by the United States is a printing-press bond.

The cry of inflation is always raised against any financing which does not conform to the dogmatic views of so-called "experts in finance." They thundered such charges against the Federal Reserve notes when the Federal Reserve Act was before the Congress in 1913.

I regard Elihu Root as one of the great minds of America. I have always had profound respect and admiration for him. Undoubtedly he was one of the ablest men in the Senate in 1913, and yet even he was opposed to the Federal Reserve Act, and argued with great force and vigor against the provisions which authorized the issuance of Federal Reserve notes as obligations of the United States. I quote a few passages from a speech made by Senator Root, December 13, 1913:

That is to my view a plain, simple enlargement of the national currency of the United States. It is authority for the increase, practically, of what we call greenbacks. The notes will be obligations of the Government of the United States pure and simple. They are not credits of anybody else; they are credits of the Government of the United States. While technically they are not money but are promises of the United States to pay. I shall speak of them as money, just as we speak of our greenbacks as money, because in the ordinary colloquial use of words that description is best understood.

In another point in his address, Mr. Root said:

Now, behind the system under which we are working, and under which we have grown so great and strong, stands always the Government of the United States, with its credit unimpaired, with its solvency undoubted, always ready to come to the rescue by the sale of its securities to bring gold. This bill proposes, however, to put in pawn the credit of the United States; and when your time of need comes it is the United States that is discredited by the inflation of its demand obligations which it cannot pay.

I say that this bill presents the financial heresy twice repudiated by the people of the United States. I say that the central reserve board appointed under this bill will have to represent that very heresy. If this bill passes as it stands, America stands to lose all we saved when Grant vetoed the inflation bill; all we saved when Grover Cleveland abolished the silver purchase; all we saved when we elected McKinley; all the Republicans, all the gold Democrats saved when they helped in the repudiation of the vital principle which has been put into this bill.

Mr. Root's dire prophecies of the evils of inflation and of the perils to the credit of the United States, which he asserted were inherent in the Federal Reserve Act, have since proved to be groundless. The greatest war in the history of the world, involving finally the United States itself, was fought after Mr. Root made this speech, and yet our financial structure was so strong, and the Federal credit was so great, that we were able to finance our part in the war and to lend billions of dollars to the Allied Powers who were associated with us in the war.

Federal Reserve notes are issued by the Government and not by the Federal Reserve banks. They are payable by the Government on demand, and the people look to the Government for payment. There is no gold reserve back of them today, or back of any Government money, and yet it passes current at par throughout the country. Everybody knows that this currency is sound and acceptable to the people.

Issues of currency, if the Patman bill is enacted into law, will be equally sound and satisfactory to the people.

Personally, I would have preferred to incorporate a provision in the Patman bill for an annual sinking fund to retire this currency over a reasonable period of years, but, for technical reasons, that could not be done. Such a sinking fund can be provided by additional legislation if the veto is not sustained.

It is my firm belief that the payment of the adjusted-service certificates through an issue of Treasury notes will contribute to the economic welfare of the Nation, and that there is no danger to the national credit if the Patman bill becomes law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into, the time of the Senator from California has expired.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, may I have unanimous consent for 5 additional minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I regret very much to object, but under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into, allotting not more than 30 minutes to each Senator, I shall have to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, my views on the pending question can be briefly stated.

That the payment to the veterans of the amount of their adjusted-service certificates now, instead of in 1945, will be helpful to many of them, is self-evident. Every argument of a sympathetic nature supports payment at the present time. Every generous impulse impels a vote to authorize present payment, and it would be pleasing to yield to this impulse. But there are other impelling and irrefutable reasons with respect to the bill now before us that would lead me to take a position incompatible with my sympathies, and prompted wholly by what seems to be my duty to my country.

I regard it as exceedingly unfortunate that the present bill combines the question of present cash payment of the veterans' bonus with the question of inflating the currency. Those who vote for the present measure must not only be able to satisfy themselves that the payment now of the face value of the bonus certificates 10 years in advance of their maturity date, is justified and will be beneficial to the veterans and their dependents, and is in the national interest, and will, in fact, speed recovery, but they must also be willing to sanction the issuance of $2,000,000,000 of fiat money, in the face of the declaration of the President that this course invites financial disaster.

In my judgment one man, and only one man is, and should be held, responsible for the present financial policies of our Government. If these policies fail and bring us to national bankruptcy, the President, as the chosen leader of the country in this crisis, will be held responsible. He has accepted that responsibility. If these policies succeed, and economic recovery is achieved and prosperity restored, he will be entitled to the credit. But it is apparent that each policy adopted involves grave risks—the risk that instead of recovery they may bring ultimately a financial crash that will increase unemployment, sharply lower the standards of living, and seriously impair the savings of our people—in a word, lead us to an economic plight the consequences of which no man can foresee.

I know there are those who minimize the possibility of such a condition happening in America. I am well aware that this optimistic tone is popular with large groups. Yet the fact remains that we shall win or lose this fight on our fiscal policies.

For myself, I propose to keep that responsibility in the hands of the present leader of this administration. I do not intend by my vote to transfer that responsibility to the Congress unless and until I am absolutely convinced that the fiscal policies of the administration are ruinous. If such a measure as this and other primary fiscal policies of the administration shall be overridden by the Congress, the President will be absolutely exonerated by the American people from all the ill consequences that may eventuate.

The President asks that we uphold him in this basic fiscal measure, affecting, as it does, the very fundamental concept of our national monetary policy. This does not mean adopting a rubber-stamp attitude. I have differed with the President on some of his economic policies, and I shall continue to do so; but there is a wide and most important distinction between general economic and regulatory measures on the one hand, and fiscal principles of Government finance on the other hand.

Perhaps the President is wrong; time will reveal. The people in due time will have an opportunity to pass judgment on his fiscal policies unless we substitute the fiscal philosophy of the Congress for his.

To my mind, such a course would amount to taking the leadership in this war against the depression out of the hands of the President on a most fundamental policy, a policy upon which success or failure may depend—money, the financial structure of the country, the very basis and foundation upon which we are going to win or lose the fight against the depression. We are dealing with that, not with regulatory measures, not with general economic measures. To take away from a President, who is sincerely trying to win a war against a devastating depression, control over the fiscal policies is like taking away the ammunition of a commander in chief fighting a military war.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I would rather not yield until I finish.

We are dealing with a very fundamental policy of government. The President has to face that, and must be held responsible for his fiscal policies above everything else; yet if this bill should be passed over his veto, he could for the next 16 months absolutely remove himself from all responsibility and go before the people at the next election without being answerable in any degree for whatever may be the future consequences to the country not only as a result of this measure but for whatever may be the consequences as the result of the whole program he has advocated.

Mr. President, I intend that my vote shall continue the responsibility where it now rests that there may be no confusion in the minds of the voters in next year's Presidential election with respect to the question of responsibility.

To argue that the President is swayed in his course by the bankers and financiers of the country is indefensible in view of his record. If the course of the President has not indicated a leadership in the direction of restraining capitalistic interests in this country, of advocating social welfare legislation that has invited the opposition of nearly all the property interests in the country, then I have not comprehended or understood his program. In fact, many Members of this body who are sincere supporters of the President think he has, under present conditions, gone too far in this direction. Many believe he has not visualized clearly the long and steady drain for general relief to all classes in need during the uncertain years ahead.

Mr. President, I early advocated—indeed, I introduced a bill for the purpose before the Adjusted-Service Certificate Act was proposed—the payment of a cash bonus to our veterans. Repeatedly I voted for paying these certificates during the years prior to the depression, when our Federal Treasury was flush with money. Since the crash of 1929, and the economic crisis which ensued, and with tremendous Treasury deficits incident to declining tax revenues and huge outlays for the aid of the victims of the depression, I have uniformly accepted the views of the Treasury and of the President with respect to what our Government could afford and could not afford without impairment of Government credit. I believe it is still too dangerous to depart from this position, at least until we can see the rising sun of prosperity—which, unfortunately, as I look out upon the country, has not risen so high as to give assurance that the clouds of despair and darkness have disappeared.

For these reasons I feel constrained to vote to sustain the President's veto.

Mr. President, let me now summarize what I have attempted to say:

We are going to win or lose the fight against this depression, depending primarily upon the fiscal policy which is pursued by the administration. We are going to fail or succeed, depending upon how much money we spend, what the President's basic fiscal principles are, and whether or not his general economic views are sound and leading in the direction of recovery. The moment Congress, on a basic fiscal principle, takes the responsibility away from the President, the country has no one to hold responsible for leadership in the work which is before us to restore prosperity to our country. Indeed, the country will be denied any definite, concrete, and understandable issue in the next election.

Mr. President, the President is willing to accept that responsibility. He has accepted it; and though I will differ with him and have differed with him on general policies relating to the regulation of the agencies of government, while I have differed with him on some of his general economic policies, I, for one, refuse to transfer the responsibility of our monetary system from him until I am convinced we are not moving forward. I think we owe it to the American people who elected him, we owe it to the American people who will decide who the next President shall be, to enable them to determine who is responsible for failure to get us out of this depression, or who is entitled to the credit for honest efforts to lead us out of the depression.

For these reasons, Mr. President, on a basic fiscal principle I propose to stand by the leadership that the people have given us; and I refuse to depart from that leadership on a vital issue of this character, with the result that the country may not know whom to blame and where to place the blame.

It has been said again and again that this is a war against depression, against hunger, misery, suffering, against unemployment, against business stagnation, against need and want on the part of thousands and millions of human beings, including veterans and nonveterans. The President is the Commander in Chief, chosen and delegated as such.

His chief munition, his only munition, his only fundamental power is the monetary system of the Government. Undermine that, destroy that, ruin that, and how can we turn to him, or how can the American people turn to him and expect salvation and expect a restoration of prosperity? Not only that, but by such a course we should give the American people no opportunity to place the blame or to reward the leadership that may have brought success and triumph.

I inquire, has there been a general restoration of business? Has there been a certain recovery from the depression? Have the bread lines been so materially reduced that the sun of prosperity is rising high in the skies? I fail to see it. God only knows the years that we may be obliged to continue to spend, not $2,000,000,000 for veterans, but four and five billion dollars yearly for young and old, weak and strong, men and women of every class of society including veterans looking to their Government for the bare necessities of life. Destroy the monetary policy of their leader and where will they look and what can we give them as they cry out for aid and assistance? Those who believe his fiscal policies are unsound, of course, may very properly now substitute a new policy. But those who do it, thereby relieve the President from responsibility.

Mr. President, I have tried to differentiate between the ordinary and general legislation which has come before us and special monetary legislation. I have tried to invite attention to what is in my mind the very basic principle, the very foundation upon which every effort toward recovery must be predicated and because this measure, in the mind of the President—and I am not convinced that he is wrong—is detrimental, is harmful, is impairing to his leadership in this great fight, I propose for the present to stand by him. If he fails he will have to answer when the time comes to make answer. If he succeeds, he will receive the reward to which all faithful public servants are entitled.

I refuse to give him an alibi, and an alibi it will be, whatever happens, if we thrust on him a fiscal policy which he himself says will tie his hands and will be injurious to the country.

The Presidential election will be 16 months from now. Let him go before the country with his own fiscal policy, not with a policy for which he is not responsible, not with a policy the Congress has thrust upon him.

Because I believe in following the leadership, in basic, fundamental, financial policies, of the man whom the American people have chosen to fight this war, I do not propose to turn my back upon him in this crisis or tie his hands or impair his forward step. Therefore, I intend to vote to sustain the veto.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I did not intend to address myself to this subject, but, naturally, in the course of debate expressions are made, and when they come from responsible sources one must think and perchance think out loud.

This Government was created as a tripartite government. The responsibility was placed upon the shoulders of each of the three branches of the Government with equal force and to an equal extent.

To say that I pass on to another branch of the Government a burden that is mine is to my mind to say that I relinquish and surrender everything that I assumed when I took the oath of office to become a Member of this body. I cannot go along with that train of thought, but I believe in the organic law first of all, and, believing in the organic law, I will join my judgment, limited though it may be, with the judgment of the Executive, and when he is wrong try to guide him as best I may.

Secondly, I do not propose to say that in guiding him I am going to guide him into a place where he must take the blame which I shirk. I do not propose to put him in a position where it can be said, "The Congress refused to take the responsibility and therefore the candidate of the Democratic Party next coming up must take all of that responsibility." The responsibility is mine just as it is that of every other Senator here, and especially of those who, belonging to the majority party, follow the leadership of the President.

Mr. President, it is our duty, under our oaths, to take our share of the burden, to go before the people, and if we are wrong let the people say so. It is no great sin to go back into private life. I do not know that it would be any less of a burden to go back into private life than it would be to say that I would rather have the Executive take the burden, because by taking the burden he will relieve me, and he must take the jolt. I do not subscribe to that particular school of thought.

I believe that this body is a deliberative body. I believe that it is a constitutional body. I believe that it was created to take its place in the Nation's daily work and daily activity. I do not believe that the President is always right, any more than I believe that any other one man in the world is always right, even though he may be as conscientious in his beliefs as I.

I will say for the President of the United States that I believe he is conscientious in his viewpoint, but 95 Members of this body, also conscientious, may express themselves, and I do not propose to surrender the constitutional obligation that is placed upon the shoulders of those who take the oath of office here, and say to the Executive, "You take the jolt. It is yours, and if you make good we will not come back, but if you do not make good we may come back." It is not a question of coming back here; it is a question of doing now what is right. That is the question that is uppermost.

With that in mind, and for only a moment or two, without any desire to discuss this question, but with a desire to express myself along the lines of my view, I may perchance repeat some thoughts which have been expressed on this subject, because there is scarcely a thought that has not been put forth.

Mr. President, if in 1918, when there were 2,000,000 boys across the water ready to die for this country, Congress had been called upon to vote $2,000,000,000 in order to maintain that Army, would we have hesitated, and would we have said then, "There is an inflationary measure involved here"? There is not a man on the floor of the Senate today who would not have voted the appropriation of $2,000,000,000. But the exigency of war has passed, the danger to life and limb of those who were near and dear to us has gone, and 18 years have elapsed. So we are now willing to say that it is a question of how we will raise the money.

We are willing to go off on any angle and say, "This is a justification for my vote", when as a matter of fact there would not have been one moment's hesitancy in voting $2,000,000,000 to provide munitions of war, which would have destroyed the lives of human beings abroad. We would have voted for such an appropriation without a moment's hesitancy. But today we hesitate to give to some poor devil who is supporting dependents, and perhaps standing in the bread line, what we voted was his due some 11 years ago.

We hesitate to say to the soldier who defended democracy when he was called upon to defend democracy, "You may have your just dues", notwithstanding the fact that when the war was over, after the armistice had been signed, we went to every munitions plant in this country, we appointed a commission to investigate what they should be paid in the way of a bonus, we determined their bonus, and did not ask them to take deferred-payment certificates. We paid them in coin of the realm. We paid them in cash.

That is not all. In the message of yesterday, read here, I recall an expression coming from the Executive to the effect—

I am thinking of those who remained here at home who ran our railroads and worked in our munitions plants and in our factories during the war.

Mr. President, it is all right to think of those, but let us not forget that they were receiving then the prevailing and going rate of wage, and there were bonuses paid to those in the ship yards of this country to rush the work through; and let us not forget that we paid bonuses to our mines, and our mills, and our smelters and factories in the country after the war was over. We paid them bonuses a plenty, and we did not hesitate to put out bond issues to pay them.

However, today, standing in bread lines throughout this country there are men who honorably wore the uniform at the time when we called them to defend democracy. Today they are standing here and there looking, praying, asking for the wherewithal to sustain life—not to gain great wealth or to become millionaires—they are asking, they are praying, they are begging for bread—for bread alone. Yet we hesitate to give it to them, although we promised to give it to them, although we told them they could have it, and now in the greatest hour of our emergency, in the greatest hour of our depression, when we can build up the country, when we can distribute $2,200,000,000 into the hands of those who earned it in such a manner as not one of us would wish to earn it today, we hesitate and say, "Pass the buck to the President; let him take the fall", to use the vernacular of the street.

Mr. President, I am willing to take the fall, if fall it be. I am willing to bear my share of the burden here, and there is not a Senator in this body who is not willing to bear his part of the burden; but it should not be said that we are going to shift it over onto the President, and that if 2 years from now his actions should not be approved, why then it is his fault, not ours.

Mr. President, it is the obligation of every man who took the oath of office in the Senate to take his share of this responsibility. Taking his share of the responsibility, let him say to the soldiers of our country, who defended us in an hour when we called them into service, that now we are willing—not to be charitable; I will never put it on that basis, because I think that is the most flimsy excuse in the world—that we are willing to be just, and, being just, we propose to pay an honest obligation which our country entered into; we propose to fulfill a contract to which the greatest Republic in the world became signatory; and we propose, through the soldiers of the past, to say to the soldiers of the future, "The Nation which your forefathers defended was not an ungrateful nation." We propose to say to the soldier of the future that his country was ever mindful of the service rendered by the soldiers of the past, and we propose to say to the millions in our country that this depression, to the extent of paying an honest obligation, shall be terminated.

Mr. NEELY obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

There is a tide in the affairs of an administration
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of its life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.

This day—aye, this very hour—those on this side of the aisle, who are a part of this administration, are confronted with a momentous tide which multitudes of editorial writers, hosts of veterans, and millions of common people are praying us not to omit, but to take at the flood and discharge the honest debt we owe our World War veterans, many of whom are as poor as Lazarus, but all of whom are in character and patriotism still as superb and grand as the boys in blue who marched with Sheridan at Winchester; as the boys in gray, who stood with Stonewall Jackson at the first battle of Manassas.

Eighteen years ago this country entered the most colossal, the most brutal, the most deadly war of all the ages. Overnight it became necessary for this Government to raise an army of 4,000,000 men, to fight, to suffer, and to sacrifice, not on their own soil, not in their own country, but in strange lands, among strange people, more than 3,000 miles from Columbia's nearest shore.

Those who composed the vast Army of this country in that devastating war were not volunteers. They were conscripted soldiers. They were deprived of the liberty of deciding whether they would stay at home and follow the occupations of peace for compensation greater than the world had ever known before or go to the front to become targets for the machine gunners and fodder for the cannoneers of foes so numerous and deadly that in comparison with them the entire army of Xerxes sinks into the utter insignificance of a corporal's unarmed guard.

If our soldiers had been given the chance, practically all of them would have volunteered. But their only choice was that of going to war or going to jail and lasting shame.

These soldiers who now seek from their Government reasonable compensation for their matchless service had neither voice nor vote in the determination of the period of their conscription, their hours of duty, their living conditions, or their remuneration.

"Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight", to the breathless days and the sleepless nights that followed this country's entry into the World War.

Once more we see 4,000,000 of America's best and bravest sons—in the very morning time of life, when every prospect was pleasing; when every door in the world of infinite opportunity was open wide to receive them; when every breeze was bringing them promises of future glory—lay their last hope and their last ambition upon the altar of their country and, leaving the rich treasures of heart and home behind them, enter the welter of war to fight, to sacrifice, and, if need be, to die for their native land.

Then these boys were crowded into camouflaged ships and transported over 3,000 miles of submarine-infested ocean to France, which had not then disgraced herself by repudiating her war debt to this Republic. Behold 2,000,000 of these American boys in that distant land, where we had sent them to pay a debt of gratitude which we had owed the French people ever since Rochambeau held up the hands of George Washington at Yorktown and Lafayette fought for American independence at Brandywine. How grandly those American soldiers maintained the honor of their Nation and lived up to the brightest and best traditions of their native land. In France, the boasted land of chivalry and beauty, through countless lines of battle; with machine guns and cannon in front of them; with asphyxiating gases enveloping them; with the air filled with death-dealing craft above them; with the earth filled with exploding mines beneath them; through all these hellish horrors these American soldiers proudly and triumphantly carried the flag of this Republic—the flag that has never known a failure or suffered a defeat; the flag that makes tyranny tremble and freedom rejoice; the flag which this Government has never yet permitted dishonor to pollute, ingratitude to soil, nor injustice to stain—that is the flag that these American soldiers carried through plundered cities, past desecrated temples, by ruined cathedrals, over blood-soaked fields of battle, through prostrate Belgium to the heights of Ehrenbreitstein, the greatest of German fortifications, from which it floated out upon the breeze and proclaimed to all the children of men that the wicked World War had been won by the American soldiers and the soldiers of our Allies, and that the banner which had waved over democracy's cradle at last waved over autocracy's grave.

Almost a hundred thousand of our soldiers went to the sleep that knows no waking beneath the poppies of Flanders and the lilies of France. God grant that their immortal spirits are at this hour walking the streets of Paradise that are paved with stars; that they are enjoying the peace that passeth all understanding, and that they are blessed with bliss that will endure forever.

Soon after the signing of the Armistice the surviving American soldier boys came home. They were welcomed and reviewed by the highest officials of the Nation, the States, and the municipalities. While the bands were playing, and the flags were fluttering, and the banners were streaming, our soldiers were assured from the rostrums of a thousand auditoriums that this Nation would generously compensate them for the burdens they had borne, the hardships they had endured, and the losses they had sustained. They were further assured that every soldier would be restored to the employment and the wages which he had sacrificed when he went to war at a dollar a day for service at home and a dollar and twenty-five cents a day for service abroad beyond the sea.

The veterans accepted the promises that were made them, and with sublime optimism and unsurpassed courage they promptly began to ask for the places they had filled and the salaries or wages they had received immediately before they were sent to war. But to their heartbreaking amazement hundreds of thousands of them learned by the bitterest experience that when they asked for bread, they received a stone; when they asked for a fish, they received a serpent; when they begged for a job, they received the melancholy response that they could not be employed.

The distress of the veterans progressively and persistently increased, and finally became so manifest and acute that in the year 1924 the Congress—whose Members were then receiving more than $20 a day for their peace-time service—decided that the compensation of a dollar a day which we had paid the soldiers for their service at home and the dollar and twenty-five cents a day which we had paid those who fought on foreign fields was wholly inadequate, and that the Government owed and should pay to the former an additional dollar a day and to the latter an additional dollar and twenty-five cents a day.

But in spite of the fact that the service for which the additional payment was provided had been completed in the year 1918, and in spite of the fact that the debt which the Congress acknowledged had obviously become due and payable in full not later than the day on which the soldier had been discharged from the service, the Congress specified that the additional payments should not be made until 1945—27 years after the war had ended. The bill which authorized the payment of this additional meager compensation to the veterans was vetoed by Mr. Coolidge, who, although he was then receiving $205 a day for his peacetime service as President in the cloistered security of the White House, decided, in effect, that a dollar and twenty-five cents a day was as much as an American soldier could earn by fighting his country's battles in trenches that were alive with all the loathsome things that creep and all the slimy things that crawl.

Consequently, Mr. Coolidge vetoed the veterans so-called "adjusted compensation bill" and Congress passed it over his veto. During the 11 years that have intervened since the Compensation Act was passed, this country has suffered a financial, industrial, and economic depression, the severity of which is without a parallel in the history of civilization. During this depression hundreds of thousands of the veterans who received adjusted-service certificates have, through no fault of their own, been forced to the humiliating extremity of begging their bread or starving to death.

If the Senate, by a two-thirds majority, passes the bill which is now before it, $2,200,000,000 in paper money will be distributed among 3,527,528 World War veterans who hold adjusted-service certificates. And when this payment shall have been made, the highest rate of compensation that any private soldier will have received for fighting will be $2.50 a day, and the highest rate that will be paid any soldier who did not see service abroad will be $2 a day.

The present compensation of Members of the Senate for their public service is at the rate of more than $27 a day. In the circumstances, who is the Senator that can ever again look a World War veteran in the face if he says by his vote on the veto that $2.50 a day is too much to pay an American soldier for fighting his country's battles amid horrors such as were never delineated by Milton, never described by Dante, never painted by Dore?

The method of payment which is provided in the bill will impose no additional burden upon the Treasury. The entire debt to the veterans will be paid with what has been contemptuously called "printing-press money", which is, nevertheless, the identical kind of money with which every business enterprise and every business transaction in the Nation is financed.

In an effort to obtain up-to-the-minute information concerning the Government's ability to pay the soldiers' certificates in full with paper money, this morning, at my request, my secretary propounded pertinent inquiries to an official of the Treasury which brought forth the following:

On the 30th day of April 1935, the contents of the Treasury were as follows:

Gold.....	$8,708,833,987
Silver dollars.....	511,043,758
Silver bullion.....	295,401,792
Total.....	9,515,279,537

The grand total of this Nation's outstanding paper money of every kind on the 30th day of April was $5,477,736,103. Consequently, on the date last mentioned there was in the Treasury a gold and silver reserve of $4,037,543,434 in excess of all our paper money.

Ever since the passage of the Federal Reserve Law in 1913, the financiers of this country have considered that paper money was secure if it were fortified with a gold reserve of 40 percent. But if we issue an additional $2,200,000,000 in paper money with which to discharge the debt we owe the World War veterans, there will still be not only a 40-percent gold reserve in the Treasury to secure all outstanding paper money, but a reserve of more than $1,031,000,000 in gold against which there will not be a single outstanding paper dollar. And in addition to all this, a reserve of silver dollars and bullion will still remain in the Treasury, the value of which will exceed $800,000,000.

The fallacious argument that the issuance of less than $7,700,000,000 worth of paper money against a gold and silver reserve of more than $9,515,000,000 will constitute unrestrained and disastrous inflation is an insult to the understanding of any school child who knows his A B C's. More insulting still is the argument to the effect that for us to print enough paper money to pay our debt to the veterans will be to emulate the financial nonsense of Germany and Russia which was manifested by such wild inflationary action that a wagon load of paper money would not buy a loaf of bread. Of course, everyone who has taken the pains to acquire even the slightest information on the subject knows that in neither Germany nor Russia during their disastrous inflationary periods was the worthless paper money fortified with a single scintilla of silver or gold.

Earlier in the day the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] said, in effect, "Why does not someone tell us how much currency we can issue without having inflation, and how much currency we can have without making it unsound?"

Mr. President, I do not know the precise amount of paper money this Government can safely issue. But I do know that so long as the average interest rate throughout the country on loans of $300 or less is 36 percent a year we are not suffering from a superfluity of money, and I think I also know that it would be as impossible for the Government to effect injurious inflation by issuing a paper dollar against every gold dollar of reserve in the Treasury as it would be to wreck the Ship of State on Plymouth Rock.

The country needs the additional circulation of money proposed in the bill. Its passage of this measure will mean an immediate increase in the market value of every farm and every farm product in the United States. It will mean the instant and substantial stimulation of every legitimate business in the land. It will mean the immediate payment in full of an honest debt that the Nation has owed its honest, patient, deserving debtors for 17 years. It will mean the prompt alleviation of the unspeakable financial distress that is compelling hundreds of thousands of our veterans to live upon the crumbs that fall from Charity's table.

Senators, many of the veterans whose case we are about to decide fought innumerable battles for you and for me. Let us pay them a small part of the debt of gratitude we owe them by casting a single vote in their favor this afternoon.

Let me suggest by way of preparation for the discharge of the patriotic and humanitarian duty which we are about to perform that every member of the Senate adopt as his slogan for the remainder of the day Whittier's immortal lines:

While there's a grief to need redress,
A balance to adjust;
Where weighs our living manhood less
Than Mammon's vilest dust,
While there's a right to need my vote,
A wrong to sweep away,
Up! clouted knee and ragged coat,
A man's a man today!

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have no fault to find with any Member of the Senate who may differ from me on this question or any other question. I have not the slightest doubt that every Senator here, as he casts his vote today, whether for overriding the President's veto or for sustaining it, will be voting his convictions.

I do not know that I can wholly agree with the view expressed by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], when he said that no question about "coming back here" is involved in this matter. I am willing to concede that, however. I have not the slightest idea that any Senator, in casting his vote either pro or con on this question, does so with the thought of its effect on his "coming back here." I am not unmindful of the fact that the vote I am about to cast, so far as the ex-service man is concerned, will not be a popular vote.

I have tried in this body, and I hope to continue so long as I am in this body, not to measure my actions here from a political standpoint. Perhaps the easy way, the course of least resistance, would be to vote to override the President's veto. Somehow or other, however, I am not built that way. I have made no promises to my constituents, as some Senators have to theirs, whether they be ex-service men or otherwise, that they were for the Patman bill or the Vinson bill or what not.

But, Mr. President, simply because one of us may vote to override the President's veto, and others of us may vote to sustain the President's position, which is the position some of us adopted heretofore, there is no reason for one of either group to say that the other or any part of the other group is less patriotic than all of us. I know, from my long experience here and my observation of every Senator, whether one is a Republican or a Democrat, that every Senator is prompted by the highest motives and a desire to deal with the ex-service man in a fair and an honorable and a patriotic way. There is no difference of opinion as to the high patriotic and incomparable service the American soldier played in the great World War.

I have no desire to delay this vote, but before it is taken I do wish to give a little of the history of this legislation and the reasons behind it.

I cannot hope to measure up to, and I shall not attempt to match, the eloquence of the speakers who have preceded me in arguing to override the President's veto.

We listened to the very splendid speech, an oratorical masterpiece, by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. He always makes that kind of a speech; and as I listened to him I was hopeful that something might drop from his lips as fine and as eloquent as the quotation of the President yesterday in his veto message to the Congress of the United States. There was no part of the President's speech, I may say, masterful as it was, and unanswerable as it has proven to be, quite so good as when he quoted the Senator from Idaho. This quotation was from speeches the Senator had made against the bonus in the Senate in prior years.

I listened with the closest attention to my distinguished friend from California [Mr. McAdoo], whom it has been a delight to follow, and whom I have followed, because there have been few men in the public life of the Nation who have impressed themselves upon history as has my friend the Senator from California. For 35 ballots and more at New York I followed his banner to nominate him as our party's nominee for President of the United States; and I remember, as a humble Member of Congress, when he was Secretary of the Treasury, how I was delighted to follow his beck and call, even going out into the far-away hustings and into nooks and corners in order to get people to buy the bonds he was trying to sell to the country at that time. He did a great job. He put over the first and the second and the third and the fourth Liberty loans, and none in that responsible place could have performed his task better. During all those days, however, when history was in the making, I never heard a suggestion from the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury that instead of selling bonds we ought to issue greenback notes.

My distinguished friend from California got a little bit confused in some of the figures he quoted to the Senate, and I do not wish the Senate to be misled. I am sure he was quite in error. I remember that when the Patman bill was before the Senate, just before the vote, he made a masterful speech, one that swayed the Senate, and accomplished putting over the Patman bill; but in his figures today, when he talked about the war-risk insurance, he told us that its cost per month was $6.60 a thousand. The fact of the matter is that its monthly cost was 66 cents a thousand, and the monthly cost for a $10,000 policy was $6.60.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. I know the Senator's statement was merely an error.

Mr. McADOO. It was a clerical error, and I shall of course correct it in my manuscript.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; but the Senator has such a persuasive way, and has such a dominating influence over the Senate, that I was fearful even that remark might mislead some Senator in his vote on this important question.

Then the Senator from California was talking about the $36 per month that he said a soldier serving overseas received during the war days. He did not receive $36 per month. He received only $33 per month, 10 percent more than the man back here was getting. Then, too, the wife and the children back here did receive $30—$15 out of the pay of the man serving overseas and $15 out of the Treasury of the United States—but each child did not receive just $5 per month, as the Senator stated; and I wish to correct the statement, for it might persuade you wrongfully, or influence you. The first child received $10 per month out of the Treasury; the next child received $7.50 per month out of the Treasury; and any other children received $5 apiece per month out of the Treasury.

I know it is easy to fall into these little errors, but we must keep the record straight in this discussion. When the facts are known, there is no other government comparable to ours in the treatment, care, and pay of our soldiers.

I sympathize with the ex-service man in the position he has taken that he believes the adjusted-service certificates are now due. He cannot be blamed, he should not be blamed, because he has been told by some of the most eloquent of men in this body and in the other body, and by some of the leaders of the ex-service men's organizations, that the money is now due. We listened today to a splendid speech from my friend from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], whom I love. Could anyone blame the most unsuspecting ex-service man sitting in a hall crowded with people, hearing his matchless eloquence as he poured it forth in this Chamber today, for believing that his adjusted-service certificate is now due and that his Government has betrayed him in not paying it at this time? Why, I almost fell under the Senator's spell. He is most persuasive. You know and I know that some leaders have gone forth and have played upon these men, and have told them in their gatherings that the Government was unfair to them, that the adjusted-service certificates were due, and that is why they have been led to make this appeal to the Congress.

I desire to state, in order to keep the RECORD straight, that in 1924, when some of us here were fighting for a cash bonus, fighting for the soldiers, I happened to be a humble member of the Finance Committee. I voted for it in the committee. We brought out a minority report upon the floor of the Senate, and we championed here a cash payment to the ex-service men. We carried it as far as we could; but what was the cash payment which was under consideration at that time? It was $400. That was the amount we were requesting. That was based upon the advice and the suggestions and the approval of the ex-service organizations of the country. We did not arrive at those figures. The representatives of the ex-service organizations suggested them and championed them.

We had made our fight in 1924 to add to the plan that was adopted, the insurance feature a cash bonus option, and it was defeated. But we who were considered friends of the ex-service men at that time, and who fought for them, are now held up to scorn. Men playing upon the veterans are trying to persuade them that the group, of which I am one, who will vote to sustain the President, are not the friends of the ex-service men.

It is a bad day for the United States when groups can control our Government, and it is a bad day for Congress when groups can dictate the policies and actions of Congress. This is not a Government of groups, and men who are supposed to be leaders, especially men in public life, serve the highest purposes of citizenship when they try to lead their fellow citizen whether they belong to a group or not, along the right line. I am not playing my part as a citizen of this country if I try to mislead some fellow citizen, inflame his mind, arouse his passion, and make him hate other men. But that is what some have done in this bonus controversy.

I know that in my own State men who in times past have gone out and battled for me night and day are estranged from me today because they have been led to believe that their certificates are due.

Let me read just briefly from John Thomas Taylor. He is the man who, through the American Legion, has been the spokesman of the ex-service men. He has been here for years as their legislative representative. This is what Mr. Taylor said in 1924:

I think that the bill as framed at the present time makes the cash sufficiently unattractive to induce the men to take the other features.

He said further:

At that time we were very, very careful in our study, and we considered that $1 a day was just about the right amount, because that would give to each man about $400, and we felt that that was about the very lowest sum that would assist this man in properly getting back on his feet.

He said further:

Yes; and I would say, after the men have had pointed out to them the vast advantages of the adjusted-service certificates, the ratio will be about 80 percent for the productive features and 20 percent for the cash option. And to get back to the point—

Said Mr. Taylor, further speaking for the ex-service men—

we decided that $1 a day was the minimum upon which to base this legislation, and that was carefully considered by the first convention, by the second convention, and by the third convention; and at those conventions the delegates for the most part were brand-new men, practically every time.

It was said that $400 was the fair value reached. So it was that we fought for $400. Yet today we are told in this body that those of us who were willing to give to them the $400 which they said was a fair adjustment, with interest at 4 percent compounded since that time, and more in addition to that, are not friends of the ex-service men.

Mr. President, I have never worked harder in my life to get through a piece of legislation than I have worked to compose the differences respecting these adjusted-service certificates. I have conferred with the President about it at least 25 times. I know that my distinguished colleague the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has done as much. Finally we worked out a proposition which, based on the average certificate of $1,000, would have given to it a value of $768, and with the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Texas would have given $800, which is more than the present cash value of the certificates, because we went back to the day of the armistice and added 4-percent compound interest from that date up until 1925. We offered to give them more than we tried to give them back in 1924. No one can contend that the certificates are now due. The $1,000 face value will not under any stretch of the imagination be reached for many years yet.

Where is the argument, where is the fairness, where can be found the reason for criticizing us when we offered to give to these men the present value of the adjusted-service certificates, as it was found correct and just by the organizations themselves, adding compound interest, and then adding more?

Why should the President of the United States, who would approve such a measure, be criticized? I say to those who are enthusiastically trying to override the President's veto that if they will just get together with some of us and with the President of the United States they can get some relief for the ex-service man, and a measure to that end will pass this body. But just so long as men say that it has to be "full payment or nothing", they will have their troubles and their difficulties.

When we brought forward a bill which would have met the approval of the President of the United States, some of us appealed to you to support it and get this question behind us, and let it receive the Presidential approval. But no, you would not do it.

Some of us who thought we knew what the sentiment of the Senate was, said that the President's veto would be sustained. Others said to the representatives of the ex-service organizations and to the country, "Ah, we have the votes. We will override the President's veto."

Thus the battle proceeded, and I suppose it will continue. But since the voters have placed the Democratic Party in control of the Government, and chosen a leader of courage and constructive ability, one whom every Democrat should desire to follow, even though he may be for the Patman bill or the Vinson bill, I do not believe Democrats will be parties, in this day, when they control the Government, to an effort to confuse every legislative proposal that is offered upon the floor of the Senate.

I cannot believe Democrats would be parties to a policy which would mean the presentation of an amendment to the naval-appropriation bill in order to get the approval of this proposition, or run the risk of the Navy getting no appropriation for this year, and follow the same course on other legislative proposals.

How, then, my fellow Democrats, could the country become enthused over keeping us in power, to legislate and do business in a constructive way, if we should follow such tactics as that?

Mr. President, let us proceed. Let those who conscientiously believe that the ex-service men should now get full payment vote to override the Presidential veto. But, for my part, I shall vote to sustain the President of the United States in his veto, and I concede to no one the right to argue that by doing so I indicate that I am less interested in the welfare of the ex-service men than any other American citizen.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this place one or two letters which I have addressed to constituents, a few extracts from editorial comments on the President's veto message, together with a number of quotations from eminent economists and statesmen upon the highly controversial subject of inflation. The Patman bill has thrown the bonus question into the shade and has made inflation the storm center of the pending controversy. Inflation is a perennial apple of discord.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. RAYMOND FIELDS,

Guthrie, Okla.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of late date was received in due course. Let me say with perfect sincerity that it was deeply appreciated. The fact that you are a Republican rather deepened my appreciation. Let me add that no soldier in the State regrets as much as I do the distressing and, if I may say it, unnecessary dilemma which has arisen in Congress concerning the payment of the adjusted-service certificates. It would seem that reasonable men ought to agree on means to effectuate an end concerning which they are in substantial agreement.

I do not underestimate the political reaction and the political consequences. If I were a good politician, I would vote for the Patman bill. I do not know whether any soldier can quite appreciate my feelings when I say that I cannot in good conscience vote for any measure which provides for or permits inflation and also undertakes to embark us upon an experimental scheme of price stabilization. It is my hope that a way can be found out of this predicament, and I am willing to cooperate in good faith toward that consummation. I am enclosing a letter which more fully describes my feelings and my attitude.

Believe me, with best wishes,

Very truly yours,

T. P. GORE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1935.

Commander C. C. HARBESON,

The American Legion, Oklahoma City, Okla.

MY DEAR SIR: I am pleased to acknowledge your very considerate letter of late date. I appreciate the spirit in which it was written and assure you of my desire to find some common ground of action. Of course, I am as anxious as anyone both to serve and to please the ex-service men. I need hardly say I am not blind to consequences—no more than was the veteran who faced the fire of German guns at St. Mihiel and the Argonne Forest. In the face of danger and even of death he felt bound to place his duty above his safety. He set an example which must serve as a beacon to those of us in public life who are obliged at times to choose between duty and safety.

I think that bonus legislation at this session was a practical possibility. I join you in regretting the legislative dilemma in which the measure has been trapped and defeated. It has taken the one course, perhaps the only course, that would have insured defeat. I do not say that this has been engineered.

I have always thought that when practical men agree as to the end they should be able to agree as to the means. I submitted two or three amendments, both in the committee and on the floor, the adoption of any one of which would have made it possible for me to vote for the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates. I still stand ready to vote for such a measure which safeguards and does not jeopardize the general welfare, and I would vote to pass such a measure over the President's veto.

I appreciate your statement that the Legion did not and does not favor inflation per se and did not ask their friends to favor inflation. I endorsed the declaration of the Legion in support of a "sound American dollar." If that principle had been adhered to, we would have escaped this dilemma. As you know, the Patman bill involves two of the most controversial questions in the highly controversial field of monetary science and theory. In the opinion of some it involves inflation or expansion, if you please, fiat money, paper money. It also involves an experiment in respect to price stabilization. Both the proponents and opponents of these theories and experiments are, let us say, sincere, but they are also dogged and dogmatic, if you please. This excludes compromise or reasonable adjustment.

The friends of inflation or expansion say, Give us inflation and we will give you the bonus, but no inflation, no bonus. On the other hand, many sincere friends of the bonus say, Take the bonus but do not make us take inflation, do not make us take price experimentation. Between these extremes the veterans are enflamed on both flanks—I will not say ambushed. There are men who are willing to vote for the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates but who could not in good conscience vote for inflation or fiat money under any circumstances. They would violate their convictions and stultify themselves to do so, and, as they believe, jeopardize the best interests of the country, including the soldiers, and defeat or delay recovery itself. They think that there are only two kinds of inflationary schemes, the kind that has failed and the kind that will fail. They think that all human history and all human experience teaches one lesson and holds out one warning. I have recently been checking and rechecking the history of paper money as far back as the year 809 in the Chinese Empire. It took China 600 years to learn the tragic truth about fiat money. Even China had not dallied with that danger for several centuries until the recent revolution.

It has often been embarked upon as in the present instance with the pledge that it will be managed and kept within a safety zone. The French have a saying that "it is the first step that counts." The pressure that starts this dangerous adventure will not stop it. I had a letter only yesterday from a friend stating that he bought and deposited 1,000,000 marks in a German bank, and the bank finally wrote him that the million marks were not worth enough to pay for the postage stamp required to advise him that the account had been charged off as worthless. These different experiments and disasters stare at us like a death's head.

At the risk of boring you, I will cite a few authorities: Daniel Webster said that paper money was the most effective of all inventions to fertilize the rich man's field with the sweat of the poor man's brow. David A. Wells, one of the foremost economists of the last century, said: "There is one great, plain practical fact in respect to irredeemable paper money which in itself is a sufficient answer to all the arguments that may be advanced in its favor. And that is, that there cannot be one single instance referred to in the history of any state, nation, or people in which its adoption and use has not been wholly disastrous." Simon Newcomb, in the book A B C of Finance, said: "There is no case recorded in history of a government issuing paper money not redeemable in gold or silver and in quantities sufficient for commerce without that paper money depreciating." "The history of mankind for the last two centuries is full of examples showing that a depreciating currency is the greatest source of injury to the business of a nation, being nothing less than a national calamity." Professor Perry, in his Elements of Political Economy, said: "There has never been a government yet (of the many which have issued irredeemable paper) which had the wisdom and firmness to resist for any great length of time the strong temptation to overissues."

Those who urged inflation ought to contradict those authorities and cite at least one instance where success was achieved and failure escaped, or else they ought not to ask those in responsible positions to repeat these experiments. It is my hope that a solution may yet be found for their thorny problem that will prove acceptable to all concerned. I am disposed to cooperate with those who in a spirit of conciliation and cooperation seek to obtain such an end. The passage of the big $5,000,000,000 work-relief bill has saved the bank in with most of the objections to the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates. I was paired with Senator Nye on the passage of the Patman bill. The vote was known to be close and there was just a chance that I might find myself in a situation where my vote would be controlling, in which event I should have sought to bring about a compromise of this disturbing problem. I feel reasonably certain that such a settlement is not far in the future.

Yours very truly,

T. P. GORE.

[Copy of telegram to President Franklin D. Roosevelt from Walter E. Spahr]

HON. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,

*President of the United States, the White House,
Washington, D. C.*

May I, as secretary-treasurer of the Economists National Committee on Monetary Policy, congratulate you upon the stand you took in your veto message in opposition to the inflationist features of the bonus bill. I also wish you to know this committee, composed of 95 of the Nation's leading monetary and banking experts, most of whom are on the faculties of colleges and universities, has consistently opposed all inflationary proposals, although lack of time has made it impossible for this office to gather together the individual votes of the members in approval of your admirable veto message of the Patman bill I can assure you that this committee has consistently opposed the issue of fiat money. On October 1, 1934, it issued a public warning against paper-money inflation in every form, and at its Chicago meeting of December 27, 1934, the committee again registered a vigorous protest against currency inflation. Your position on this subject is entirely in harmony with the repeated recommendations and warnings of our committee with respect to the dangers involved in the issue of printing-press money, namely, that it invites an ultimate reckoning in uncontrollable prices and in the destruction of the value of savings with disastrous result, not only for those who expect to benefit from the bonus bill but for millions of others who have savings accounts, investments, and life-insurance policies.

WALTER E. SPAHR.

[From Chinese Currency, by W. Vissering]

But for the very reason that the Chinese people at one time had the start of all other peoples in civilization, we find such ideas and institutions as are only the fruits of a rather high stage of intellectual development, with the Chinese generally earlier than elsewhere.

So also with the history of the rise, the progress, and decline of paper money; for the Chinese had already suffered all the misery arising from an overissued and depreciated paper currency when it was hailed in Europe as the invention of the philosopher's stone for which had been sought so long (p. 161).

Not until the reign of the Sung dynasty we see this system fully developed, but what originally was a blessing bestowed on China became a "bane of bliss and source of woe" by the stupidity and cupidity of the Government (p. 162).

From the fragments in Ma-twan-lin's Examination, which inform us about the southern branch of the Sung dynasty, it appears that especially under the Emperor Kao-tsung, 1127-63, the issue of paper money was expanded in the most reckless manner, and that in this way the foundation was laid of the wretched condition to which the state finances were reduced at the close of the Sung dynasty, a condition only to be compared with that of France when the blow had fallen and the full light shone upon the ruins caused by the splendid but destructive fireworks of John Law (p. 177).

Ma-twan-lin has brought his Examination down only to this time, but from Wang-ki's continuation of Ma-twan-lin's work we learn how one issue succeeded the other, how every time new names were invented to delude the people solemn promises were made that henceforth the Government should fulfill what it had charged itself with, and how the result was that again and again old debts were paid by incurring new in order to defer the impending bankruptcy of the state (p. 217).

The assertion that paper money has been one of the leading causes of the fall of the Sung dynasty is a thesis which will hardly be gainsaid by those who have read the history of this institution from its glorious beginning to its wretched end.

It is indeed not to be wondered at that after those fatal results which China was to experience twice more in aftertimes the Government superseded the paper money by a metallic currency and forever abolished paper money issued by the state. Had that history been known earlier, it might have taught a great lesson to Europe and America and preserved them from those evils which were to work incalculable misery and irreparable loss; evils which in many countries of the world reveal themselves, alas, too strongly in the social condition of the present time, and which are so well expressed by Webster, who, speaking of paper money, says: "We have suffered more from this cause than from every other cause of calamity. It has killed more men, pervaded and corrupted the choicest interests of our country more, and done more injustice than even the arrows and artifices of our enemy" (pp. 218-219).

[Daniel Webster quoted in F. A. Walker: Money]

A depreciated currency, sudden changes of prices, paper money falling between morning and noon, and falling still lower between noon and night, these things constitute the very harvest time of speculators and of the whole race of those who are at once idle and crafty. * * * This is the most effectual of inventions to fertilize the rich man's fields by the sweat of the poor man's brow. "Ordinary tyranny, oppression, excessive taxation, these bear lightly on the happiness of the mass of the community, compared with fraudulent currencies and the robberies committed by a depreciated paper" (p. 385).

[From Money and the Mechanism of Exchange, by W. S. Jevons]

It is hardly requisite to tell again the well-worn tale of the overissue of paper money which has almost always followed the removal of the legal necessity of convertibility. Hardly any civilized nation exists, excepting some of the newer British colonies, which has not suffered from the scourge of paper money at one time or other. * * * Time after time in the earlier history of the New England and some of the other States now forming parts of the American Union, paper money had been issued and had wrought ruin (p. 235).

[From Currency and Credit, R. G. Hawtrey]

Inflation is a deadly blight; once it has gained a hold it will poison the whole economic system, and can only be eliminated, if at all, at the cost of exhausting efforts (p. 250).

[From F. A. Walker: Money]

The prudence and self-restraint of years count for nothing, or count for but little, against any new onset of popular passion, or in the face of a sudden exigency of the government (p. 379).

SPEAKING OF 1875

[From A History of Currency in the United States, by A. B. Hepburn]

The history of this decade (1870-80) is but a repetition of the experience of every nation with fiat money. The first step taken, the rest follows easily—inflation, delusion of the people, breach of faith, disaster (p. 223).

[From Thomas Babington Macaulay: Money and Banking, by Moulton]

It may well be doubted whether all the misery which had been inflicted on the English nation in a quarter of a century by bad kings, bad ministers, bad Parliaments, and bad judges was equal to the misery caused by bad crowns and bad shillings (p. 87).

[From F. A. Walker: Money]

"Real money", said Edmund Burke, "can hardly ever multiply too much in any country, because it will always, as it increases, be a certain sign of the increase of trade, of which it is the measure, and, consequently, of the soundness and vigor of the whole body. But this paper money may and does increase without any increase of trade; nay, often, when trade greatly declines, for it is not the measure of the trade of the nation, but of the necessity of its government, and it is absurd and must be ruinous that the same course which naturally exhausts the wealth of a nation should likewise be the only productive cause of money" (pp. 381-382).

The emitting of paper money by the authority of the Constitution, said Mr. Hamilton in his Report on the Bank, is wisely prohibited to the individual States by the National Constitution; and the spirit of that prohibition ought not to be disregarded by the Government of the United States. Though paper emissions under general authority might have some advantages not applicable and be free from some of the disadvantages which are applicable to the like emissions by the States separately, yet they are of a nature so liable to abuse, and, it may even be affirmed, so certain of being abused that the wisdom of the Government will be shown in never trusting itself with the use of so seducing and dangerous an expedient. * * * In great and trying emergencies there is almost a moral certainty of it becoming mischievous. The stamping of paper is an operation so much easier than the levying of taxes that a government, in the practice of paper emissions, would rarely fail in any such emergency to indulge itself too far in the employment of this resource (p. 379).

[From D. A. Wells: Practical Economics]

There is one great, plain, practical fact in respect to irredeemable paper money which in itself is a sufficient answer to all the arguments that may be advanced in its favor. And that is, that there cannot be one single instance referred to in the history of any state, nation, or people in which its adoption and use has not been wholly disastrous (p. 1).

[From Simon Newcomb: A B C of Finance]

There is no case recorded in history of a government issuing paper money not redeemable in gold or silver, and in quantities sufficient for commerce, without that paper money depreciating. * * * The history of mankind for the last 2 centuries is full of examples showing that a depreciating currency is the greatest source of injury to the business of a nation, being nothing less than a national calamity.

[From F. A. Walker: Money]

"There has never been a government yet", says Professor Perry, in his Elements of Political Economy, "of the many which have issued irredeemable paper, which had the wisdom and firmness to resist for any great length of time the strong temptation to over-issues. * * * When once the press is set at work, it must work on with livelier speed, because just in the ratio of the depreciation is the greater amount required" (p. 382).

When, however, an inconvertible paper money is issued in marked excess, and hence becomes depreciated and fluctuating, the most disastrous consequence, industrially and socially, must ensue. (Copernicus, Monete Cudende Ratio, p. 384.)

[From John Stuart Mill: The Inexpediency of an Irredeemable Paper Currency]

There is no way in which a general and permanent rise of prices, or, in other words, depreciation of money, can benefit anybody, except at the expense of somebody else. The substitution of paper for metallic currency is a national gain; any further increase of paper beyond this is but a form of robbery (p. 50).

[From F. A. Walker: Money]

Paper money has long been the curse of Austria, but the present epoch of inconvertible paper began in 1848 through the revolutionary movements of that year (p. 363).

[From George Bancroft's Plea for the Constitution]

The people of South Carolina, having the best opportunity to grow rich by the great returns made to them for the products of their soil, have recorded their sense of their mistake in the statute of the 11th of December 1717, in which they said: "It is found by experience that the multiplicity of the bills of credit hath been the cause of the ruin of our trade and commerce and hath been the great evil of this Province, and that it ought with all expedition to be remedied" (p. 19).

[From Currency or Monetary Science, by H. B. Willson]

In view of these great fundamental truths, how senseless is the clamor for "more money." With nearly free mintage there will always be an adequate supply of money. The cry for more capital, or trading power, after some long-continuing depression in the industries of a country, in times of crises, brought on by overtrading and speculation, or by the whole people "making haste to get rich", would be more logical, because such crises stop production and thus diminish the supply of capital.

When the cry is for more of an inconvertible paper currency instead of for more capital, which is only created by the production of goods and the slow processes of industry, it is simply idiotic, for the reason that the greater the volume of such currency put in circulation, the less becomes its trading power or market value. It adds nothing to the actual capital of a country but only creates "a fool's paradise" for those who fancy they are growing rich because their houses, lands, and goods are measured by a yardstick of only half the standard length (p. 45).

THE FALLACY THAT MORE ACTUAL MONEY IN CIRCULATION IS NEEDED

By B. M. Anderson, Jr.

The doctrine lying behind the demand for more greenbacks is the doctrine that an increase of money in circulation will raise commodity prices. The doctrine is that the general average of commodity prices is governed by, and varies directly with, the volume of money in the pockets of the people. This doctrine, originating in theoretical speculations at a time when checks were little used and business was largely done by actual cash, will have few defenders among students of money and banking today. The facts are too obviously against it.

The theory that there is need for an increase in money in circulation inverts cause and effect. Whatever may be true of an increase in the total of money and bank credit, the concentration of attention upon money in circulation alone is an utter and absolute fallacy.

The issue of additional greenbacks, even if put into circulation by being paid out by the Government directly to the people, assuming that it worked mechanically, would not appreciably increase the total of money in circulation. The excess currency would simply flow back to the banks and they would turn it over to the Federal Reserve banks, increasing the reserve balances on deposit with the Federal Reserve banks. The effect, therefore, insofar as it worked mechanically, would be virtually identical with the effect of an increase of Government-bond buying by the Federal Reserve banks.

Of course, there is very grave danger that a substantial issue of greenbacks by the Federal Government, particularly if used in paying off interest-bearing public debt, would not be mechanical in its operation, but would lead to a very startling and dangerous psychological reaction. It would be the dreaded printing press used as a substitute for taxing or for public borrowing—the language of the law limits the rise of the greenbacks to paying off public debt, but in a period when public expenditure exceeds taxation, this would be a bookkeeping distinction only.

Whatever else the Government tries to do under these new powers, it must not be misled by the demand for a crude direct increase in the volume of money in circulation.

[From Dictionary of Political Economy, by H. D. Macleod, p. 667 et seq.]

It is to the Chinese that belongs the unquestionable merit of inventing circulating credit. They also first experienced the miseries caused by the abuses of paper money. * * * It is sufficient to say that the Chinese Emperors ran through the same course of depreciating their coinage, and with the same results as took place in European countries many centuries afterward. * * * The year 807 A. D. is memorable as that in which that wonderful agent, paper currency, was invented. Great troubles had agitated the Empire, attended with their usual effect of disorganizing the coinage. The Emperor Hian-tsung ordered the merchants to deposit their specie in the imperial treasury, and gave them bills of exchange, called "fey-tsien", or "flying money," payable at the principal towns of the Provinces. The convenience of these bills was so great and so soon appreciated that all of the great officers of the state and rich men hastened to deposit their specie in the Treasury and receive fey-tsien in exchange. For some reason this system was abolished in 3 years. * * * About this time the abuses of paper money, which have been so frequently practiced in modern times, began. The Tartars were now invading the country, and the Chinese Emperors had no resource except to create immense issues of kiao-tseu. * * * In 1131, after the Tartars had conquered the northern Provinces, the money was in the greatest disorder. To pay the troops new bills, called "kouan-tseu", were created, which were payable in the interior. But when the time for payment came the Government could only pay one-third part of their value, and so they fell to a heavy discount. In 1133 new issues were made. In 1158, under the same Emperor, the copper vessels of private persons and of the religious sects were confiscated. In 1160 the officers of state were not allowed to have more than 20,000 min, or 150,000 francs ($30,000), in money, and private persons half as much. All gold and silver was ordered to be brought to the treasury, and in exchange bills for tea, salt, and other things were given. * * * The Chinese historian says: "Paper should not be made money; it should only be used as a representative sign of metallic values, or necessities, which should be immediately exchanged for specie, and economize its transport. Such was the original use of paper among merchants. The Government, adopting this invention from private persons, made it into money, and then abused its original intention." * * * In 1235 a minister speaks of two species of hoel-tseu, at 16 and 17 terms, and complains of their daily increasing depreciation, and the rise of necessities. In 1256, in order to diminish their number, it was ordered that the wine duties should be received in them, and then they were to be burnt. * * * Many of the officers of the Mongolian King, Ogodal (1227-48) had urged him to issue kiao-tchao, in imitation of the Kin Kings. His minister, however, Ye-liu-tchou-tsai, had warned him of the danger of paper money; and told him that the paper was refused in payment of taxes, and in consequence was soon depreciated that a cake of rice cost 11,000 min, or $15,000.

In 1288 new issues were made, in which 1 new note was given for 5 of the same nominal value of the old. Thus the Government defrauded its creditors of 80 percent of their debts. * * * It had been a forced currency, and no one dare refuse it on pain of death. * * * In 1309 the Emperor Won-tsung, seeing the paper much depreciated, issued a third species, called "tchi-tayn-tchao", which, in fact, replaced the old at a depreciation of 80 percent. * * * But no one would take them. During this period insurrections broke out in every quarter, which the author of the work Tsao-mou, which is a continuation of Mato-nan-lin, attributes to the general discontent caused by the abuses of paper money by the Mongols. * * * In 1403 the tchao of the Mings had fallen to a heavy discount. * * * Then from 1160 to the end of the sixteenth century inconvertible paper money had a forced currency in China, and displayed exactly the same phenomena as have been so often seen in modern times in Europe and America. In 1644 the Manchous, or Tartars, conquered all China, and seeing that the paper money was quite discredited, and had been one of the great causes of the overthrow of the Ming dynasty, they totally suppressed it. * * * We have given this account of Chinese paper money because we are not aware that any account of it has ever been published in English, and it may probably be new to our readers to learn that all the phenomena which have been displayed in Europe and America by the issue of paper money, were exhibited in China many centuries ago. * * * We need not load our pages with circumstantial accounts of the paper money of other countries, such as Russia, Austria, etc., as the story is the same in all. The history of the assignats, Law's Mississippi scheme, and the paper money of the American Colonies, furnish ample materials to study the pathology of the subject without repeating the wearisome details.

EXCERPTS FROM EDITORIALS ON THE PRESIDENT'S VETO MESSAGE OF THE PATMAN BONUS BILL

[From the New York Times]

The President's veto message was a masterly performance. Both in conception and delivery it was magnificent. Certainly they were persuasive to all who had not put themselves, in one way or another, beyond the reach of persuasion. Under the circumstances, it was as fine an exhibition of courage and a profound sense of duty as any President has ever given to Congress and the American people. It cannot fail to heighten Mr. Roosevelt's reputation and to give him a standing and prestige such as he has not had before.

In taking up the defects and dangers of the bonus bill, one by one, Mr. Roosevelt laid due and sufficient emphasis upon its financial recklessness. Congress had voted a vast expenditure without providing the money to meet it. Paying Government obligations by printing Treasury notes is to enter upon a path certain to lead to disaster. The President dwelt upon this with gravity and energy. He also showed how an uncontrolled inflation would injure the veterans themselves, along with all people who depend upon a fixed income or have savings. Mr. Roosevelt also pointed out that this special bounty to ex-soldiers would break into the whole scheme of work relief for which Congress had recently voted $4,000,000,000. But this part of his message was properly subordinated to the larger scope and sweep of his appeal.

To his mind, as President of the entire people, it is necessary to frame a national policy which will treat all alike. Mr. Roosevelt would have Congress and all our citizens see the country as a whole. As he said, it requires no prophet to tell us that if one group succeeds in forcing upon Congress claims for itself alone others will quickly follow. The result will be to break up the frame and purpose of our Government, substituting for a mature public sentiment the violence of organized minorities and what the President called "political coercion." This setting for his message was loftily worked out in the tone and temper of true statesmanship.

Today the Senate will be the observed of all observers. It is hard to imagine its doubtful Members indifferent to the high-minded and splendid message of the President. It was published and heard all over the country yesterday in a way, one must believe, to bring many urgent telegrams of protest to Senators. They must be well aware of the heavy responsibility resting upon them. We do not say that the fate of the Nation is in their hands, but we do say that not only Americans but all the world will watch their voting on the bonus eagerly, in order to discover whether the Senate of the United States will hold up the hands of the President when he speaks in behalf of sound finance, honest government, and equal justice to all.

[From the New York Herald Tribune]

THE BONUS VETO

Not since his inaugural address and his first fireside chat by radio has Franklin D. Roosevelt spoken with such force, clarity, and sanity as in his bonus veto message. With irrefutable logic he has demolished the arguments of those who forced this bill through Congress. In plain, vigorous speech he has shown the mistaken premises of the bill and the evil consequences of its enactment. Unequivocally he has served notice that it would lead to currency inflation, and that currency inflation would lead to disaster. There is no pussyfooting, no straddling, no camouflage.

The President deserves all honor for his stand. We sincerely hope that the Republicans in the Senate will have the vision to support his veto. Their duty is clear since the House has already voted to override him. This is no occasion for a display of partisanship. The President spoke not as a politician but as the head of the Nation. Now, as in March of 1933, he deserves whole-hearted support.

[From the Hartford Courant]

SOUNDNESS OF PRINCIPLES PRAISED

Men with open minds could not have failed to be impressed with the message. The courtesy and sympathy that ran through it were proof of its sincerity. Every aspect of the matter was thoroughly and fairly discussed. Of the soundness of the fundamental principles that he enunciated no honest dispute is possible.

[From the Baltimore Sun]

MAY HAVE GAGED CONSEQUENCES

Although the message still will not be startling to those who are not astounded by common sense, it does make the President's position clear enough to demand support in the Senate. Mr. Roosevelt has taken whatever risk there may be in defending the reasonable and honest course in a generation devoted to romantic exceptions to hitherto accepted standards. The Senators, despite the pressure upon them from a powerful minority, may well conclude, even if they do not feel up to an act of self-sacrifice, that Mr. Roosevelt may have gaged the political consequences of being right more shrewdly than other diagnosticians imagine.

[From the Cleveland Plain Dealer]

MEETS THE ISSUE HEAD-ON

The President meets the issue head-on. In the long message appears no hint of compromise. Supposed administration spokesmen in Congress have sought to soften the impact of a message they knew was inevitable by suggesting either that Mr. Roosevelt would not mean what he said or that he would be friendly to the thought of some kind of compromise on the bonus issue. One does not see how any careful reader of this veto message can get an idea that some other bonus proposal would at this time receive favorable consideration at the White House.

[From the Atlanta Constitution]

A COURAGEOUS DOCUMENT

There is no reasonable answer to President Roosevelt's justification of his veto of the bonus bill. It is a courageous document.

[From the Washington Post]

THE VETO MESSAGE

Courage and intelligence were blended in a Presidential message which for its clarity of thought, its precision of reasoning, its cogency of analysis deserves high and enduring place among the great state papers of the Nation. Not alone the manner, but even more the matter, of this veto speech sets it apart as one in which Americans of every party and in any circumstance may properly take pride.

Step by step, with admirable restraint and perfect logic, Mr. Roosevelt showed how flimsy are the arguments and how shallow the reasoning which support this proposed legislation.

[From the Des Moines Register]

CHANCES OF BILL HAVE SHRUNK

The President made a good declaration on the bonus, and his way of making it—in a personally delivered veto message before Congress—was sound. The chances of the Patman bill being passed over his veto most certainly have shrunk. As to the inflationary phase of the bill, the President was on firm ground when he pointed to the historic effects of meeting recurring demands by the issuance of paper money. There can be little question but that printing two billions of paper to meet this demand would sharpen appetites and lead to the printing of more.

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press]

INTELLECTUAL HONESTY HAILED

President Roosevelt's veto message on the Patman bill was, as expected, strong and uncompromising. He made clear that his disagreement ran further than merely the coin in which Congress had proposed to pay the veterans. It was a courageous message, for it requires a high type of intellectual honesty for any political figure to tell 3,500,000 veterans, most of whom have a sincere and deep conviction of the rightness of their claim, that they cannot have what they want, that they have been misled.

[From the Kansas City Star]

COURAGEOUS AND CONVINCING

It was a powerful message, courageous and convincing. It was the long-awaited assurance from the administration on mere spending for recovery and on fiat money. It left the veterans without an argument for full payment now save the plea arising from the administration's liberal outlays, which the President sought to defend as sound, necessary, and aimed at the welfare of all. It did not close the door to a bonus compromise on the basis of approximate amounts now due, but it clearly clarified and fortified the administration's entire position.

[From the Portland (Oreg.) Oregonian]

POSITIVE, COMFORTING DECLARATION

The veto message is the most eloquent, logical, and convincing of the Roosevelt state papers, and one of the most meaningful. Silent inaction concerning permissive issue of greenbacks hitherto authorized has now given place to positive and comforting declaration. He has rejected the delusion ascribed to the administration that the Nation is spending its way out of the depression and priming the prosperity pump with its vast borrowings. And he has devastated every argument made in behalf of full, immediate payment of the bonus.

[From the Los Angeles Times]

A LARGE AND COURAGEOUS SERVICE

Every major development in this year's bonus agitation has pointed unmistakably to fiat money inflation rather than veteran relief as the major objective of the drive. In all, however, the Chief Executive has done the country a large and courageous service not merely in rejecting an unjustifiable and discriminatory claim and in putting himself on record against direct inflation, but in his implied rebuke to the type of coercive legislation which this effort represented.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, at the suggestion of several Senators I desire to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed to me on April 26, 1935, signed by Mr. Harold W. Breining, Assistant Administrator of the Veterans' Bureau, together with the computations attached to the letter.

I wish to make a brief explanation to aid in making these computations easily understood.

In the first column the Veterans' Bureau took an average $400 allowance for soldiers and computed the interest on that at 4 percent, 5 percent, and 6 percent compounded.

In the next column they took $100, which was added to the first sum, according to the testimony of General Hines, not to take care of past interest, but as an addition for delay.

They then computed the interest on that sum at 4 percent, 5 percent, and 6 percent, compounded.

They then computed the interest on $500 at 4 percent, 5 percent, and 6 percent.

They then added $60. The $60 was added by reason of the fact that in the original computation, in 1924, $60 was deducted from the sum allowed the soldier. This $60 was deducted because the soldier had been given $60 to buy a suit of clothes when he was discharged from the Army. The computation in the last line of figures is for the total of $560 and interest compounded annually at 4 percent, 5 percent, and 6 percent.

It is shown when the indebtedness to the veteran became due and payable in each column of figures. In other words, in each column of figures when the sum reaches $1,000 it shows that the payment was due that year.

I have made this explanation in order that the figures, when printed in the RECORD, may be understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

APRIL 26, 1935.

Hon. HUGO L. BLACK,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BLACK: In compliance with your verbal request there is transmitted herewith a copy of the statement which I handed to you yesterday at the meeting of the Senate Committee on Finance.

In accordance with your expressed desire an explanation of each column of figures has been made a part of the statement.

Respectfully,

HAROLD W. BREINING,
Assistant Administrator.

PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED CERTIFICATES—NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULES

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I send to the desk a notice of intention to suspend the rules, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraphs 1 and 4 of rule XVI, for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, the following amendments:

On page 1, between lines 2 and 3, insert the center heading "Title I".

On page 61, after line 7, insert the following:

TITLE II

SECTION 1. Title V of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof three new sections, to read as follows:

"PAYMENT OF CERTIFICATES BEFORE MATURITY"

"SEC. 509. (a) The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to pay to any veteran to whom an adjusted-service certificate has been issued, upon application by him and surrender of the certificate and all rights thereunder (with or without the consent of the beneficiary thereof), the amount of the face value of the certificate as computed in accordance with section 501.

"(b) No payment shall be made under this section until the certificate is in the possession of the Veterans' Administration, nor until all obligations for which the certificate was held as security have been paid or otherwise discharged.

"(c) If at the time of application to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs for payment under this section the principal and interest on or in respect of any loan upon the certificate have not been paid in full by the veterans (whether or not the loan has matured), then, on request of the veteran, the Administrator shall (1) pay or otherwise discharge such unpaid principal and so much of such unpaid interest (accrued or to accrue) as is necessary to make the certificate available for payment under this section, and (2) deduct from the amount of the face value of the certificate the amount of such principal and so much of such interest, if any, as accrued prior to October 1, 1931.

"(d) Upon payment under this section the certificate and all rights thereunder shall be canceled.

"(e) A veteran may receive the benefits of this section by application therefor, filed with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Such application may be made and filed at any time before the maturity of the certificate (1) personally by the veteran, or (2) in case physical or mental incapacity prevents the making or filing of a personal application, then by such representative of the veteran and in such manner as may be by regulations prescribed. An application made by a person other than a representative authorized by such regulations, or not filed on or before the maturity of the certificate, shall be held void.

"(f) If the veteran dies after the application is made and before it is filed, it may be filed by any person. If the veteran dies after the application is made, it shall be valid if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs finds that it bears the bona fide signature of the applicant, discloses an intention to claim the benefit of this section on behalf of the veteran, and is filed before the maturity of the certificate, whether or not the veteran is alive at the time it is filed. If the death occurs after the application is made or filed but before the receipt of the payment under this act, payment shall be made to the beneficiary designated.

"(g) Where the records of the Veterans' Administration show that an application, disclosing an intention to claim the benefits of this section, has been filed before the maturity of the certificate, and the application cannot be found, such application shall be presumed, in the absence of affirmative evidence to the contrary, to have been valid when originally filed.

"SEC. 510. If, at the time this section takes effect, a veteran entitled to receive an adjusted-service certificate has not made application therefor, he shall be entitled, upon application made under section 302, to receive at his option either the certificate under section 501 or payment of the amount of the face value thereof under section 509.

"SEC. 511. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in the exercise of his powers to make regulations for payment under section 509, shall to the fullest extent practicable provide a method by which veterans may present their applications and receive payment in close proximity to the places of their residence."

SEC. 2. Subdivisions (b) and (c) of section 302, section 311, subdivision (b) of section 312, section 602, and subdivision (b) of section 604 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, secs. 612, 621, 622, 662, and 664), are hereby amended, to take effect as of December 31, 1934, by striking out "January 2, 1935" wherever it appears in such subdivisions and sections and inserting in lieu thereof "January 2, 1940."

SEC. 3. (a) Payment of the face value of adjusted-service certificates under section 509 or section 510 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, shall be made in United States notes not bearing interest. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue such notes in such amount as may be required to make such payment, and of the same wording, form, size, and denominations as United States notes issued under existing law, except that the wording thereon shall conform to the provisions of this title. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and the Secretary of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed jointly to prescribe rules and regulations for the delivery of such notes in payment under section 509 or section 510 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, and there is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury such amount of such notes as may be necessary to make such payment.

(b) United States notes issued pursuant to the provisions of this title shall be lawful money of the United States and shall be maintained at a parity of value with the standard unit of value fixed by law. Such notes shall be legal tender in payment of all debts and dues, public and private, and shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and all public dues, and when so received shall be reissued. Such notes, when held by any national-banking association or Federal Reserve bank, may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve. The provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the act of March 14, 1900, as amended (U. S. C., title 31, secs. 314 and 408), and section 26 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 409), are hereby made applicable to such notes in the same manner and to the same extent as such provisions shall apply at the time of the enactment of this title or in the future to United States notes.

(c) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, payments authorized by this title shall be made (1) by the issuance of United States notes as provided in this section; or, in the discretion of the President, (2) from the proceeds of the sale of bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, or Treasury bills of the United States issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended; or, in the discretion of the President (3) in part by the issuance of such notes and in part from the proceeds of the sale of such bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, or Treasury bills. The President is further authorized, in his discretion, to allocate funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Act of 1935 for the purpose of making any payments authorized by this title; but any such funds so utilized may be replaced out of the proceeds of such bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, or Treasury bills, or with notes issued under the provisions of this section. There is hereby appropriated an amount sufficient to make payments under this title by any method authorized under this subsection.

SEC. 4. (a) Whenever the index number of the wholesale all-commodity prices rise above the index number of such prices for the years 1921 to 1929, as computed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the following methods for contracting the issues of currency in the United States may be in force and effect, in the manner and to the extent prescribed in subsection (b) of this section:

(1) Termination of the issuance and reissuance of Federal Reserve notes secured by direct obligations of the United States.

(2) Termination of the issuance and reissuance of national-bank circulating notes, and the retirement of such notes from circulation as rapidly as practicable.

(3) Termination of the issuance and reissuance of Federal Reserve notes secured only by gold or gold certificates.

(4) Termination of the issuance and reissuance of Federal Reserve notes secured by notes, drafts, bills of exchange, acceptances, or bankers' acceptances which are not issued in direct benefit of commerce, industry, or agriculture.

(b) Any such method of contracting currency issues may be applicable when the Secretary of the Treasury finds that its application is necessary in order to maintain the index number of wholesale all-commodity prices at the approximate level of the index number of such prices for the years 1921 to 1929, or to prevent undue expansion of the currency, and issues an order setting forth such finding. Each such order shall prescribe such rules and regulations as are necessary and appropriate to carry out the provisions of this section with respect to the method of contraction made applicable in the order. The Secretary may make such methods applicable in the order in which they are set forth in subsection (a) of this section or in any order he chooses. When any such order is issued with respect to Federal Reserve notes, the Federal Reserve Board shall take such action as may be necessary to facilitate the enforcement of the order.

Sec. 5. Section 505 (authorizing annual appropriations ending with the year 1946 for the payment of adjusted-service certificates) of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, except the first sentence thereof, is hereby repealed. Amounts in the adjusted-service certificate fund are hereby made available for the expenses of printing and engraving United States notes issued under this title, for paying fractional parts of a dollar which cannot be paid in United States notes issued under the provisions of this title, and for paying the principal and interest on or in respect of loans pursuant to the provisions of subsection (c) of section 509 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended.

Sec. 6. This title may be cited as the "Adjusted Compensation Act, 1935."

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

NOTICE OF ADDRESS BY SENATOR HASTINGS

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that as soon as I may be recognized tomorrow I intend to make a few remarks in reply to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] with respect to the selection of the group of farmers who came here a few days ago. I merely want to give notice, particularly to the Senator from Texas, in order that he may be present.

AMENDMENT OF AIR MAIL LAWS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (H. R. 6511) to amend the air mail laws and to authorize the extension of the Air Mail Service, and I submit a report (No. 685) thereon. I ask unanimous consent that the bill as reported, together with the report thereon, may be printed in full in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill, as reported, is as follows:

[Omit the part enclosed in brackets and insert the part printed in italic]

An act to amend the air mail laws and to authorize the extension of the Air Mail Service

Be it enacted, etc., [That subsection (c) of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to revise air mail laws, and to establish a commission to make a report to the Congress recommending an aviation policy", approved June 12, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) If, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant an extension of any route, for a distance not in excess of 150 miles, but only one such extension shall be granted to any one person, and the rate of pay for such extension shall not be in excess of the rate per mile fixed for the service thus extended."

Sec. 2. The first sentence of subsection (d) of such section is amended to read as follows: "The Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary or secondary routes. He shall designate as primary routes at least three transcontinental routes and, in addition thereto, such other routes as he deems advisable, but no route less than 500 miles in length shall be designated as a primary route."

Sec. 3. Subsection (f) of such section is amended to read as follows:

"(f) The Postmaster General shall not award contracts for air mail routes or extend such routes in excess of an aggregate of 32,000 miles, and shall not establish schedules for air mail transportation on such routes and extensions in excess of an annual aggregate for 45,000,000 airplane-miles. Subject to the foregoing limitation, the Postmaster General shall prescribe the number and time of departure of all air mail schedules, and he may utilize therefor any scheduled passenger or express flight of the contractor between the terminals or over a portion of any route."

Sec. 4. Subsection (a) of section 6 of such act of June 12, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. (a) The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed, after notice and hearing, to fix and determine by order, as soon as practicable and from time to time, the fair and reasonable rates of compensation for the transportation of air mail by airplane and the service connected therewith over each air mail route, and over each section thereof covered by a separate contract, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates of compensation, and to publish the same, which shall continue in force until changed by the said Commission after due notice and hearing. In fixing and determining such rates, if it shall be contended or alleged by the holder of an air mail contract that the rate of compensation in force for the service involved is insufficient, the burden of establishing such insufficiency and the extent thereof shall be assumed by him. In no case shall the rates fixed and determined by the said Commission hereunder exceed by more than 20 percent the limits prescribed in section 3 (a) of this act."

Sec. 5. The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 6 of such act is amended to read as follows: "Any contract (1) let, extended, or assigned pursuant to the provisions of this act, and in full force and effect on March 1, 1935, or (2) which may be let subsequent to such date pursuant to the provisions of this act and shall have been satisfactorily performed by the contractor during its full initial period, shall, from and after such date, or from and after the termination of its initial period, as the case may be, be continued in effect for an indefinite period, and compensation therefor, during such period of indefinite continuance shall be paid at the rate fixed by order of the Commission under this section, subject to such additional conditions and terms as the Commission may prescribe, which shall be consistent with the requirements of this act; but any contract so continued in effect may be terminated by the Commission upon 60 days' notice, upon such hearing and notice thereof to interested parties as the Commission may determine to be reasonable; and may also be terminated by the contractor at its option upon 60 days' notice."

Sec. 6. Subsection (e) of section 6 of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "In arriving at such determination the Commission shall disregard losses resulting, in the opinion of the Commission, from the unprofitable maintenance of nonmail schedules, in cases where the Commission may find that the gross receipts from such schedules fail to meet the additional operating expense occasioned thereby."

Sec. 7. Section 10 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 10. All persons holding air mail contracts shall be required to keep their books, records, and accounts under such regulations as may be promulgated by the Postmaster General, and he is hereby authorized, if and when he deems it advisable to do so, to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts of such contractors, and to require such contractors to submit full financial reports in such form and under such regulations as he may prescribe."

Sec. 8. Section 13 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 13. It shall be a condition upon the holding of any air mail contract that the rate of compensation and the working conditions and relations for all pilots and other employees of the holder of such contract shall conform to decisions of the National Labor Board, or its successor in authority, notwithstanding any limitation as to the period of its effectiveness included in any such decision heretofore rendered. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of any such employees by collective bargaining to obtain higher rates of compensation or more favorable working conditions and relations."

Sec. 9. Section 15, as amended, of such act is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 15. After June 30, 1935, no person holding a contract or contracts for carrying air mail on a primary route shall be awarded or hold any contract for carrying air mail on any other primary route, nor on more than three additional routes other than primary routes. In case that one person holds several contracts covering different sections of one air mail route as designated by the Postmaster General, several contracts shall be counted as one contract for the purpose of the preceding sentence. It shall be unlawful for air mail contractors competing in parallel routes to merge or to enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control or ownership. After June 30, 1935, no air mail contractor shall be allowed to maintain passenger or express service off the line of his air mail route which in any way competes with passenger or express service available upon another air mail route, except that off-line competitive service which has been regularly maintained for at least 4 months next preceding July 1, 1935, and such seasonal schedules as may have been regularly maintained during the year prior to July 1, 1935, may be continued if restricted to the number of schedules and to the stops scheduled and in effect during such period or season.

"Upon application of the Postmaster General or of any interested air-mail contractor, setting forth that the general transport business or earnings upon an air mail route are being adversely affected by any alleged unfair practice of another air transport operator, or by any competitive air transport service other than that supplied by an air mail contractor on the line of his prescribed air mail route, or by any service inaugurated after March 1, 1935, through the scheduling of competitive nonmail flights over an air mail route, the Interstate Commerce Commission shall, after giving reasonable notice to the person complained of, inquire fully into the subject matter of the allegations; and if the Commission shall find such practice or competition or any part thereof to be unfair, or that such competitive service in whole or in part is not reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, and if the Commission shall further find that in either case the receipts or expenses of an air mail contractor are so affected thereby as to tend to increase the cost of air mail transportation, then it shall order such practice or competitive service, or both, as the case may be, discontinued or restricted in accordance with such findings, and the respondent named in the order shall comply therewith within a reasonable time to be fixed in such order."

That the following amendments are made to the act of June 12, 1934, as amended by the act of June 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 933, 1243; 39 U. S. C. 469, Supp. VIII): Section 3 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for initial periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile: Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible or qualified under this act, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Comptroller General, who shall speedily determine the issue, and his decision shall be final: Provided further, That the base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 33½ cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof plus one-tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month, except that in no case shall payment exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile."

Sec. 2. Section 3 (c) is amended to read as follows:

"If, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant extensions of any route, provided that the aggregate mileage of all such extensions on any route in effect at one time shall not exceed 200 miles, and that the rate of pay for such extensions shall not be in excess of the rate fixed for the service thus extended."

Sec. 3. Section 3 (d) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and as secondary routes. He shall designate as primary routes at least three transcontinental routes, with such termini as he may deem advisable, and, in addition thereto, such other routes as he may consider in the public interest, but no route less than 1,000 miles in length shall be designated as a primary route: Provided, That the present route from Seattle to San Diego may be held and regarded as other than a primary route: Provided further, That the eastern coastal route from Newark (or New York City, as the case may be) to Miami, Fla., and the southern transcontinental route from Boston via New York (or Newark, as the case may be) and Washington to Los Angeles, shall be designated as primary routes."

Sec. 4. Section 3 (f) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General shall not award contracts for air mail routes or extend such routes in excess of an aggregate of 32,000 miles, and shall not pay for air mail transportation on such routes and extensions in excess of an annual aggregate of 45,000,000 airplane-miles. Subject to the foregoing, the Postmaster General shall prescribe the number and frequency of schedules, intermediate regular stops, and time of departure of all planes carrying air mail, with due regard for the volume of mail carried over each route and for connecting schedules, and he may under such regulations as he may prescribe authorize and notwithstanding any other provisions of this act compensate for a special schedule or an extra or emergency trip in addition to any regular schedule over air mail routes or portions thereof at the same mileage rate paid for regular schedules on the contract route or routes, or at a lesser rate if agreed to by the contractor and the Postmaster General, and he may utilize therefor any scheduled passenger or express flight of the contractor between the terminal points or over a portion of any route whenever the needs of the service may so require: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, upon application by an air mail contractor, authorize said contractor for his own convenience to transport air mail on any nonmail schedule or plane, with the understanding that the weights of mail so transported will be credited to regular mail schedules and no mileage compensation will be claimed therefor and the miles flown in such cases will not be computed in the annual aggregate of flown mileage authorized under this section."

Sec. 5. Subsection (a) of section 6 of such act of June 12, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. (a) The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed, after notice and hearing, to fix and determine by order, as soon as practicable and from time to time, the fair and reasonable rates of compensation within the limitations of this act for the transportation of air mail by airplane and the service connected therewith over each air mail route, and over each section thereof covered by a separate contract, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates of compensation, and to publish the same, which shall continue in force until changed by the said Commission after due notice and hearing, and so much of subsection (g) of section 3 of said act as is in conflict with this section is hereby repealed."

Sec. 6. Section 6 (e) of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows:

"In arriving at such determination the Commission shall disregard losses resulting, in the opinion of the Commission, from the unprofitable maintenance of nonmail schedules, in cases where the Commission may find that the gross receipts from such schedules fail to meet the additional operating expense occasioned thereby."

"In fixing and determining such rates, if it shall be contended or alleged by the holder of an air mail contract that the rate of compensation in force for the service involved is insufficient, the burden of establishing such insufficiency and the extent thereof shall be assumed by him. In no case shall the rates fixed and determined by the said Commission hereunder exceed the limits prescribed in section 3 (a) of this act."

Sec. 7. Section 6 (b) is amended to read as follows:

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed at least once in each calendar year from the date of the award of any contract to examine the books, accounts, contracts, and entire business records of the contracting company, to review the rates of compensation to be paid to the holder of such contract in order to be assured that no unreasonable profit is being derived or accruing therefrom and in order to fix just rates. In determining what may constitute an unreasonable profit the said Commission shall take into consideration the income derived from the operation of airplanes over the routes affected, and in addition to the requirements of section 4 hereof, shall take into consideration all forms of expenditures of said companies in order to ascertain whether or not the expenditures have been upon a fair and reasonable basis on the part of said company and whether or not the said company has paid more than a fair and reasonable market value for the purchase or rent of planes, engines, or any other types or kind, or class, or goods, or services, including spare parts of all kinds, and whether or not the air mail contracting company has purchased or rented any kind of goods, commodities, or services from any individuals who own stock in or are connected with the said contracting companies or has purchased such goods and services from any company or corporations in which any of the individuals employed by or owning stock in the air mail contracting company have any interest or from which such purchase or rents any of the employees or stockholders of air mail contracting company would be directly or indirectly benefited."

"Within 30 days after a decision has been reached by the Interstate Commerce Commission touching such profit a report of its results shall be made to the Postmaster General, to the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

Sec. 8. The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 6 is amended to read as follows:

"Any contract (1) let, extended, or assigned pursuant to the provisions of this act, and in full force and effect on March 1, 1935, or (2) which may be let subsequent to such date pursuant to the provisions of this act and shall have been satisfactorily performed by the contractor during its full initial period, shall, from and after such date, or from and after the termination of its initial period, as the case may be, be continued in effect for an indefinite period, and compensation therefor, on or after March 1, 1935, during such period of indefinite continuance, shall be paid at the rate fixed by order of the Commission under this act, subject to such additional conditions and terms as the Commission may prescribe, upon recommendation of the Postmaster General, which shall be consistent with the requirements and limitations contained in section 1 of this act; but any contract so continued in effect may be terminated for cause by the Commission upon 60 days' notice, upon such hearing and notice thereof to interested parties as the Commission may determine to be reasonable; and may also be terminated, in whole or in part, by mutual agreement of the Postmaster General and the contractor, or by the contractor at its option at 60 days' notice, or by the Postmaster General at his option at 60 days' notice."

Sec. 9. Section 7 (d) is amended to read as follows:

"No person shall be qualified to enter upon the performance of, or thereafter to hold an air mail contract, (1) if, at or after the time specified for the commencement of mail transportation under such contract, such person is (or, if a partnership, association, or corporation, has) a member, officer, or director, or an employee performing general managerial duties; that is, an individual who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails: Provided, That whenever required by the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission the bidder shall submit an affidavit executed by the bidder, or by such of its officers, directors, or general managerial employees as the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission may designate, sworn to before an officer authorized and empowered to administer oaths, stating in such affidavit that the affiant has not entered nor proposed to enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails, nor made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person to bid or not to bid for any mail contract, or (2) if it pays any officer, director, or regular employee compensation in any form, whether as salary, bonus, commission, or otherwise, at a rate exceeding $17,500 per year for full time: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any such officer, director, or regular employee to draw a salary of more than $17,500 per year from any air mail contractor, or a salary from any other company if such salary from any company makes his total compensation more than $17,500 per year."

Sec. 10. Section 13 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 13. It shall be a condition upon the holding of any air mail contract that the rate of compensation and the working conditions and relations for all pilots and other employees of the holder of such contract shall conform to decisions heretofore or hereafter made by the National Labor Board, or its successor in authority, notwithstanding any limitation as to the period of its effectiveness included in any such decision heretofore rendered. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of any such employees by collective bargaining to obtain higher rates of compensation or more favorable working conditions and relations."

Sec. 11. Section 15, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 15. After June 30, 1935, no person holding a contract or contracts for carrying air mail on a primary route shall be awarded or hold any contract for carrying air mail on any other primary route, nor on more than three additional routes other than primary routes. In case one person holds several contracts covering different sections of one air mail route as designated by the Postmaster General, such several contracts shall be counted as one contract for the purpose of the preceding sentence. It shall be unlawful for air mail contractors, competing in parallel routes, to merge or to enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control or ownership. After June 30, 1935, no air mail contractor shall be allowed to maintain passenger or express service off the line of his air mail route which in any way competes with passenger or express service available upon another air mail route, except that off-line competitive service which has been regularly maintained for at least four months next preceding July 1, 1935, and such seasonal schedules as may have been regularly maintained during the year prior to July 1, 1935, may be continued if restricted to the number of schedules and to the stops scheduled and in effect during such period or season: Provided, however, that if the Interstate Commerce Commission, after due notice to the Postmaster General and all parties in interest and a hearing thereon, shall be of the opinion that the public interest so requires, it may by order require the suspension or the decrease or may permit an increase in the frequency of such schedules."

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized to hear any complaint filed by the Postmaster General or any interested air mail contractor setting forth that the general transport business or earnings upon an air mail route are being adversely affected by any off-line flights, or extra schedules not provided for in the original contract, nor authorized by the Postmaster General, of another air mail contractor or for any alleged unfair practice by another air mail contractor. Upon filing of such complaint the Commission shall give personal notice to the person complained of, inquire fully into the subject matter of the allegations; and if the Commission shall find such competition or practice, or any part thereof, to be unfair, or that such competitive service, in whole or in part, is not reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, then the Commission may enter an order requiring such air mail contractor to discontinue or restrict such competition or practice in accordance with the findings and order of the Commission, and the compensation of such air mail contractor shall be withheld while it continues to violate such order."

The report of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 685, 74th Cong., 1st sess.]

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 6511):

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, having had before it H. R. 6511, S. 2454, and S. 2420, beg leave to report H. R. 6511 to the Senate with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert S. 2454, with various amendments proposed by the committee, said Senate bill as proposed to be amended, being as follows, without the enacting clause:

"That the following amendments are made to the act of June 12, 1934, as amended by the act of June 26, 1934 (48 Stat. 933, 1243; 39 U. S. C. 469, Supp. VIII): Section 3 (a) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General is authorized to award contracts for the transportation of air mail by airplane between such points as he may designate, and for initial periods of not exceeding 3 years, to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guaranty for faithful performance in accordance with the terms of the advertisement at fixed rates per airplane-mile: Provided, That where the Postmaster General holds that a low bidder is not responsible or qualified under this act, such bidder shall have the right to appeal to the Comptroller General, who shall speedily determine the issue, and his decision shall be final: Provided further, That the base rate of pay which may be bid and accepted in awarding such contracts shall in no case exceed 33½ cents per airplane-mile for transporting a mail load not exceeding 300 pounds. Payment for transportation shall be at the base rate fixed in the contract for the first 300 pounds of mail or fraction thereof plus one-tenth of such base rate for each additional 100 pounds of mail or fraction thereof, computed at the end of each calendar month on the basis of the average mail load carried per mile over the route during such month, except that in no case shall payment exceed 40 cents per airplane-mile.

"Sec. 2. Section 3 (c) is amended to read as follows:

"If, in the opinion of the Postmaster General, the public interest requires it, he may grant extensions of any route, provided that the aggregate mileage of all such extensions on any route in effect at one time shall not exceed 200 miles, and that the rate of pay for such extensions shall not be in excess of the rate fixed for the service thus extended."

"Sec. 3. Section 3 (d) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General may designate certain routes as primary and as secondary routes. He shall designate as primary routes at least three transcontinental routes, with such termini as he may deem advisable, and, in addition thereto, such other routes as he may consider in the public interest, but no route less than 1,000 miles in length shall be designated as a primary route: Provided, That the present route from Seattle to San Diego may be held and regarded as other than a primary route: Provided further, That the eastern coastal route from Newark (or New York City, as the case may be) to Miami, Fla., and the southern transcontinental route from Boston via New York (or Newark, as the case may be) and Washington to Los Angeles, shall be designated as primary routes."

"Sec. 4. Section 3 (f) is amended to read as follows:

"The Postmaster General shall not award contracts for air mail routes or extend such routes in excess of an aggregate of 32,000 miles, and shall not pay for air mail transportation on such routes and extensions in excess of an annual aggregate of 45,000,000 airplane miles. Subject to the foregoing, the Postmaster General shall prescribe the number and frequency of schedules, intermediate regular stops, and time of departure of all planes carrying air mail, with due regard for the volume of mail carried over each route and for connecting schedules, and he may under such regulations as he may prescribe authorize and notwithstanding any other provisions of this act compensate for a special schedule or an extra or emergency trip in addition to any regular schedule over air mail routes or portions thereof at the same mileage rate paid for regular schedules on the contract route or routes, or at a lesser rate if agreed to by the contractor and the Postmaster General, and he may utilize therefor any scheduled passenger or express flight of the contractor between the terminal points or over a portion of any route whenever the needs of the service may so require: Provided, That the Postmaster General may, upon application by an air mail contractor, authorize said contractor for his own convenience to transport air mail on any nonmail schedule or plane, with the understanding that the weights of mail so transported will be credited to regular mail schedules and no mileage compensation will be claimed therefor and the miles flown in such cases will not be computed in the annual aggregate of flown mileage authorized under this section."

"Sec. 5. Subsection (a) of section 6 of such act of June 12, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 6. (a) The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby empowered and directed, after notice and hearing, to fix and determine by order, as soon as practicable and from time to time, the fair and reasonable rates of compensation within the limitations of this act for the transportation of air mail by airplane and the service connected therewith over each air mail route, and over each section thereof covered by a separate contract, prescribing the method or methods by weight or space, or both, or otherwise, for ascertaining such rates of compensation, and to publish the same, which shall continue in force until changed by the said Commission after due notice and hearing, and so much of subsection (g) of section 3 of said act as is in conflict with this section is hereby repealed."

"Sec. 6. Section 6 (e) of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows:

"In arriving at such determination the Commission shall disregard losses resulting, in the opinion of the Commission, from the unprofitable maintenance of nonmail schedules, in cases where the Commission may find that the gross receipts from such schedules fail to meet the additional operating expense occasioned thereby."

"In fixing and determining such rates, if it shall be contended or alleged by the holder of an air mail contract that the rate of compensation in force for the service involved is insufficient, the burden of establishing such insufficiency and the extent thereof shall be assumed by him. In no case shall the rates fixed and determined by the said Commission hereunder exceed the limits prescribed in section 3 (a) of this act."

"Sec. 7. Section 6 (b) is amended to read as follows:

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed at least once in each calendar year from the date of the award of any contract to examine the books, accounts, contracts, and entire business records of the contracting company, to review the rates of compensation to be paid to the holder of such contract in order to be assured that no unreasonable profit is being derived or accruing therefrom and in order to fix just rates. In determining what may constitute an unreasonable profit the said Commission shall take into consideration the income derived from the operation of airplanes over the routes affected, and in addition to the requirements of section 4 hereof, shall take into consideration all forms of expenditures of said companies in order to ascertain whether or not the expenditures have been upon a fair and reasonable basis on the part of said company and whether or not the said company has paid more than a fair and reasonable market value for the purchase or rent of planes, engines, or any other types or kind, or class, or goods, or services, including spare parts of all kinds, and whether or not the air mail contracting company has purchased or rented any kind of goods, commodities, or services from any individuals who own stock in or are connected with the said contracting companies or has purchased such goods and services from any company or corporations in which any of the individuals employed by or owning stock in the air mail contracting company have any interest or from which such purchase or rents any of the employees or stockholders of air mail contracting company would be directly or indirectly benefited."

"Within 30 days after a decision has been reached by the Interstate Commerce Commission touching such profit, a report of its results shall be made to the Postmaster General, to the Secretary of the United States Senate, and to the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

"Sec. 8. The first sentence of subsection (c) of section 6 is amended to read as follows:

"Any contract (1) let, extended, or assigned pursuant to the provisions of this act, and in full force and effect on March 1, 1935, or (2) which may be let subsequent to such date pursuant to the provisions of this act and shall have been satisfactorily performed by the contractor during its full initial period, shall, from and after such date, or from and after the termination of its initial period, as the case may be, be continued in effect for an indefinite period, and compensation therefor, on or after March 1, 1935, during such period of indefinite continuance, shall be paid at the rate fixed by order of the Commission under this act, subject to such additional conditions and terms as the Commission may prescribe, upon recommendation of the Postmaster General, which shall be consistent with the requirements and limitations contained in section 1 of this act; but any contract so continued in effect may be terminated for cause by the Commission upon 60 days' notice, upon such hearing and notice thereof to interested parties as the Commission may determine to be reasonable; and may also be terminated, in whole or in part, by mutual agreement of the Postmaster General and the contractor, or by the contractor at its option at 60 days' notice, or by the Postmaster General at his option at 60 days' notice."

"Sec. 9. Section 7 (d) is amended to read as follows:

"No person shall be qualified to enter upon the performance of, or thereafter to hold an air mail contract, (1) if, at or after the time specified for the commencement of mail transportation under such contract, such person is (or, if a partnership, association, or corporation, has) a member, officer, or director, or an employee performing general managerial duties, that is, an individual who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails: Provided, That whenever required by the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission the bidder shall submit an affidavit executed by the bidder, or by such of its officers, directors, or general managerial employees as the Postmaster General or Interstate Commerce Commission may designate, sworn to before an officer authorized and empowered to administer oaths, stating in such affidavit that the affiant has not entered nor proposed to enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails, nor made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person to bid or not to bid for any mail contract, or (2) if it pays any officer, director, or regular employee compensation in any form, whether as salary, bonus, commission, or otherwise, at a rate exceeding $17,500 per year for full time: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any such officer, director, or regular employee to draw a salary of more than $17,500 per year from any air mail contractor, or a salary from any other company if such salary from any company makes his total compensation more than $17,500 per year."

"Sec. 10. Section 13 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 13. It shall be a condition upon the holding of any air mail contract that the rate of compensation and the working conditions and relations for all pilots and other employees of the holder of such contract shall conform to decisions heretofore or hereafter made by the National Labor Board, or its successor in authority, notwithstanding any limitation as to the period of its effectiveness included in any such decision heretofore rendered. This section shall not be construed as restricting the right of any such employees by collective bargaining to obtain higher rates of compensation or more favorable working conditions and relations."

"Sec. 11. Section 15, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 15. After June 30, 1935, no person holding a contract or contracts for carrying air mail on a primary route shall be awarded or hold any contract for carrying air mail on any other primary route, nor on more than three additional routes other than primary routes. In case one person holds several contracts covering different sections of one air mail route as designated by the Postmaster General, such several contracts shall be counted as one contract for the purpose of the preceding sentence. It shall be unlawful for air mail contractors, competing in parallel routes, to merge or to enter into any agreement, express or implied, which may result in common control or ownership. After June 30, 1935, no air mail contractor shall be allowed to maintain passenger or express service off the line of his air mail route which in any way compares with passenger or express service available upon another air mail route, except that off-line competitive service which has been regularly maintained for at least 4 months next preceding July 1, 1935, and such seasonal schedules as may have been regularly maintained during the year prior to July 1, 1935, may be continued if restricted to the number of schedules and to the stops scheduled and in effect during such period or season: Provided, however, That if the Interstate Commerce Commission, after due notice to the Postmaster General and all parties in interest and a hearing thereon, shall be of the opinion that the public interest so requires, it may by order require the suspension or the decrease or may permit an increase in the frequency of such schedules.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby authorized to hear any complaint filed by the Postmaster General or any interested air mail contractor setting forth that the general transport business or earnings upon an air mail route are being adversely affected by any off-line flights, or extra schedules not provided for in the original contract, nor authorized by the Postmaster General, of another air mail contractor or for any alleged unfair practice by another air mail contractor. Upon the filing of such complaint the Commission shall give personal notice to the person complained of, inquire fully into the subject matter of the allegations; and if the Commission shall find such competition or practice, or any part thereof, to be unfair, or that such competitive service, in whole or in part, is not reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, then the Commission may enter an order requiring such air mail contractor to discontinue or restrict such competition or practice in accordance with the findings and order of the Commission, and the compensation of such air mail contractor shall be withheld while it continues to violate such order."

The amendments proposed in the present bill to the Air Mail Act of June 12, 1934, are as follows:

The first change is in section 3 (a), and the only change in that is the provision for 3 years instead of 1 year.

It should be further stated in connection with this first section of the present bill that the House bill proposed a further change by fixing the limit of pay 20 percent higher than the present law. Your committee does not approve of such a change, because in the Air Mail Act of June 12, 1934, both the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission were authorized to examine and audit the books, records, and accounts of air mail contractors, but neither the Postmaster General nor the Interstate Commerce Commission have examined as yet the books, accounts, and records of the air mail contractors, and your committee is of the opinion that until these are examined and reports made thereon that the limitations of 33½ cents and 40 cents, as provided in said section, should not be increased.

In addition to that your committee heard proof on that subject, and we herewith submit the proof of C. Bedell Munro, president of the Pennsylvania Airlines & Transport Co., who testified as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. For your own company, you would be satisfied with anything within 33 cents?

"Mr. MUNRO. And considerably lower than that for this particular route; yes, sir." (Hearings, p. 94.)

Again, Mr. Carlton Putnam, representative of the Chicago & Southern Airlines, testified as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. The first thing I want to ask you is: Don't you believe that 33½ cents is enough for carrying the mail?

"Mr. PUTNAM. I anticipated that question. At the moment, for us, my answer is 'Yes.'" (Hearings, p. 101.)

Again, Mr. S. J. Solomon, National Airways, Inc., testified as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. You get the highest limit from the Interstate Commerce Commission?

"Mr. SOLOMON. That is true. I think I can quote you exactly the statement.

"The CHAIRMAN. What did you bid on yours?

"Mr. SOLOMON. 29.5. May I quote you exactly the statement I made in the brief we filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission?

"The CHAIRMAN. Sure.

"Mr. SOLOMON. I think it runs like this:

"National Airways, Inc., bid what we thought was a fair and just rate for carrying the mail, air mail route 27. It therefore makes no request for any additional compensation."

"The CHAIRMAN. You still think so?

"Mr. SOLOMON. I still think so; yes, sir. However, we are not refusing the 33½ cents if we get it. We think that we are entirely satisfied with the—

"The CHAIRMAN. You bid 27—

"Mr. SOLOMON. 29.5.

"The CHAIRMAN. And they raised you to 33, but you are still willing to take 29?

"Mr. SOLOMON. We are still willing to take it, and I told the Second Assistant Postmaster General that within the last 2 weeks.

"The CHAIRMAN. You certainly are a candid man." (Hearings, p. 117.)

Again, the testimony of P. A. Wright, United Airlines Transport Corporation, was as follows:

"The CHAIRMAN. I am talking about 1, though. On that route what is your present rate?

"Mr. WRIGHT. 33½ cents on route 1.

"The CHAIRMAN. And the Interstate Commerce Commission reduced that to 31 cents?

"Mr. WRIGHT. That is right.

"The CHAIRMAN. Now, what rate did you have on 11?

"Mr. WRIGHT. On route 11 we originally bid 39.5 cents. The present rate is 33½ cents, and the allowable rate under the I. C. C. is 27.

"The CHAIRMAN. They reduced that rate?

"Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir.

"The CHAIRMAN. Now 12.

"Mr. WRIGHT. On route 12, we bid 39.5 cents.

"The CHAIRMAN. And your rate is now 33, and they are allowing you 33?

"Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir." (Hearings, p. 129.)

And, again:

"The CHAIRMAN. You want the limit taken off and yet on two of your routes, the two most important, the transcontinental and the Pacific route, they were both reduced by the Commission?

"Mr. WRIGHT. That is correct, they were reduced on route 1. On route 1 our original bid was 38 cents. The present rate of 33 has been reduced to 31. On route 11, 39.5; 33 cents reduced to 27." (Hearings, p. 130.)

And, again:

J. B. Condon, of the Central Air Lines, testified: His rate was definitely increased by the Interstate Commerce Commission from 14 cents to 23.8 cents, and he stated that he was entirely in accord with the provisions of the bill. (Hearings, p. 137.)

Again: Representatives of practically all of the contractors were present when the testimony was taken before our committee.

In the examination of Carlton Putnam:

"The CHAIRMAN. I only think you are asking something unreasonable. That is just my idea about it, and I think you are standing in your own light in making that request to the Congress at this time. I think that applies to others who feel the same way.

"I would like to know if there are any contractors here who believe that they cannot carry the mail for 33 cents. If there are any here I would like for them to hold up their hands and let us see.

"(In response to the request of the chairman there were no hands raised.)

"The CHAIRMAN. I do not see any hands held up.

"(Discussion off the record.)

"Mr. PUTNAM. I was under the impression that there were some contractors who felt that a fair rate would lie above 33 cents. If there are no contractors here today who agree with me on that point, I withdraw all the testimony I have inserted on that subject." (Hearings, pp. 109-110.)

It is true that Mr. Harlee Branch, Second Assistant Postmaster General in charge of Air Service, testified that he thought the limitation should be raised or eliminated altogether, as shown by the following:

"Mr. BRANCH. We have found in our experience in administering the air mail under the 1934 Air Mail Act that a number of the companies have, in conforming to the act, incurred considerable extra expense. We have found that out to our satisfaction.

"The CHAIRMAN. What expense is that?

"Mr. BRANCH. Senator, particularly because of the provision about the salaries of the pilots and new safety conditions laid down by the Bureau of Air Commerce.

"The CHAIRMAN. Have you got the dollars-and-cents increase of that because of those provisions?

"Mr. BRANCH. No" (p. 11).

It is true that Mr. Branch also, as shown in the letters filed with his evidence, as shown on pages 12 to 25, inclusive, produced letters from certain companies, claiming greater compensation to pilots and mechanics.

However, Mr. Edward G. Hamilton, representing the pilots, testified that this contention of Mr. Branch was incorrect. Mr. Hamilton thus testified:

"Mr. HAMILTON. There is one remark that Mr. Branch made that I think probably is in error, and I would like to correct it at this time. He said that some of the companies had come to him with a statement that the operating costs would be increased by the payment of the Labor Board's scale. As a matter of fact, it has not so resulted.

"The CHAIRMAN. Have you got any figures on that?

"Mr. HAMILTON. I can give you the figures from memory. Before the air mail cancellations the pilot cost was about 7 cents per airplane mile. With the adoption of the Labor Board's scale it stays at 7 cents at a speed of 100 miles per hour, but is reduced progressively with an increased speed, so that when you get up around 200 miles an hour, the pilot cost has been reduced to around 5 cents.

"The CHAIRMAN. In other words, you differ with Mr. Branch in his estimate of increased cost for pilots; you think it has been decreased from 7 to 5, instead of being increased to a higher sum?

"Mr. HAMILTON. That is so. The higher speed airplane results in a decreased cost per pilot" (p. 64).

And again it was given in evidence that the machinists' cost had been decreased instead of increased as shown by the evidence of Mr. David Kaplan on page 65 and following of the record.

It is true also that Mr. McManamy appeared before the chairman of the committee and urged that the rate limitation be taken off. But Mr. McManamy admitted that the only proof he had considered was the proof of some of the air mail contractors (p. 8).

However, as both the Postmaster General and the Interstate Commerce Commission had been authorized to examine the air mail contractors' books and had not done so, your committee does not feel that their requests for striking out the limitation should outweigh the proof of many witnesses, as quoted above, who were air mail contractors themselves, and the testimony heretofore given before committees of the Senate making an investigation of that subject.

Should an injustice be done to any company in the way of rates, the only fair way to determine it would be after a report is had from the Interstate Commerce Commission after a full examination of the particular books of that company is made by the Commission.

Your committee believes that the limitation of rates as fixed in the bill of June 12, 1934, is just and fair, and in no event should it be changed until an examination has been made and a report taken from the company's books.

Section 2 simply provides that extensions may be made by the Postmaster General of 200 miles instead of 100, as now provided by law.

Section 3 provides the line from Seattle to San Diego may be regarded as a secondary line instead of a primary line. The reason for this is that at present the United Air Lines, which has a transcontinental primary line, now owns the line from Seattle to San Diego, and many witnesses came from the Pacific coast to testify that they wanted the ownership of that line to remain as it is. All of the senatorial and some of the House Representatives of the Pacific coast desired the same thing. And upon testimony that the Post Office Department directed the routing of mail and that the United Air Lines would not have any advantages over the other two transcontinental lines, the first proviso is recommended by your committee.

In like manner and for like reasons the second proviso in this section was allowed in order to let the Department straighten out a difference for the eastern lines.

Section 4 provides that contracts may be awarded for 32,000 miles instead of 29,000, as now provided by law.

In addition, the Postmaster General is directed to compensate for special or emergency trips on the same terms as the regular trip, and under certain circumstances to transport air mail on any nonmail schedule or plane, and repeals so much of subsection (g) as is in conflict with that section.

Sections 6 and 7 merely add to what the Interstate Commerce Commission is allowed to consider in making rates, and specifically directs the Commission to examine the books of the several companies at least once a year.

Section 8 was redrawn so as to make the rates of the Commission effective.

Section 9 is simply an amendment to make section 7 (d) more specific as to the amount of salary which may be drawn by the officials of air mail companies.

Section 10 provides that the rate of compensation and working conditions for all pilots and other employees shall conform to the decision heretofore or hereafter made by the National Labor Board.

Section 11 changes the wording of section 15 by providing that if the Interstate Commerce Commission, after due notice to the Postmaster General and all parties in interest and a hearing thereon, shall be of the opinion that the public interest so requires, it may by order require the suspension or the decrease or may permit an increase in the frequency of such schedules.

This section is also amended by providing that if an air mail company disobeys the findings of the Commission, then the compensation of the air mail company shall be withheld while it continues to violate such findings.

Your committee reports the substituted bill favorably and recommends that it do pass.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 22d instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 82. An act to authorize the disposal of surplus personal property, including buildings, of the Emergency Conservation Work;

S. 1222. An act to further extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Garrison, N. Dak.;

S. 1342. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to Board of County Commissioners of Itasca County, Minn., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the road between the villages of Cohasset and Deer River, Minn.";

S. 1680. An act to include within the Deschutes National Forest, in the State of Oregon, certain public lands within the exchange boundaries thereof; and

S. 1987. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. SCHALL, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Norman Armour, of New Jersey, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Haiti, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Canada.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably Executive F, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, being an international convention for the protection of industrial property signed at London on June 2, 1934, and submitted a report (Exec. Rept. No. 9) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. MINTON:

A bill (S. 2887) authorizing the Perry County Bridge Commission of Perry County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cannellton, Ind.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CLARK:

A bill (S. 2888) to provide for the disposition, control, and use of surplus real property acquired by Federal agencies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2889) to authorize settlement, allowance, and payment of certain claims (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

A bill (S. 2890) for the relief of Ralph H. Lasher, whose name appears in the Army records as Ralph C. Lasher; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 2891) to provide for the adjustment and settlement of personal injury and death cases arising in certain foreign countries; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. GORE (by request):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 135) authorizing the President to make payment or settlement of the adjusted-service certificates issued to veterans of the World War, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. LONERGAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) authorizing the President of the United States of America to proclaim October 11, 1935, General Pulaski's Memorial Day for the observance and commemoration of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PEACE

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, on Sunday, May 19, 1935, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], Hon. Norman Hapgood, of New York, and Mr. Sherman Mittell, of Washington, D. C., engaged in a national broadcast on the subject of Peace, in the last of a series of American fireside discussions for the winter season 1934-35.

I ask unanimous consent that this discussion may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the discussion was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Opening announcement: An American fireside. Tonight our fireside host, Mr. Norman Hapgood, has invited as his guest the Honorable EDWARD P. COSTIGAN, United States Senator from Colorado.

Mr. Hapgood has just greeted Senator COSTIGAN and they are seated at the fireside with Sherman Mittell, of the National Home Library Foundation.

Mr. Mittell is speaking:

Mr. MITTELL. I am glad you could come down, Mr. Hapgood, even at the last moment. You know, Senator COSTIGAN, I rather forced Mr. Hapgood to come down.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Hapgood and I are old friends and I am very glad we are together again.

Mr. HAPGOOD. So am I, Senator, but I am so sorry not to have been here earlier so we could talk of many things before sitting down to have the whole country listen to us. I am sure you, at any rate, know what you want to say.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I certainly have something about which I feel very strongly. How did it happen your arrival was so sudden?

Mr. HAPGOOD. I had reluctantly dropped out of these fireside conversations for lack of time, but Mittell got on the telephone and told me I was really needed tonight in order to give a review of our series from October to May, in which time we have been endeavoring to work out something different from other radio features.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I like your plan for its informality and because it deals with fundamentals. How do you yourself express its purpose?

Mr. HAPGOOD. I will try to put it in words a little later. Just now please let me turn the tables on you. I know you have it in mind to say something about world peace. It is a subject on which I have been concentrating since 1914. Where do you stand on so large a subject?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Well, let us say this: So recently as 1917 America, in the name of "a war to end war", threw itself into a world conflict which, originating abroad, killed 10,000,000 human beings; made war wrecks of 20,000,000 others; destroyed property worth hundreds of billions of dollars; and eventually threatened all nations, including ours, guilty and innocent alike. That participation was, of course, consistent with supposed self-preservation, as public opinion in that hour interpreted events abroad. Since then, from 1919 to 1935, America has withheld full fellowship in the League of Nations and adherence to the World Court, concerning which the pros and cons have been repeatedly discussed, with particular reference to whether that association and Court can be used to bring and assure peace or are calculated to involve us in other foreign struggles.

Mr. HAPGOOD. What, in your opinion, Senator, has been the difficulty in the way of making more progress toward a system that would at least give good promise of keeping the peace?

Senator COSTIGAN. The age-old, fatal defect in international relations rests in the legal doctrine of lawless national sovereignty. The rule reserves to nations authority to refuse to settle disputes which any nation claims affects adversely its safety or domestic interests, as determined by itself. In other words, nations still insist on the privilege of being as anarchistic as they choose in the undefined no man's land between countries, in which each considers itself absolutely supreme. Nations do what no man any longer may, namely, legally murder, unrestrained. As human beings have become more civilized they have been forced to part with such claims of unhampered license to kill. But what citizens have surrendered nations still practice against each other under reserved war powers. Accordingly we sign pious assertions about war, such as those of the Kellogg-Briand Peace Pact, and at the same time discredit ourselves by voting huge Army and Navy appropriations. It follows that until we recognize and prove in a real—not theoretical—sense that we belong to an international community permitting peacefully adjusted controversies, there can be no individual, national, or world security. By giving to a central national government such powers, the Thirteen Original Colonies and the Territories which later became States built the American Union.

Mr. HAPGOOD. The first sharply defined statement that the future of civilization was in danger from the growth of nationalism was, as far as I know, made by Lord Bryce after a trip around the world several years before the World War. He visited many countries that he had visited a few years before and found in all of them a rapid increase of nationalism. This increase filled him with such alarm that he tried to wake up the governments of the leading countries to the need of taking steps to combat it. We need leaders like Bryce, who not only have the right feeling but who also know the world. The mere pacifism that does not deal with conditions in each one of the leading countries is certainly not adequate. To check the disease of nationalism requires an education in modes of thinking, in grasp of fundamental facts, and also, of course, in the right kind of feeling.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; we need arguments of the heart as well as of the mind. Writing under the spur and agony of a veteran's life in the filth and wretchedness of war trenches, Henri Barbusse, that brilliant French soldier of the World War, summed up his conclusions in these burning words:

"The peoples of the world ought to come to an understanding.

"After all, why do we make war? We don't know at all why. . . . We shall be forced to see that if every nation every day brings the fresh bodies of young men to the god of war to be lacerated, it's for the pleasure of a few. . . .

"How many are the crimes of which they have made virtues merely by dowering them with the word 'national'? . . .

For the truth which is eternally the same they substitute each their national truth. So many nations, so many truths; thus they falsify the truth.

"All those who for one reason or another cling to the ancient state of things and find or invent excuses for it—they are your enemies.

"They are your enemies as much as those German soldiers are today, who are prostrate here between you in the mud, who are only poor dupes hatefully deceived and brutalized. . . . They are your enemies, wherever they were born, however they pronounce their names, whatever the language in which they lie."

Mr. HAPGOOD. Certainly if everybody felt and thought like Henri Barbusse there would be no war. His book, which was translated into English under the name, if I remember, of Fire (or we might translate the title, the Conflagration) gives us war as it actually is, not in its poisonous melodramatic glory. But Barbusse is more a citizen of a civilized world than merely of one fragment of that world. He sees not only his own France but mankind. His own mode of thinking makes it more possible for him to contribute to progress than it is for anybody who has been filled up with a motto of "my country—right or wrong."

Mr. COSTIGAN. Whether right or wrong, the action of our country on World Court and League of Nations, consistently taken and maintained, on final analysis is recognized as an expression of the majority view of self-preserving policies in a self-governing democracy. But so much being conceded, we having so decided, if we are to sustain our reputation for sanity, America will, soon or late—and the sooner the better—find it impossible to limit itself to negative action. Our country must offer intelligent citizens an alternative and affirmative program. America has committed itself to the Kellogg-Briand declaration that war shall no longer be an instrument of national policy and the settlement of international controversies shall only be sought by pacific means. Yet we and other countries that have taken this splendid pledge have failed to give reality to the declaration other than by armaments and more armaments, until at last the World War poet, who threw himself into the consuming fires of war with the song on his lips, "I have a rendezvous with death", appears now at times to be but a tragic symbol of a perishing civilization.

Mr. HAPGOOD. I am an optimist, and I believe that our civilization will not be destroyed like the civilization of Greece and Rome. We may suffer terrible set-backs, but I think we shall learn our lessons before we are completely overthrown.

Mr. COSTIGAN. H. G. Wells, the noted English author, who, through his Outline of History, has equipped himself to speak with a rare sense of proportion on human affairs, treats history as "a race between education and catastrophe." When in Washington a few weeks ago, he told some of us at the Capitol that to his intense regret his present judgment is that education is losing and catastrophe is winning that race.

More recently he stated the basis of that view in these words:

"Mankind has still to achieve any world-wide mental unity. . . . Power—gigantic power—has come to us, and we can use it only in mutual injury according to the methods of the warring past. Plenty overwhelms us, and we do not know how to distribute or use the wealth we can now produce. . . . Invention and scientific knowledge have taken our hearts and imaginations by surprise. Our social and political ideas, our morals, our ambitions, our courage have had as yet no corresponding expansion. Man discovers he is Nature's misfit; he reveals himself now an evasive little creature. . . . Man is today a challenged animal. He has to respond successfully to the challenge or he will be overwhelmed like any other insufficiently adaptable animal."

Mr. HAPGOOD. Wells is a fertile thinker, a useful challenger, and he likes to shock people. He likes to make them sit up and take notice. Thus he brings into the foreground one side of the truth. But I am not among those who believe nothing has come of the attempts to improve international intercourse since 1914.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Let nothing I am saying be interpreted as wanting in respect for efforts, in previous Congresses and the present, to curb activities of citizens, which, in the last war, in spite of our determined declarations and practices of neutrality, helped to draw us into bloody conflicts we long sought to avoid as alien and outlawed. Yet what lesson do they teach? In 1916 Woodrow Wilson was reelected President of the United States by voters who endorsed him for keeping us out of the very war into which, within 5 months thereafter, we entered, notwithstanding that solemn dedication of ourselves and America to peace. Remembering that experience, to which far-scattered World War cemeteries with their 10,000,000 dead, the continuing burdens of war debts, and ever-present obligations to our own veterans daily testify, how may we content ourselves with insufficient barriers, however sensible in themselves, against oncoming wars which today menace all life and property?

Mr. HAPGOOD. We need indignation like yours, Senator; we need pity like that of Barbusse, with his bitter knowledge of what war is and his knowledge of a so-called "patriotism" that leads to war. We need warnings like those of Wells. In spite of the truth in these warnings, however, and in spite of all obstacles, Wilson's great dream, it seems to me, has been and will be a valuable heritage. I think it was never better put than by the British publisher Brailsford, who, although in many ways opposed to Wilson, warned readers to remember that when Wilson is criticized he is criticized for not sufficiently reaching ideals which were created in the public mind by him.

Senator COSTIGAN. What are some of the more immediate proposals to check or limit another war? The refusal of passports to citizens seeking, in case of another war, to enter danger zones; embargoes on financial contributions and trade with citizens of other nations when at war and on shipments of arms and munitions; restricted profits during war; conscription of men and money; and, more recently, a renewed effort to cooperate with the League of Nations, with the complete reservation of independent rights acting under our Constitution of final decision with respect to the enforcement of any League decisions.

However dictated by common sense, however guided by vision and national unity these devices, does anyone believe that any or all of them sufficiently safeguard peace, with clear history recalling the provocations, month by month and year by year, which finally sucked us into all-engulfing war whirlpools between 1914 and 1918? On the contrary, are not the well-intended proposals of Senators Nye, Clark, Pope, and others mere palliatives in the initial stages of what may prove to be universal disaster?

Mr. HAPGOOD. Of course, no plan is worth anything unless governments and populations are willing to use it. No plan is fool-proof or proof against national ignorance and suspicion. Before we finish I hope to see a little on the cheerful side, but I admit, Senator, the discouraging amount of narrow nationalist feeling in Europe and in the United States.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We are, indeed, forced back on the decision whether peoples and nations, fearing and hating war, can practice to some reasonable extent before it is too late the ancient preaching: All for each and each for all. To that objective all intelligent men and women in every civilized nation in the world may well bend their full energies of mind, heart, and spirit, summoning to their support all forces of education, religion, science, psychology, and economic interest, until, if our consecration is intense enough, the goal shall be won and mankind may enter the scientific and humane era of peace on earth, good will to men, to which the noblest prophets have pointed from the beginning. Only by summoning to our assistance our full powers and by concentrating on the objective of universal well-being till we achieve it can we break and escape the vicious circle of murderous slaughter, illimitable debt, national and international bankruptcy, and a world finally robbed of its resources, until the survivors, if any, of the human race toil hopelessly on the face of a planet once richly equipped for the comfort and happiness of human beings, but finally reduced to an impoverished prison of unending toil. Let us learn and declare, once and for all, that we are through with idle pronouncements for peace, and will waste no further time in discussions with those for whom peace, like paradise, has become an unreal and remote abstraction, toward which meaningless and sentimental tears and prayers are directed, in place and satisfaction of life's more immediate, neglected obligations. Thus to adore peace is to betray it. True peace will never be captured until a new world sees and determines to achieve it for what it really is—a life-saving, creative, and amazingly beautiful reality. It cannot be won by anything less than adventurous, generous, and measureless courage; matchless imagination; and absolute dedication to those manifestations of democratic equality and economic welfare, of which peace itself is, after all, a priceless byproduct.

In spite of every falsehood ever uttered about it, peace is ceaselessly and constructively active, not insipidly passive. It is positive, not negative. It perpetually challenges all worthwhile potentialities of mankind. It is the only unbreakable guarantee of material and human conservation. It is as superior to war as life to death.

Peace will never be permanently gained until men and women are organized for fraternity, not hostility; disinterestedness, not prejudice; science, not wanton waste. To banish war is the stupendous task set before a generation in some respects ill-prepared to meet it. Its tests are almost certain to be applied within a staggeringly limited time. Yet the contest must be waged and the issue grappled with, for the prize is all that the present and future hold of value to human beings. Like travelers caught in quicksands we sink even as we speak. Time is merciless. We must extricate ourselves at once by heroic means, or disappear, traceless and forever, from a whirling planet abandoned to the formless void from which it came.

Peace is a paradox. However unreal its outward features, it remains at heart miraculously true. Always rejected by place and power, the dream of peace guides our desperate and doomed world from bondage toward freedom and happiness. We know that unless men and women captain and cherish peace, the sun of our civilization is hastening to its setting. Yet, even while we speak, the nations marshal their armies, pile up death-dealing devices—machines, chemicals, explosives, and the rest—as fatal playthings for brave, blameless boys, in their dawn of manhood in all lands, to make inevitable the last Armageddon, for which none will confess their shamed but shared responsibility. Today, as thousands of years ago, the moralist sounds a warning: "From the greatest to the least, everyone is given to covetousness; and prophet, and priest deal falsely, saying, 'Peace, peace, when there is no peace.'"

Mr. HAPGOOD. Of that fervid spirit, Senator, we have every need. Have you no explanation of just why our governments and our peoples have been behaving so badly?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is a bitterly hard question to answer. Why does leadership fail us, and why do we desert that leadership, as it seeks to conquer the evident and final disaster which lurks along our horizon, ready to overwhelm us and all we hold sacred? Is it because evil resolutely and forever invents new excuses for world chaos, even at the moment when constructive achievements destroy old war causes? One by one former incitements to war have largely disappeared—enslavement of labor; plundered treasuries and lands; and racial and religious rivalries. They have been successively banished by public opinion, formed and strengthened by modern education, rooted in science. Yet from their sowing of dragons' teeth newly armed warriors are ever springing; blind nationalism, economic misery, and inequality; mighty armies, navies, and armaments stimulating the very fear and competitive hostility they are presumably intended to allay; and, most modern and subtly dangerous of all, insidious propaganda, inspired by limitless greed, checked by no principle of truth, honor, or respect, individual, national, or international; sleeplessly active and boundlessly cruel; hurrying us, by falsehood, past truths we discover only too late, to deeds which curse us till we die, and rob us thereafter of mercy for our immortal souls. Whatever the causes of war and wherever hidden, a new and alert generation must check and eradicate them, root and seed, one and all. Here is a task of living conservation worthy of the mightiest sons and daughters the world has ever known. For this labor youth and genius are indispensable. We must conscript more than that virtue which masks exhausted vice, and other advocates of peace than those whose devotion has been wrung from war-worn repentance. For this supreme conquest we must enlist a new generation of pioneers who will not compromise or retreat whatever the cost, or however long and bitter the way, until their intelligence and valor shall have chained into service all machine monsters and mysteries of science which threaten our security. We who invented these murderous tools of our modern world, now that they turn to crush us, must control them in the name of public service, and thus liberate a golden world of science, research, free discussion, law, liberty, equality, and happiness, assuring and assured by peace.

Mr. MITTELL. Now, Mr. Hapgood, Senator COSTIGAN has made clear his conviction that a revolution in thinking and in feeling in the principal nations is required if the world is to be saved. You have hinted that you are a little more optimistic. How do you manage your cheerfulness?

Mr. HAPGOOD. As I have not been long off the train and have scarcely been able to pull my thoughts together, I am going to answer your question, Sherman, by reading you an editorial of mine, published less than a month ago, as this editorial may answer your question. It runs like this: "To declare that there will be another major war is an indication of inferior thinking, just as to declare that peace is certain would also be absurd."

"When the forces making for war and the forces making for peace are to some extent balanced, and when these forces are constantly changing we may express our feelings in the form of chances, but we cannot intelligently prophesy more definitely."

A few weeks ago, when the war scare in the newspaper headlines was at its most furious, I was asked the usual question, and replied, "the chances of war within a year are one against five and a half." I was joking, in pretending to be so exact, but imagine my surprise when the next day I learned that Lloyd's, in giving insurance against the consequences of war, was estimating the probabilities as one against six and one against five—varying, I suppose, from day to day.

A powerful factor in bringing on war is the belief that it is inevitable. If it is inevitable, each country wishes to be able to strike, and is often afraid to wait. The newspapers arouse more interest, and have larger sales, if they excite people about the situation than if they calm them. Therefore, the news that is alarming is presented with more enthusiasm than are the indications favorable to peace; and this psychological truth enables some newspapers to make peace decidedly more difficult.

Danger of war just now grows out, obviously, of the fact that the chief defeated nation in the war is not satisfied and is very strong. Understanding this, Woodrow Wilson wished there might not be victors and victims in the settlement, but he was overruled, and we are paying for the departure from his opinion. He wished also to make the world safe for democracy, and was laughed at for the wish, yet could he come back he would see Germany thrown from her experiment in modern democracy, back to a silly and savage despotism, because she has not been treated in his spirit, and her people became desperate, bitter, and unbalanced.

Few seem to realize how much better is our chance of peace because all the problems and conflicts are now discussed in the open. Few put sufficient emphasis on the constant meetings and discussions, whether they are conclusive or not. Great Britain, in the summer of 1914, endeavored in vain to secure a delay for discussion of only a few days, and could not. If she had succeeded in postponing mobilization for 3 or 4 days the war might have been avoided. The World War started in the shooting of an archduke. In 1934, 20 years later, the King of Yugoslavia and the Prime Minister of France were shot and killed and nothing happened. "Light", said Emerson, "is the best policeman." It is because of the new constant publicity that my hopes for continued avoidance of war are high.

Mr. MITTELL. Your view, Mr. Hapgood, and Senator COSTIGAN's seem to me alike both in feeling and in purpose. They differ, if at all, only in emphasis.

Mr. HAPGOOD. I agree, and I most earnestly thank the Senator for his brave emphasis on inflamed nationalism both abroad and at home. It takes no courage to scold other countries, but it does take courage to say that our own people must bear the blame equally with foreigners. What a difference between Senator COSTIGAN and those, many of them in positions of power, who are perfectly willing to seek an easy popularity by telling our people that they are 100 percent free of blame in the world situation and that the other great countries are moved by much lower motives than we are.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No one who knows Norman Hapgood questions his complete right to speak as he has done tonight—with compelling hope and balanced judgment. In peace and war, here and abroad, using his great influence for the general welfare, he has always been, if not master of his fate, at least captain of his soul. Before such human warmth the snows of pessimism must melt. He speaks from an immortally young heart with wisdom, and Mr. Mittell here voices for youth the same wisdom that is not limited to years. It is a privilege to share the fireside with these rare persons and to join in their hope that armed conflict is never again to ambush and destroy the youth of the world.

Mr. MITTELL. Senator, I wish to join my thanks with those of Mr. Hapgood. If we increase, however little, the understanding of what is the matter and what is needed, such conversations as this will not have been in vain.

FARM CREDIT ACT OF 1935—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on Senate bill 1384.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The conference report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1384), to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the House insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'Farm Credit Act of 1935.'

"Sec. 2. (a) Section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1016), is further amended by striking out of the third sentence the following: 'and made for the purpose of reducing and refinancing an existing mortgage.'

"(b) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the fifth sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'Loans may be made under this section for any of the purposes for which Federal land banks are authorized by law to make loans, and for the following additional purpose, and none other: Refinancing, either in connection with proceedings under chapter VIII of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended, or otherwise, any indebtedness, secured or unsecured, of the farmer, or which is secured by a lien on all or any part of the farm property accepted as security for the loan.'

"(c) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the seventh sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'As used in this section, (1) the term "farmer" means any person who is at the time, or shortly to become, bona fide engaged in farming operations, either personally or through an agent or tenant, or the principal part of whose income is derived from farming operations or livestock raising, and includes a personal representative of a deceased farmer; (2) the term "person" includes an individual or a corporation engaged in the raising of livestock; and (3) the term "corporation" includes any incorporated association; but no such loan shall be made to a corporation (A) unless all the stock of the corporation is owned by individuals themselves personally actually engaged in the raising of livestock on the land to be mortgaged as security for the loan, except in a case where the Land Bank Commissioner permits the loan if at least 75 per centum in value and number of shares of the stock of the corporation is owned by the individuals personally actually so engaged, and (B) unless the owners of at least 75 per centum in value and number of shares of the stock of the corporation assume personal liability for the loan. No loan shall be made to any corporation which is a subsidiary of, or affiliated (either directly or through substantial identity of stock ownership) with, a corporation ineligible to procure a loan in the amount applied for.'

"(d) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the eighth and ninth sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'Until February 1, 1940, the Land Bank Commissioner shall, in his name, make loans under this section on behalf of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, and may make such loans in cash or in bonds of the corporation, or if acceptable to the borrower, in consolidated farm loan bonds; but no such loans shall be made by him after February 1, 1940, except for the purpose of refinancing loans previously made by him under this section. As much as may be necessary of the assets of the corporation, including the bonds (and proceeds thereof) issued under section 4 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, may be used for the purposes of this section.'

"(e) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: 'Any Federal land bank, when duly authorized by the Land Bank Commissioner and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, shall have the power to execute any instrument relating to any mortgage taken to secure a loan made or to be made under this section, or relating to any property included in any such mortgage, or relating to any property acquired by the Land Bank Commissioner and/or the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. Any such instrument heretofore or hereafter executed on behalf of the Land Bank Commissioner and/or the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation by a Federal land bank, through its duly authorized officers, shall be conclusively presumed to have been duly authorized by the Land Bank Commissioner and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation.'

"Sec. 3. (a) Effective July 1, 1935, the first sentence of paragraph 'Twelfth' of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the following: 'Within two years after such date, shall not exceed 4½ per centum per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of five years commencing sixty days after the date this paragraph takes effect; and no payment of the principal portion of any installment of any such loan shall be required during such five-year period if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage', and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'after such date, shall not exceed 3½ per centum per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of one year commencing July 1, 1935, and shall not exceed 4 per centum per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of two years commencing July 1, 1936; and no payment of the principal portion of any installment of any such loan outstanding on the date of the enactment of the Farm Credit Act of 1935 shall be required prior to July 11, 1938, if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage.'

"(b) Effective July 1, 1935, the second sentence of such paragraph 'Twelfth' is amended by striking out the following: 'the rate of interest on such loans for such five-year period shall be 5 per centum in lieu of 4½ per centum', and inserting in lieu thereof: 'the rates of interest paid for the respective periods above specified shall be one-half of 1 per centum per annum in excess of the rates of interest paid during the corresponding periods by borrowers on mortgage loans made through national farm loan associations'.

"Sec. 4. The fourth sentence of section 24 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 913), is further amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That the declaration and payment of any such dividend shall be subject to the approval of the Land Bank Commissioner.'

"Sec. 5. (a) Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 202 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1031), is further amended by striking out that portion of the paragraph which follows the second semicolon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'and to discount for, or purchase from, any production credit association or bank for cooperatives organized under the Farm Credit Act of 1933, or any production credit association in which a Production Credit Corporation organized under such Act holds stock, with its indorsement, any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other such obligation presented by such association or bank, and to make loans and advances direct to any such association or bank secured by such collateral as may be approved by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration;'

"(b) Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of such section 202, as amended, is further amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: 'at such rates of commission as may be approved by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration.'

"(c) Subsection (d) of such section 202, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1034), is hereby repealed.

"Sec. 6. (a) Subsection (a) of section 203 of the Federal Farm Loan Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 1041) is amended by striking out the proviso and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'Provided, That the aggregate amount of the outstanding debentures and similar obligations issued individually by any Federal intermediate credit bank, together with the amount of outstanding consolidated debentures issued for its benefit and account, shall not exceed ten times the surplus and paid-in capital of such bank.'

"(b) Such section 203 (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1041-1043) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) Whenever it shall appear desirable to issue consolidated debentures of the twelve Federal intermediate credit banks and to sell them through a common selling agency, and the Federal intermediate credit banks shall, by resolutions, consent to the same, the banks may issue and sell said debentures subject to the provisions of this section and the provisions of section 21 of Title I of this Act, insofar as applicable. As used in this Act, the term "debentures" includes such consolidated debentures.

"(e) All debentures issued by Federal intermediate credit banks shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or of any officer or officers thereof.'

"Sec. 7. Subsection (a) of section 204 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1051), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Any Federal intermediate credit bank may, with the approval of the Intermediate Credit Commissioner, from time to time establish rates of discount and interest which, except with the approval of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, shall not exceed by more than 1 per centum per annum the rate borne by the last preceding issue of debentures which it issued or in which it participated. Any Federal intermediate credit bank may be required by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration to acquire, upon such terms as he may approve, loans and/or discounts of any other Federal intermediate credit bank.

"Sec. 8. Section 208 of the Federal Farm Loan Act (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1091-1094) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) The executive departments, boards, commissions, and independent establishments of the Government, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Reserve banks are severally authorized, under such conditions as they may prescribe, to make available to any Federal intermediate credit bank, in confidence, upon the request of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, such reports, records, or other information as they may have available relating to the condition of any institution to which a Federal intermediate credit bank has made, or contemplates making, loans, or which it is using, or contemplates using, as a custodian of securities or other credit instruments, or as a depository."

"Sec. 9. Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 7 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141e), is further amended to read as follows:

"(2) the construction or acquisition by purchase or lease, or refinancing the cost of such construction or acquisition, of physical facilities."

"Sec. 10. Paragraph (1) of subsection (c) of section 7 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141e), is further amended to read as follows:

"(1) No loan shall be made in an amount in excess of 60 per centum of the appraised value of the security therefor."

"Sec. 11. Subsection (a) of section 8 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141f), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Loans to any cooperative association shall bear such rates of interest as the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration shall from time to time determine to be necessary for the needs of the lending agencies and shall by regulation prescribe (but in no case shall the rate of interest exceed 6 per centum per annum on the unpaid principal): Provided, however, That the rate of interest on any loan made under the provisions of section 7 (a) (1) hereof, other than upon the security of commodities, shall conform as nearly as may be practicable to a rate 1 per centum in excess of the prevailing interest rate paid by production credit associations to the Federal intermediate credit bank of the land bank district in which the principal business office of the borrower is located; the rate of interest on any loan made upon the security of commodities shall conform, as nearly as may be practicable, to the prevailing interest rate on commodity loans charged borrowers from the Federal intermediate credit bank of the land bank district in which the principal business office of the borrower is located; and that the rate of interest on any loan made under the provisions of section 7 (a) (2) hereof shall conform as nearly as may be practicable to the prevailing rate on mortgage loans made to members of national farm loan associations."

"Sec. 12. Subsection (a) of section 15 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141j), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) As used in this act, the term "cooperative association" means any association in which farmers act together in processing, preparing for market, handling, and/or marketing the farm products of persons so engaged, and also means any association in which farmers act together in purchasing, testing, grading, processing, distributing, and/or furnishing farm supplies and/or farm business services: Provided, however, That such associations are operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof as such producers or purchasers and conform to one or both of the following requirements:

"First. That no member of the association is allowed more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital he may own therein; and

"Second. That the association does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of 8 per centum per annum.

"And in any case to the following:

"Third. That the association shall not deal in farm products, farm supplies, and farm business services with or for nonmembers in an amount greater in value than the total amount of such business transacted by it with or for members. All business transacted by any cooperative association for or on behalf of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof shall be disregarded in determining the volume of member and nonmember business transacted by such association."

"Sec. 13. Section 34 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 34. Subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Chairman of its Board of Directors, the Central Bank is authorized: (a) to make loans to cooperative associations, as defined in the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, for any of the purposes and subject to the conditions and limitations set forth in such act, as amended; (b) to make loans (by way of discount or otherwise) to banks for cooperatives organized under section 2 of this act; (c) to buy from, and sell to, any such bank or any Federal intermediate credit bank any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other obligation; and (d) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, any and all such banks."

"Sec. 14. Section 41 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1134c) is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 41. Subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Governor, the banks for cooperatives are authorized: (a) to make loans to cooperative associations as defined in the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, for any of the purposes and subject to the conditions and limitations set forth in such act, as amended; (b) to make loans (by way of discount or otherwise) to any bank organized under this act; (c) to buy from, and sell to, any such bank or any Federal intermediate credit bank any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other obligation; and (d) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, any and all such banks."

"Sec. 15. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 35 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1134k) is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "except that, in connection with any loan made on the security of commodities, the borrower shall be required to own, at the time the loan is made, only such amount of stock as may be prescribed by rules and regulations of the Governor."

"(b) Subsection (a) of such section 35 is further amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Upon discharge of the loan, stock held by the borrowing association may be, and upon the concurrent or subsequent request of the borrowing association shall be, retired and canceled, and the association shall be paid therefor an amount equal to the amount paid for such stock or loaned to subscribe therefor, as the case may be, minus the pro rata impairment, if any, of capital and guaranty fund of the Central Bank, as determined by the Chairman of the Board of the Central Bank."

"(c) Such section 35 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) In any case where the debt of a borrower to the Central Bank is in default, the bank may, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Governor, retire and cancel all or a part of the stock of the defaulting borrower at the fair book value thereof (not exceeding par), in total or partial liquidation of the debt, as the case may be."

"Sec. 16. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 30 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 is amended by striking out the words "two years" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "four years".

"(b) The fourth sentence of subsection (b) of such section 30 is amended:

"(1) By striking out the words "occurring more than sixty days after the date of enactment of this act", and

"(2) By striking out the words "a period of two years from the date of enactment of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "a period of two years from the date of the enactment of the Farm Credit Act of 1935".

"Sec. 17. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 31 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 is amended by striking out the words "for two years from the date of the enactment of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "until May 13, 1937".

"(b) Subsection (b) of such section 31 is amended by striking out the words "such two-year period" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the period of postponement".

"(c) The first sentence of the act entitled "An Act to authorize production credit associations to make loans to oyster planters", approved June 18, 1934 (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 1131j), is amended by striking out the following: "who are carrying on their operations under leases of oyster beds granted by any State or political subdivision thereof".

"Sec. 18. Paragraph "Sixth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 771), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this paragraph (1) the term "person" includes an individual or a corporation engaged in the raising of livestock; and (2) the term "corporation" includes any incorporated association; but no such loan shall be made to a corporation (A) unless all the stock of the corporation is owned by individuals themselves personally actually engaged in the raising of livestock on the farm to be mortgaged as security for the loan, except in a case where the Land Bank Commissioner permits the loan if at least 75 per centum in value and number of shares of the stock of the corporation is owned by the individuals personally actually so engaged, and (B) unless the owners of at least 75 per centum in value and number of shares of the stock of the corporation assume personal liability for the loan. No loan shall be made to any corporation which is a subsidiary of, or affiliated (either directly or through substantial identity of stock ownership) with, a corporation ineligible to procure a loan in the amount applied for."

"Sec. 19. (a) The first sentence of the sixth paragraph of section 7 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 716), is amended to read as follows: "Ten or more persons who are the owners, or about to become the owners, of farm lands qualified as security for a mortgage loan under section 12 of this act, may unite to form a national farm-loan association."

"(b) The sixth paragraph of such section 7 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "As used in this section, the term "person" includes an individual, an incorporated association, and a corporation which is eligible for a loan under section 12 of this act."

"Sec. 20. (a) The first sentence of the fifth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 745), is amended by striking out the words 'any natural person' and inserting in lieu thereof 'any person.'

"(b) The fifth paragraph of such section 9 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: 'As used in this section, the term "person" includes an individual, an incorporated association, and a corporation which is eligible for a loan under section 12 of this act.'

"Sec. 21. The first sentence of the first paragraph of section 31 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 981), is amended to read as follows: 'Any applicant for a loan under this act, or officer or representative of any such applicant, who shall knowingly make any false statement in the application for such loan, and any member of a loan committee or any appraiser provided for in this act who shall willfully overvalue any land offered as security for loans under this act, shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.'

"Sec. 22. Paragraph 'Fifth' of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 771), is further amended by inserting after the third sentence thereof the following: 'In determining the earning power of land used for the raising of livestock, due consideration shall be given to the extent to which the earning power of the fee-owned land is augmented by a lease or permit, granted by lawful authority of the United States or of any State, for the use of a portion of the public lands of the United States or of such State, where such permit or lease is in the nature of a right adjunctive to such fee-owned land, and its availability for use as such during the terms of the loan is reasonably assured.'

"Sec. 23. On and after the date of enactment of this act no person shall be eligible for appointment or election as an administrative or executive official or as a member of the board of directors of a Federal land bank, or shall continue to hold office as such member or as an ex-officio director of a Federal intermediate credit bank or of any corporation or bank organized pursuant to the Farm Credit Act of 1933, if such person has been finally adjudged guilty of a felony, or finally adjudged liable in damages in any civil proceeding for fraud, in any State or Federal court.

"Sec. 24. (a) If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"(b) The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

And the House agree to the same.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,

ROBERT D. CAREY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARVIN JONES,
H. P. FULMER,
WALL DOXEY,
CLIFFORD R. HOPE,
J. ROLAND KINZER,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think an explanation should be made of the conference report, particularly with reference to the Wheeler amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, this is a bill to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes.

The bill has been in conference, and the Senate conferees acceded to certain amendments made in the House which are not substantial or important. Finally, the conferees agreed on the bill almost as it passed the Senate. The House adopted the conference report.

Some suggestion was made about the Wheeler amendment, section 26 of the bill. That was modified, and the Senate accepted the House provision. It is now in the bill as section 3, and it provides as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) Effective July 1, 1935, the first sentence of paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the following: "within 2 years after such date, shall not exceed 4½ percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 5 years commencing 60 days after the date this paragraph takes effect; and no payment of the principal portion of any installment of any such loan shall be required during such 5-year period if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage", and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "after such date, shall not exceed 3½ percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 1 year commencing July 1, 1935, and shall not exceed 4 per centum per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 2 years commencing July 1, 1936; and no payment of the principal portion of any installment of any such loan outstanding on the date of the enactment of the Farm Credit Act of 1935 shall be required prior to July 11, 1938, if the borrower shall not be in default with respect to any other condition or covenant of his mortgage."

In other words, the amendment provides that payment for 1 year shall not exceed 3½ percent, ending July 1, 1936—

And shall not exceed 4 per centum per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 2 years commencing July 1, 1936.

Mr. McNARY. A point of order. May I suggest that the Senator suspend until order is obtained in the Senate and in the galleries? It is impossible to hear the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Sergeant at Arms, if necessary, to restore order in the Chamber as well as in the galleries. The Chair begs to call the attention of the occupants of the galleries to the fact that a little conversation in the galleries of any kind disturbs the Senate very much, more than the occupants of the galleries can appreciate. The Chair will ask the occupants of the galleries to refrain from any kind of conversation while the Senate is transacting its business.

The Senator from Florida will proceed.

Mr. FLETCHER. It will be recalled, Mr. President, that the Senate adopted section 26 of the bill, reducing the interest to 3½ percent for 5 years, or approximately that. That provision has been modified by the House by making the interest rate 3½ percent for 1 year; then 4 percent for 2 years, the interest then to become 4½ percent. The Senate conferees accepted that. I think that is a full explanation of the report.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. I understand the modification provides that the lower interest rate shall apply for but 1 year?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is to be 3½ percent for 1 year, 4 percent for 2 years, and after that time 4½ percent.

Mr. McNARY. What is the amount of money an applicant may borrow under the lower rate of interest?

Mr. FLETCHER. It has nothing to do with the amount of money an applicant may borrow.

Mr. McNARY. The Wheeler amendment, as I recall, prescribed the rate of interest to be paid by the farmers on farm mortgages.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; but they have already borrowed.

Mr. McNARY. Then, the bill applies to loans heretofore made but does not apply to future loans?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not understand that it does.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to know. I had an impression—I am not a member of the committee—that it applied to future loans. If so, it seems to me the provision referred to is utterly impracticable.

Mr. FLETCHER. The language is to insert in lieu thereof the following:

After such date, shall not exceed 3½ percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within the period of 1 year—

And after that 4 percent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, the change which was made in conference in the Wheeler amendment was that the time is limited to 1 year instead of 3 years, as was provided by the amendment?

Mr. FLETCHER. It limits the 3½-percent rate to 1 year; and then the rate is to be 4 percent.

Mr. BORAH. The Wheeler amendment provided for a rate of 3½ percent for 3 years. Now the report of the conferees limits it to 3½ percent for 1 year?

Mr. FLETCHER. It limits it to 1 year, and then that is followed by a 2-year period with 4-percent interest. The 3½ percent will apply for 1 year, for 2 years 4 percent, and then the rate will be 4½ percent.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, does the 3½-percent rate apply to all loans that have been made up to this date? To what is it applicable? Does the 3½-percent rate apply for only 1 year?

Mr. FLETCHER. It applies on all loans that have been made.

Mr. SMITH. On all loans heretofore made?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. I understand that it will probably cost something like $12,000,000 to the Treasury for the first year, and after that the cost will diminish until the difference is absorbed.

Mr. SMITH. The rate will be 3½ percent for 1 year and 4 percent for 2 years; then the rate will revert to the original?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; to 4½ percent.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, when is the lower rate, the 3½-percent rate, to become effective?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is to become effective immediately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2105) to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 6085. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including the filling, grading, and paving of streets and sidewalks, the construction and improvement of sewers, and construction of necessary bridges and viaducts in connection with the same, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $35,000; and

H. R. 6723. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Valdez, Alaska, to construct a public-school building and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $30,000; and to authorize said town to accept grants of money to aid it in financing any public works.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and is open to amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 52, after line 5, it is proposed to insert the following:

No part of any appropriation made by this act or by later acts shall be available for payment to any contractor of the Navy Department who sells, or in any way imparts, to any person not in the employ of such contractor or a subcontractor thereof, any design, plan, patent, machinery, or other equipment used by the Navy Department at any time prior to 5 years after the first use thereof by the Navy Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered speaks for itself. It is the first amendment which grows out of the investigation and disclosures of the inquiry of the special Munitions Committee. The able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] yesterday laid the full foundation for this amendment, and there is very little that I need to add except to call the attention of the Senate specifically to what we are seeking to do.

Mr. President, we found in the course of our investigations that there is a general, world-wide trafficking in the designs and improvements which are made in our own naval equipment. This grows out of the fact that the Navy Department, in the first instance, must depend upon a private manufacturer to produce a given device or mechanism or equipment, and thereupon the contractor proceeds into the world market with the same device or mechanism or equipment and thus robs us of any monopoly of value in respect to the article in which the traffic occurs.

Let me illustrate. I think it is particularly interesting to note that in the case of the Electric Boat Co., which is the largest if not the exclusive manufacturer of submarines for the American Navy, the design for submarines used by the American Navy became the property of a firm of manufacturers in Austria, and from Austria it passed into Germany; so that, in all human probability, the submarine whence came the torpedo which sank the Lusitania was built according to designs which were originated in the United States primarily for the benefit of the American Navy.

Supporting that contention is the post-war fact that the Electric Boat Co. was apparently so convinced that its designs, namely, the American designs, were the ones which had been used by Germany in the fashion I have indicated, that after the war they undertook to sue the German Government for $17,000,000 for infringement upon their patent. That is one interesting exhibit.

I content myself with one other of the more recent exhibits. According to the testimony in the printed hearings—and I call the attention of the Senate to part I of those hearings, held on September 4, 5, and 6, 1934, with the Electric Boat Co. officials as witnesses—the designs and patents of the Electric Boat Co., which I remind the Senate are in essence the American Navy's designs and patents, are available to Vickers, the great munitions-producing plant in England, and from Vickers, in turn, they are available in Japan to Vickers' manufacturing agents in Japan. I do not identify those particular countries with any invidious purpose nor with any intention to single them out. I am merely illustrating the fact that under the existing arrangement or relationship there is practically nothing of primary value to the American Navy which is manufactured by private contractors which does not within a very short time become available to the whole wide world.

It does not stop at that point, Mr. President. Not only are these designs available, not only are these improvements available, for world-wide merchandising, but we confront the contemplation that there is an organized salesmanship campaign, often approved, often encouraged by the Navy Department itself, in the world-wide sale of equipment and designs.

The Senator from North Dakota presented several examples of that rather amazing practice, as it seems to me, and described in some detail the circumstances of an American cruiser being sent into the port of Constantinople for the purpose of demonstrating a new improvement in respect to gun mechanism for the purpose of impressing the Turkish Government with its value, so that the Turkish Government could become a customer of the American producer of that particular equipment.

The hearings are full of examples of similar efforts at salesmanship, particularly in South America. It seemed to the Munitions Committee, and I am speaking the emphatic mind of the entire committee without division, that the most elementary prudence calls for some degree of insistent protection against this type of operation, against this sort of world-wide merchandising in the values which are presumed to be inherent in the American Navy.

To me it is a strange sort of logic that we should spend vast sums of money upon the development of a superior Navy, which we like to believe has advantages superior to those of the navy of any other nation in the world; and at the same time proceed to make it possible for all the rest of the world to enjoy many of the same advantages to obtain which we are paying vast sums in behalf our own Navy. It seems to me such a system helps to destroy the utility and the effectiveness of that which we do for ourselves. In other words, it reduces our naval defenses from a defense status to a commercial merchandising status. I do not believe any Member of the Senate wants to do that.

I have not risen in fundamental opposition to the pending bill. I substantially concur in many of the statements which were made yesterday by the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye]. But until we are able by international agreement to procure a reasonable reduction in armaments by all the nations of the world, I shall not be a party to undertaking disarmament by mere American example, because I am profoundly convinced that unshared idealism is very much of a menace.

While we are continuing to confront the necessity of building a competitive Navy, I submit that some of the amendments which will be offered in connection with the pending bill, of which this is the first and which is typical of the others, should be written into the bill by way of limitation upon the expenditure of the funds appropriated. The language of the amendment is clearly and distinctly in the form of a limitation upon the appropriation. It is a limitation and nothing else. I submit that the limitation is justified and supported and sustained, not only by logic of the disclosures before the special munitions committee but by elementary prudence and common sense.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, many Members of the Senate may be in accord with the object sought to be accomplished by the amendment of the Senator from Michigan, but it is certain that it cannot be accomplished by his amendment. It seeks to prohibit a contractor, who now has a contract for the construction of a ship, from selling, at any time within 5 years from now, any design, plan, patent, or machinery. It seeks to do that by providing that no part of the funds available this year shall be used to pay on such a contract. Manifestly that could not be done, because the contract provides for the payment of the money. Under the contract, when the payments are due, the payments must be made. This prohibition would run for 5 years. It could be accomplished only by legislation which would make criminal the doing of the thing which the amendment seeks to prohibit, or by providing in general legislation that hereafter no contract shall be entered into which does not contain certain provisions. Under the amendment it could not possibly be accomplished.

I make the point of order that the amendment is general legislation on an appropriation bill, particularly because of the language that—

No part of any appropriation made by this act or by later act shall be available for payment on a contract of the Navy Department.

Mr. BONE rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington desire to discuss the amendment?

Mr. BONE. That was my intention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will be glad to hear the Senator, although he has examined the amendment and has examined paragraph 4 of rule XVI, which relates to such amendments.

Mr. BONE. I do not care to discuss the rule or its application to the amendment. I wish to discuss the amendment tendered by the Senator from Michigan; but if the Chair desires to rule, I am willing he shall do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the Senator desires me to withdraw the point of order temporarily to enable him to discuss the amendment, I am willing to do so.

Mr. BONE. No, Mr. President. Let me frankly say to the Chair that there would be no logic in discussing the amendment if it is entirely out of order. I would be wasting the time of the Chair, of the Senate, and of myself as well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has examined the amendment of the Senator from Michigan and calls the attention of the Senator from Michigan to paragraph 4 of rule 16, which provides that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill." The Chair thinks this is undoubtedly general legislation on an appropriation bill, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 52, in line 4, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following:

Provided further, That no contract for the construction of a vessel shall be entered into by the Navy Department, and no contract for the construction of a vessel once entered into by the Navy Department shall be modified, without the approval of the Comptroller General.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it seems to me this amendment is clearly a limitation within the rule. It deals with the creation of protection in respect to the expenditure of funds which are appropriated.

At the present time, if I understand the situation, the Navy Department is one of few departments, if not the only department, which is free of the supervision of the Comptroller General in respect to these contractual obligations and the integrity of obligations involved.

The Munitions Committee has been unable to find where the Navy Department ever enforced any of the penalty clauses against a shipbuilder. It makes no difference what the situation may be in respect to delays in construction or in failure to meet the essential speed test or any other contractual obligation; so far as we are able to determine, the Navy Department has never yet enforced the monetary penalty which is involved in respect to these obligations.

It is our feeling, after a very searching scrutiny of the record—and again I think I speak for the entire Munitions Committee—that it is highly desirable from the standpoint of the public welfare that these contracts should be within the jurisdiction of the Comptroller General, and that his authority, as it extends to practically every other contractual obligation of the Government, should be extended to the contractual obligations of the Navy Department.

Therefore the amendment simply provides in the form of a limitation, I repeat, that no contract for the construction of a vessel shall be entered into by the Navy Department, and no contract for the construction of a vessel once entered into by the Navy Department shall be modified, without the approval of the Comptroller General.

The Chair has ruled that the previous amendment submitted was not in order because it was general legislation upon an appropriation bill. If a point of order is to be made against this amendment based upon the same theory, I urge that there is a sharp distinction between this amendment and the other one. While I felt that the other amendment could justify itself within the rules, I feel very profoundly that this amendment obviously lies within the rules.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator say that all the money spent for naval vessels is not checked by the Comptroller General?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I mean that the Comptroller General has no authority whatever over naval contracts, and that they are the only Government contracts, so far as my information goes, which leave within the Department itself the determination of breaches, the assessment of penalties, and the defense of the integrity of the contracts.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator may have gone over this portion of the matter while I was temporarily out of the Chamber; but I do not think it can be too often repeated, as showing the very great necessity for having the Comptroller General pass on naval contracts, that it was shown in evidence before the Munitions Committee that in the case of a certain contract for the construction of naval vessels during the World War, and immediately thereafter, the contract was so loosely drawn by the Navy Department—and the testimony was that the contract had been drawn by the Navy Department itself, not negotiated between the Navy Department and the shipbuilder—the contract was so loosely drawn that the Navy Department had obligated itself to pay for the construction of these vessels on a cost-plus basis, and that the contention was seriously made by the shipbuilding company, and, in my judgment, justly made under the terms of the contract, that the cost-plus arrangement included not only the ordinary elements entering into the cost but also taxes as well; so that if the Government itself assessed a tax of a million dollars, let us say, against the shipbuilder during that period, the Government not only did not get the money but it had to pay the shipbuilder an extra premium of 10 percent, or $100,000, for having assessed the tax.

It seems to me such a contract as that is abundant reason why the Comptroller General should have jurisdiction over this subject.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his exhibit. I distinctly recall the amazement with which we confronted this particular contract—a contract in which the Navy Department actually invited the New York Shipbuilding Co., in connection with a cost-plus contract, to include its income taxes within the costs and then to be paid a 10-percent profit upon the reimbursement of its own taxation. The Senator from Missouri is quite right. That is an excellent demonstration of the need for some sort of collateral supervision in respect to these contracts.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will also recall another instance which was developed in evidence before our committee, in which it appeared that the Government was not only required to pay several thousand dollars for wines, liquors, and cigars, as the itemization was, used on the trial trips of various naval vessels, but, under the terms of the same contract, it was also required to pay a premium of 10 percent on the wines, liquors, and cigars consumed by the guests of the shipbuilding company.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; and I may add, although I have not the immediate reference before me, that upon one occasion the Comptroller General warned the Navy Department to discontinue certain practices in respect to purchases, and, so far as we could discover, the correction never yet has been made.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, if this amendment should be held out of order, it seems to me the present arrangement is such an outrageous one that if the point of order should be overruled by a vote of the Senate we ought to be able to get the amendment into the bill. I cannot find words to express my amazement that all these contracts in the Navy Department, running into the hundreds of millions of dollars, are not checked by the Comptroller General.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is no check in respect to the assessment of penalties and the integrity of the fulfillment of the contracts. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for suggesting that the Senate might be willing to override the Chair in the event the Chair should find the amendment out of order; but I know what great respect the Senate has for the judgment of the Chair, and I should hesitate to hazard the integrity of the amendment itself upon an effort to obtain the Senate's consent to disagree with the Chair.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I cast no reflection on the Vice President.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course the Senator did not.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I made the suggestion to show that I should go to almost any length to have this amendment adopted in the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his cordial support.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. And I do not see how I could go any further, or show any more extreme desire to have the amendment adopted, than the suggestion that we override whatever ruling the Chair may make.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator is correct. Any dissent from the Vice President is the last demonstration of anxiety to pass the proposed legislation.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill.

As the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has stated, under the present law the Secretary of the Navy has authority to enter into contracts. The law also provides that there can be an appeal from the decision of the Secretary of the Navy. What the amendment seeks to do, however, is to place upon another official of the Government the duty, which is not now devolved upon him, of passing upon the contracts before they are entered into. That is the object of the amendment.

Upon the merits much may be said upon both sides. For that reason the amendment ought to be presented for consideration to the Naval Affairs Committee, where it can be considered, and, if action is to be had, it can be had in a way that will accomplish the results which the members of the Munitions Inquiry Committee have in mind. Certainly, however, there can be no doubt that, where an amendment offered as a limitation devolves upon an official of the Government duties not now devolved upon him, it is legislation, and therefore is out of order on an appropriation bill. That has been the universal construction of the limitation in the House of Representatives and in this body.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair say for the benefit of the Members of the Senate, as well as the RECORD, that while he was a Member of another body, and had occasion a number of times to preside over the Committee of the Whole, and later on over the House itself, he was called upon to rule upon many amendments which appealed very much to the Chair. He would have liked to see them become part of the pending legislation; but as it was then the duty of the presiding officer to interpret the rules of the House of Representatives, as it is now his duty to interpret the rules of the Senate, he sometimes found himself in a position where he was compelled to sustain points of order against amendments for which otherwise he himself would have voted.

The Chair desires to have the clerk read a ruling rendered in the House of Representatives by an able parliamentarian, Mr. LEHLBACH, confirming an earlier ruling by Mr. Crisp, of Georgia. The Chair will ask the clerk to read the ruling, which also applies to this particular amendment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

January 7, 1929.

The House had under consideration the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, when Mr. BYRNES, of Tennessee, offered an amendment inserting in a section the following:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein made shall be available for paying any tax refund in excess of $75,000 which has not been approved by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation."

Mr. Anthony made a point of order that the amendment would require the approval of the joint committee and was contrary to existing law.

After debate, the Chairman, Mr. LEHLBACH, sustained the point of order, saying:

"It is a well-known rule of the House that amendments which limit expenditures of money appropriated for a general purpose by excluding some specific purpose embraced in the general purpose are in order, but the rule is clear that such limitation to be in order must simply forbid the use of the money for a certain given purpose. It is the rule that anything carrying an affirmative, substantive change in existing law, that limits the functions or jurisdiction of an executive officer so drastically as to constitute a change of policy, or that imposes upon a governmental agency new duties not imposed upon it by law, is beyond the definition of a limitation and is, therefore, not in order."

"The amendment under consideration provides that no tax refunds shall be paid by the Treasury Department in excess of $75,000 which have not been approved by the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. In the first place, ever since the existing income-tax law has been in force the Treasury Department has had full discretion in making refunds where it was found that taxes had been improperly paid. To subject that function to the review of another body which has not at present that function is new legislation, involving an important change of policy, and is such a limitation on existing rights and powers of the Secretary of the Treasury as to constitute new legislation."

"The point that remains, which is governing, in the mind of the Chair, is that it imposes upon the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation a function that is not now imposed upon it by law, and this incumbent of the chair has repeatedly held that such imposition of new duties, in the guise of a limitation, is not in order. The Chair will cite but one precedent and that precedent, the Chair thinks, will be given weight by every Member of this House because of the person who handed down the decision, a person who is still a Member of this House and one whose knowledge of parliamentary law and whose clarity in expounding it is unquestioned. I read from a decision rendered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Crisp] in the Sixty-fourth Congress, on March 11, 1916:

"But such limitations must not give affirmative directions and must not impose new duties upon an executive officer of the Government."

"Now, whether it is an executive officer or a legislative body, an agency of the Government must not, in the form of a limitation, have imposed new duties. Therefore, the amendment is held out of order." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 7, 1929, pp. 1315, 1316.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may say, for the benefit of the RECORD, that he was very much in favor of the amendment which was offered in the House of Representatives at that time. He was a member of the joint committee, and wanted an opportunity to function; but he could not get it.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I realize the entire good faith in which the Chair rules, of course. The Chair is ruling on the technical necessities which he confronts. I do not understand that the Chair is ruling that it is against the rules of the Senate to try to prevent collusion among shipbuilders.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct about that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Or that it is against the rules of the Senate to try in some simple degree to protect the integrity of these amazingly large expenditures in behalf of the Navy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is again correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Chair. I was sure we were in substantial agreement. The Chair's excellent judgment, as indicated by his response to the last two observations, leads me to believe that he may have been right when he ruled on the point of order.

I wish to say, however, before leaving the matter, that I cannot believe that the Senate will reject independent legislation when it shall be offered in respect not only to the two propositions which I have submitted this afternoon but in respect to several other propositions which have been prepared for submission as amendments to the pending bill, but which I apprehend will meet the same fate, under the rules, which the other two amendments have met.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I may say to the Senator from Michigan that there are a number of matters which have been discussed by the Senator from Michigan, and by other members of his committee, which I am sure the committee will present in legislative form for consideration by a legislative committee, and I think consideration ought to be given to them at this session. The subjects can then be investigated, and whatever legislation is deemed wise can be enacted.

But I think the Senator from Michigan will agree that, so far as it is possible, we should observe the rule prohibiting general legislation on appropriation bills. That is why I have made the points of order as to the two amendments.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I agree fully with what the Senator from South Carolina has said about the desirability of preserving the rule. On the other hand, Mr. President, we have a very unusual situation presented by the pending bill. As I see it, it is proposed that we squander an unprecedentedly large sum of money in peace time through this astounding naval-building program. It seems to me that when it is proposed that money shall be squandered in that fashion, every safeguard should be thrown around the making of the contracts, not next month, not next year, not next week, but when we are appropriating the money.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me again?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator from Missouri will agree with me that no one has been urging more than has he that the Appropriations Committee should not report appropriation bills containing general legislation, his contention being that that is an unwise policy.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator from Michigan will permit just one more interruption, I thoroughly agree with the reason for the rule, and I think it is well-nigh universally respected, but I do say that in this particular situation, with a stupendous appropriation such as is proposed in this bill, with the conditions lending themselves to collusion, as has been abundantly proven before the Munitions Committee, it seems to me it is a proper situation in which the Senate should suspend the very salutary rule which we ordinarily apply.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I heartily concur in the last observation submitted by the Senator from Missouri. I am not clear that I agree that we are justified in saying that the pending bill is squandering money, considering the condition in which the United States finds itself in respect to the situation in the world at the present time.

I desire again to make it clear that I am not rising in fundamental opposition to the bill, but it seems to me that, as the Senator from Missouri indicates, we ought to provide ourselves with every possible rational safeguard when once we have been put upon notice as to what is happening in respect to these expenditures.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] will necessarily be absent from the Chamber for perhaps another hour. He has an amendment which he desires to submit to the Senate bearing directly upon the question of collusion, and I think I can best illustrate what I am trying to say in respect to the necessity for protection by a word or two in anticipation of his proposal against collusion.

We find, when we examine into the mechanics of bidding upon naval vessels—and I hope I may have the attention of the Senator from South Carolina at this point, because I know he will find himself challenged by this contemplation—when we examine into the bidding on the building of cruisers under the naval building program, we find that the bids are amazingly similar in amount, and that awards at greatly increased prices are made to precisely those contractors who have been prophesied in advance as the probable beneficiaries of the bidding. When we examine into the mechanics of the bidding, we find that when a contractor bids in good faith, for the purpose of submitting a bid upon which he is willing and anxious to procure contracts, a pile of papers a foot high is necessary to accommodate the information absolutely necessary as a prerequisite to a legitimate and intelligent bid. On the other hand, we find in the same competitions bids submitted by other shipbuilders with not over 4, 5, or 6 papers, and the frank admission is made by the estimators themselves that a bid made upon one of those inadequate and incomplete estimates is not a good-faith bid, but is what they call a "protective bid."

Mr. President, before the 1934 cruiser contracts were let, when the bids had been submitted, they were so amazingly high compared with the bids upon precisely the same type of ships the year before that the able Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Navy calling his attention to the great increase in the bids for the 1934 cruisers over the bids of the year previous. I am happy that the Senator from Florida is doing me the honor to listen to me; he can correct me if I am wrong. He urged that obviously, in the face of the size and the nature and the type of the bidding, there probably was something rotten in Denmark. He asked that the bids be held up until an inquiry could satisfy the Navy Department as to the integrity of the situation.

The Senator from Florida did not have the information at that time which the Munitions Committee subsequently obtained. The Senator from Florida did not have the benefit of the exhibits which we subsequently secured, showing how part of this bidding was done upon legitimate estimates and the other part was just protective bidding, done upon no estimates at all; exhibits which absolutely justified, in a post-mortem way, the challenge which the Senator from Florida laid at the door of the Secretary of the Navy.

What happened? Within about 6 days the Navy Department replied by letter to the Chairman of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs that they had run down the stories about alleged collusion, and had found that they were just gossip emanating from one particular source, and that they were perfectly satisfied that the bidding was all right.

Mr. President, the point at issue was not whether some Washington gossipers were loose-tongued about what was being done in respect to these naval bids; the point at issue was whether or not the Government was about to be required to pay for cruisers several million dollars more than it ought to pay in the face of the bids of the previous year, plus the legitimate increase in the cost of production during the subsequent 12 months.

The contracts were let in spite of the protest of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]; and it was not until a year later, until this spring, that we were able to see what had gone on preceding the filing of those bids.

I am quite conservative in my judgment, Mr. President; I am exceedingly charitable in ever questioning the motives or good faith of others; I have great respect for some of the gentlemen who are engaged in shipbuilding, and I have a great deal less respect for others; but I am driven to the irresistible conclusion that the naval letting to which the Senator from Florida objected a year and a half ago was a letting based upon collusion, was a letting based upon a meeting of minds between the bidders in which specific allocations were made to the contractors who were to get the particular jobs.

Mr. President, I hate to think it may be held to be contrary to the rules of the Senate for us to offer an amendment by way of limitation which shall at least require that upon every bid hereafter submitted in respect to the expenditures under the pending naval appropriation bill every bidder shall be required to furnish the full estimates upon which his bid is based. That simple fact by itself will go far toward protecting the situation I am discussing, because the physical presence of the estimates will demonstrate whether the bids are in good faith; for it happens to be the unanswerable fact that a good-faith bid upon a naval vessel is based upon estimates a foot high, whereas the so-called "protective bids", which in the final analysis are nothing more or less than collusive bids, are based upon a mere pretense of estimates. If the Navy Department can have before it prior to letting these contracts the estimates upon which the bids are made, it will at least have a superficial, prima facie basis for assessing the good faith of the bidders themselves.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to assure the Senator that I am very much gratified that his committee went into the subject which was raised by me in my communication to the Navy Department about a year and a half ago.

I am not familiar with all the details of the evidence which was developed; but I still feel, just as I felt at the time, that if there was any semblance of manipulation, or any combination in bidding and in distributing the contracts among certain groups, it was contrary to the best interests of the Government and of the taxpayers of the United States.

Now that this evidence has been developed, I wish to assure the Senator that I desire heartily to cooperate with him and other members of the committee in an endeavor to secure legislation which will make such conduct less probable in the future. It certainly should be checked and stopped.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator from Florida for his observation and his assurance.

If the Chair shall rule upon all amendments which are submitted that they are legislative, as the Chair thus far has ruled upon two, we shall necessarily embrace the alternative of submitting a legislative bill covering all these various reforms and protections; and, in the natural course of events, that bill will come to the Naval Affairs Committee, headed by the Senator from Florida, who has just spoken. I am glad to contemplate the hospitality with which it obviously will be received.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that under the pending bill the appropriations will not be available until July 1, and therefore any legislation which may be adopted would control the expenditures provided for in the pending bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I realize that, Mr. President; but I also realize that the legislative program from now on is pretty much of a speculation so far as the remainder of the present session is concerned. I think our committee originally would have voluntarily embraced the alternative plan of submitting a piece of complete naval legislation if it had not been for the fact that we have felt that probably, as a matter of cold reality, there was no chance to complete independent legislation at this session; and we could not—and I think I speak for the entire committee—upon our consciences, after having confronted the evidence before our committee for the past 6 months, allow this largest of all naval appropriation bills to pass without at least attempting to procure from the Senate its consent for the immediate and sure protection of the integrity of the Government's welfare in some of the fashions I have been indicating.

Mr. President, I think there is nothing further that I desire to say upon this matter at the moment, but I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he would feel required to make a point of order against an amendment of this character: An amendment which should merely require, by way of limitation, that all bids hereafter taken upon naval construction under the appropriations in this act must be accompanied by all the estimates upon which those bids are based? Would the Senator feel compelled to raise a point of order against an amendment of that character?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina, as the Member in charge of this bill, is acting under direction from the Appropriations Committee in making a point of order against any legislation on the bill. I believe an amendment can be offered, accomplishing what the Senator has suggested, which would not be legislation. As the Senator stated the amendment, with the word "hereafter", it would be legislation.

I submit to him that if he should offer an amendment saying—

No part of the funds herein appropriated shall be available to pay a contractor upon any contract entered into under authority of this act unless, at the time of filing his bid, he shall also file the estimates upon which such bid was based.

In my opinion, that would be a limitation; it would not be legislation, and I should not make a point of order against it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator permit me to offer the amendment which he has just read?

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator from Michigan desires to do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I offer that amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the bill, the following amendment:

No part of the funds herein appropriated shall be available to pay a contractor upon any contract entered into under authority of this act unless, at the time of filing his bid, he shall also file the estimates upon which such bid was based.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to say just a final word expressing my gratitude to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] for his cooperation. Nothing I have said this afternoon is intended in any way to reflect upon the Navy itself or the integrity of any officers of the Navy who are dealing with these shipbuilding contracts. I wish to make that very clear. Nothing that I have said is intended to reflect in any way upon the integrity of any naval officer. I think that in many of these instances they are the victims of an almost unescapable system on the outside. I think that so long as the Navy Department lacks a complete bureau or division of design and estimate of its own, it will continue to be pretty much at the mercy of the big Ship Trust, which is composed of the three major manufacturers of the country, and the little trust, which is composed of three or four of the lesser ones.

I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his aid.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 52, after the first complete paragraph, it is proposed to insert the following:

That none of the appropriations provided by this act or by later acts shall be available for the expenses of any naval missions to foreign countries or of any person acting as a teacher or instructor in foreign countries.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, it developed during the hearings before the Munitions Committee that a number of times in past years our Government sent naval commissions to South America and sent instructors to China and other foreign countries. The evidence also shows that as a result of this action these missions which were sent favored, or at least their efforts resulted in favoring, our own munitions makers. For instance, a mission was sent to Brazil, and it appeared that in the course of the instruction which was given by the mission and the various policies pursued there, they also interested themselves in behalf of the armament makers of this country in the sale of material.

It also appeared with reference to one of the missions that in Peru certain guns were recommended on behalf of one of the munitions makers of this country, and at the same time, or very shortly after, one of our own employees in the Navy, while he was a regular naval officer, acted as instructor in Colombia. This particular naval officer was drawing his regular pay from the United States Navy, was at the same time cooperating with a munitions maker who was selling the guns, and at the same time was receiving a salary from the State of Colombia. It brought about a source of friction between Colombia and Peru. We had a mission which recommended certain defenses in Peru and at the same time an official of our Government was recommending certain guns for Colombia. As a result of that situation it seems to me the mission was a failure, except as its members were acting as agents for munitions makers. It is a policy which can accomplish no good, so far as our Government is concerned.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it provides that none of the appropriation provided by this act or by later acts, and so forth. It would affect other appropriation bills and other legislation and is not a limitation upon the expenditure of funds appropriated under this bill. Therefore, it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, would the Senator object if I should modify the amendment by striking out the reference to later acts?

Mr. BYRNES. I shall be very frank with the Senator. I do object to it, but I admit that, in my opinion, it would not then be subject to a point of order.

Mr. POPE. Very well. I modify the amendment by striking out the words referred to by the Senator from South Carolina, "or by later acts."

LXXIX—509

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho modifies his amendment by striking out in line 2 the words "or by later acts." The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, under the law which was approved May 19, 1926, the President of the United States is authorized, upon application from foreign governments and whenever in his discretion the public interest renders such a course advisable, to detail officers and enlisted men of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to assist the governments of the republics of North, Central, and South America, Cuba, Haiti, and Santo Domingo. This policy has been followed, and even if in some instance some individual whom the Senator from Idaho evidently has in mind has committed some wrongful act, I do not believe we should depart from a policy which was deliberately adopted by the Government, and fail to provide funds to carry out the purposes of that law.

Other governments comply with requests coming from these friendly nations. It simply would be placing us in a position of not being able to do that which other governments are doing without any objection from any source. I do not believe the action of some one individual should induce us to change the policy of the Government and in this manner repeal the existing law.

I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was rejected.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, yesterday I submitted two amendments which were ordered to be printed and lie on the table. I desire to offer them at this time. I presume the Senator from South Carolina is familiar with the amendments.

Mr. BYRNES. No; I am not familiar with them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington offers an amendment, which will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 43, line 6, after "$500", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That not less than 25 percent of each succeeding lot of aircraft, including the engines for such aircraft, the procurement of which is authorized by this act and hereafter undertaken, shall be constructed and/or manufactured in Government aircraft factories and/or other plants or factories owned and operated by the United States Government.

The foregoing proviso is subject to the further condition that if it shall be determined by the President that present plants, factories, and equipment owned and operated by the Government are not such as to permit the construction and/or manufacture of the said aircraft and/or engines in such Government plants and factories in the proportions therein specified and required, then and in that event the President may by proclamation suspend such requirement in whole or in part, to the extent that capacity in such plants, factories, and equipment is insufficient to meet such requirement.

Whenever any such proclamation is made, the President shall, at the opening of the next succeeding session of the Congress, submit to the Congress a detailed estimate of (1) the expansion of existing plants, factories, and facilities owned and operated by the Government, and (2) the increase in personnel required to operate the same, necessary for the meeting of the requirement specified in the foregoing proviso. The funds necessary for the enlargement and expansion of existing plants and facilities owned by the Government, for the construction and acquisition by condemnation or otherwise of plants, factories, facilities, and equipment, for the construction and manufacture of naval aircraft, and for the personnel required to operate the same, are hereby authorized to be appropriated.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to make the point of order against the amendment; but I will reserve it if the Senator from Washington desires to address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina indicates his purpose to make the point of order against the amendment, but he will reserve it if the Senator from Washington desires to speak upon his amendment.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I had hoped that at least I should not invite the parliamentary thunderbolts of the Senator from South Carolina, and that this amendment would not come under the ban of the Senate rule.

This amendment is similar in character to one which was adopted last year, when the so-called "Vinson naval bill" went through the Senate. It will be recalled—and, if my memory serves me aright, I think the amendment was adopted on the floor of the Senate—that it provided for building 25 percent of naval airplanes in Government-owned factories, or factories to be subsequently acquired, or, if not through that process, by the expansion, as rapidly as possible, of the facilities then owned by the Government. As a result of the adoption of that amendment, the Government-owned airplane factory at Philadelphia has been expanded and is now producing some airplanes.

The bill went to conference, and there was modified in respect to the airplane provision by providing, in language somewhat similar to that of this amendment, that the Government should manufacture not to exceed 10 percent of its airplanes. This amendment, as I have indicated, is much less drastic than the one which was adopted from the floor last year.

I shall content myself by saying I am sorry all the Members of the Senate could not have been privileged to attend the hearings of the Munitions Committee of this body. It has been my good pleasure to serve with the able Members who were appointed by the Vice President to compose that committee; and upon a number of occasions the Senate has heard them discuss from this floor some of the evidence which was adduced at the hearings.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] said a moment ago that he was amazed beyond measure at a statement made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. If that statement, mild as it was, amazed him, the Senator from Minnesota would have suffered a total physical collapse had he been permitted to hear all the testimony produced before the Munitions Committee concerning the contracts which were under discussion by the Senator from Michigan. I am sorry all of the voters of the country could not have heard some of the evidence produced before the committee. I shall confine myself now to just one angle of the matter.

It is probable that the Chair will rule the amendment to be out of order. If so, I desire to have the opportunity later to tender it in the form of legislation, whether it be in an omnibus bill which will include all the amendments proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and my good friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], or whether they will be tendered in separate bills. I desire the opportunity to offer to the Senate the provisions which are in this amendment if it shall be rejected under the ruling of the Chair; but I wish every voter in the country could have been privileged to sit at the hearings of the Munitions Committee, and to have heard four men who sat in front of the committee and gave testimony concerning the profits in the airplane industry.

I doubt very much if the voters, the people of this country, would feel safe in their homes if they knew that the Government had literally been financially raped in the fashion it was by these gentlemen; and yet, Mr. President, the peculiar thing is that there comes trippingly to the lips of these men, who are the entrepreneurs and the tycoons of big business in this country, denunciation of men in Congress whom they are pleased to call "demagogues" who lift their voices in protest against some of those things.

I quite agree that, perhaps, many intemperate things have been said on the floor of Congress; but those were mere utterances. Here, however, are acts which are so grossly intemperate as to threaten not only decent business practices but, were they widely known, to threaten the faith and confidence which millions of people have in their Government; because if the Government can be subjected to that sort of ruthless racketeering, the people are going to lose faith in organized government.

Sometimes I do not wonder why people have lost faith in democracy when these things can go on, these loose practices can be continued. These four men sat in front of the committee and testified that within a period of about 6 years this group, out of private profits realized, in a considerable part, out of the Treasury of the United States, had accumulated and disbursed and paid out profits aggregating 1,142,000 percent.

Most of us have heard about "100-percent Americans", and we have heard about patrioteers and profiteers, and those terms are used rather glibly and interchangeably; but that was the first time in my life I ever saw a man, let alone heard of a man, who naively confessed that he had made over 1,000,000 percent profit. These men were interrogated as to how much of their business was had with the Government, and they testified that it was 30, 40, 50, 60, 80 percent. They were making airplanes that were used by the Navy. Those men by their very conduct, by their unconscionable greed, by their willingness to subordinate and destroy, if you please, all decent standards of business, are inviting every loose-tongued exponent of all sorts of crackpot ideas to find justification for his ideas and for his assaults on this administration and on orderly practices.

Those are things which we have to meet here; and we might as well be honest with ourselves, and try to meet them. It will not do to walk away from them and close our eyes, because if we do we are merely inviting more and more of that sort of business.

I have no objection to a man making a reasonable profit; but I say to this body, to my brethren here, that when it is possible for an outfit under the American flag to make 1,142,000 percent profit out of transactions which are largely involved in their relations with the United States Government in the field of public and governmental activity which we call national defense, the highest and holiest thing under the flag, the time has come for us to make a searching examination into the relations of these men with their Government.

I said yesterday on the floor that if a boy—the boy of any Senator in this body—joined the Army, and in time of war that boy surrendered so much as a dollars' worth of Federal property to the enemy a drumhead court martial might take out that boy and blast his life out of his body; but, strange as it may seem, we permit—and we do it without thinking about it—men to remain at home and take an unconscionable advantage of the Government, pile up monstrous fortunes, compared to which the fortunes of Lydia's ancient kings were but a beggar's patrimony, and we think it is all right; and if a man in this body lifts his voice against it, he is characterized by a certain bob-tailed type of journalist as a demagogue and an enemy of the country.

I say again that I do not wonder that men whose ideas are not sound, are not well-grounded, find an increasing number of people willing to listen to them when men in this body who ought to know better, who ought to have had backbones of iron instead of wishbones, sit here year in and year out and allow this sort of thing to go on.

National defense, in my judgment, ought to be a public function; and the military and naval establishments that produce the munitions of war ought to be publicly owned. They ought to have been years ago. That great function of government ought not to have been committed to the care of private individuals.

There is one pleasant fiction indulged in which I wish to mention before I sit down. I wish to tender one more amendment; and if the Senator from South Carolina cares to object to it, then perhaps it can be considered with the one which I am now discussing.

I wish to refer to one of the polite fictions with which young America is fed. My little fellow at home reads the novels which are sold so freely around and comes to me and says, "Why, daddy, if there is a spy giving away Government secrets, they will put him in jail won't they?"

One of the pleasant bits of fiction that is indulged in by gentlemen who profess to talk about our Government's activities is that if Government secrets are disclosed to a foreign power something direful is going to happen to the man who gives them away. We have been privileged to hear the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and other Senators who served on the Munitions Committee tell us from the floor of the Senate that the private enterprises which are building munitions of war for this Government and making vast profits out of them have freely exchanged Government military and naval secrets with foreign powers; and from this very floor I have heard references, untoward and unhappy references, to possible complications with a country in the Orient and with European countries. Yet the revelations before the Munitions Committee of the Senate have indicated that these secrets which we think belong to this Government—your Government and my Government, Mr. President—the military secrets which my little fellow and all the millions of little boys in this country are reading about as high and holy secrets of the Government, secrets preserved to protect the Government in its hour of peril—those very military secrets have been freely exchanged by these private corporations with other private corporations of a similar character in other countries. They have gone through Vickers in England, and then from Vickers through their affiliated and allied companies into the files of Mitsubishi in Japan; they have gone to Schneider-Creusot and to Krupps and Skoda and down into Turkey. These military secrets, about which we hear so much, the betrayal of which will put a man in jail, are given away by the gentlemen who have military contracts and naval contracts with the United States Government.

The Senator from Michigan said this morning that it was quite conceivable that the submarine which fired the torpedo which destroyed the Lusitania and sent people to a watery grave, and, what was infinitely more horrible, was one of the motivating and activating causes of the war, led us into the war, and indirectly caused all the debate this morning over the bonus—that that submarine was built probably under an American patent. That is why I am so sorry that the rule was invoked against the amendment tendered by the able Senator from Michigan. American patents were being used to implement the military and naval machinery of a country that was fighting us, a country which we denounced, which everybody denounced, for 2 long years. American patents, supplied by private American munitions factories, went into those countries, and are going into them now.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will recall that testimony before the Munitions Committee disclosed that a claim on behalf of the Electric Boat Co., which controls all the submarine patents, practically, in this country, was filed before the Mixed Claims Commission, to the effect that every one of the submarines the use of which in the war was alleged by the United States as the action which led up to its entering the war was an infringement of their patents, for which they had granted licenses, however, both in Austria and Germany before the war. It was the testimony before the committee that their contention before the Mixed Claims Commission failed only because the Germans had carefully destroyed the plans of the vessels, so that it was impossible to establish the identity of the vessels. It was their contention that the whole submarine warfare was bottomed on the sale of American inventions and munitions abroad.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, my good friend the Senator from Missouri is absolutely correct. One of the startling things is the ability of my friends who have served on this committee to restrain themselves in their utterances, because the tales that were unfolded before the committee were so startling, so bizarre, so weird, they presented such a picture of abysmal disregard of the rules of common decency which are supposed to apply to international relationship, or certainly to guide men in their individual conduct, as to leave an imprint on the minds of those who heard them which probably never will be eradicated. These munition makers, these private operators, were not citizens of the United States, or of England, or of Germany, or of France. They were supercitizens. They were above any country. They sold their wares hither and yon, and made contracts which tied them together all over the world in one gigantic network. What was America to them? Precisely nothing.

I shall tender another amendment. I think the Senator from South Carolina has the previous amendment. I should like to have the clerk report the amendment, but I should like to say a word before he reads it.

The second amendment is one I tendered last year as a proposed amendment to the Vinson naval bill. It is a declaration of policy. It has to do with the settlement which I think should be accomplished now of the question of the policy of this Government in the future—whether this Government is to continue to allow itself to be milked by men whose conduct is a reproach to private ownership, who, if they continue to put over this ragged sort of practice in which they have indulged, are going to discredit the whole theory of private ownership.

Sometimes I find myself thinking that the very best friends of those in this country who believe in public ownership, the most ardent exponents of that doctrine, although they do not know it, are those men who cling so rigorously to their loyalty to private ownership and yet at the same time do what some of these men have done in connection with the war contracts.

They furnish more cogent arguments than one could think of in a million years. They damn and indict their own system by their gross indifference to the rules of common decency. There perhaps would not be any demand for public ownership in any of these fields were it not for the gross disregard of the rules of common decency indulged in by these people. They see a chance to make dollars, dollars, dollars, and finally they get to the point where they do not care what they do. Out the window go codes of ethics. What do they care, so long as they can pile up fortunes?

In the course of events, under God's own providence, it is a good thing. All things that are wrong tend to destroy themselves, and there are no arguments I could make in favor of the Government making its own munitions of war that would be half so effective as the ones these shipbuilders have made, as those the powder companies have made.

I thank God they have made this record, a record they will never be able to wipe away. Nothing any of us might say on the floor of the Senate urging Uncle Sam to become self-sufficient in war could be half so effective as the argument that is made by these people, the argument which now appears in cold type. One little handful of those men made 1,142,000 percent profit out of this Government and out of its citizens in 5 or 6 years. That argument cannot be answered. There is no man on this floor who can find words in the English language which will enable him to answer it. Let that sort of argument be made to people who are hungry, and to people who are losing their homes in this country, by this little handful of fellows who sold airplane engines to this Government and piled up that sort of a fortune in a few years.

The provision which I have offered is merely a statement of public policy. It reads, as a supplement to the language of the act:

It being the intent and purpose of such acts—

That is, referring to the acts which are referred to in the bill itself—that the Government shall, insofar as practicable, develop its navy yards, arsenals, and other plants and facilities to the end that it may—“(a) at all times hereafter be able to construct, maintain, and repair its authorized vessels and naval equipment; (b) as speedily as possible become self-sufficient in time of war; and (c) insofar as may be possible, eliminate private profit in war and in the preparation thereof.”

I say this applies only to the implements of war and those articles which are used for actual combat purposes. It does not have anything to do with thread, food, or anything else, but merely with the instrumentalities of active combat.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that the amendment would be legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The act of March 27, 1934, provided:

That not less than 10 percent of the aircraft, including the engines therefor, the procurement of which is authorized by this act and hereafter undertaken, shall be constructed and/or manufactured in Government aircraft factories—

And so forth.

The amendment of the Senator from Washington, as he explained it, has for its purpose the repeal of the existing law, and the substitution in lieu thereof of a provision that not less than 25 percent of each succeeding lot of aircraft shall be constructed and manufactured in Government aircraft factories.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I do not so understand. My amendment is proposed, not to repeal the other law, but merely to provide that 25 percent of the airplanes shall be built in Government aircraft factories. It does not attempt to repeal the other provision of law. It simply attaches a provision that 25 percent of the airplanes built under this act shall be built in Government factories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is clearly the opinion of the present occupant of the chair that the amendment constitutes legislation upon an appropriation bill, and is therefore subject to the point of order made by the Senator from South Carolina. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as to the other amendment which was offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], and which is now upon the desk, the Trammell Act, approved March 27, 1934, provides:

That the first and each succeeding alternate vessel of each category, except the 15,000-ton aircraft carrier, upon which work is undertaken, * * * shall be constructed or manufactured in the Government navy yards. * * *

The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington provides a construction of that act, and declares that the purpose of the Trammell Act, and all other acts, is, insofar as possible, to eliminate private profit, not only in war but in preparation therefor. Consequently, it would be a repeal of a provision of the Trammell Act, approved in 1934. Other language contained in the amendment also would be legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order, finding that the amendment contemplates legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 52, after the first complete paragraph, it is proposed to insert the following:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be used for the expenses of any naval maneuvers or war game held outside the territorial waters of the United States, unless the same shall have been first approved by the Secretary of State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment; but shall withhold the point of order if the Senator desires to discuss the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. I concede that the amendment is subject to a point of order if it shall be made. I offer the amendment, not with the hope of having it adopted on this bill but for the purpose of briefly calling attention to what I regard as an extremely dangerous practice which is being indulged in by the naval officers of the Nation.

This is by no means a new practice either by the officers of the American Navy or by the naval officers of any other nation. They habitually, and by preference, undertake to practice their maneuvers and play their war games in waters which might possibly lead to a collision with some other nation.

We had a classical illustration of that a few years ago, when the naval mission to Peru, composed of American naval officers loaned to Peru among other things for the purpose of running their war college, proceeded to go over and put on a war game in the very territory and neighborhood of a place called Leticia, and on the very terrain which was in dispute at that time between Colombia and Peru; and by the mere fact of that war game in that territory they not only almost precipitated a war between Colombia and Peru but very seriously involved the United States in the troubles of Colombia and Peru.

I undertake to say, Mr. President, that the present naval maneuvers, by which the American Fleet is operating within a few hundred miles of the Japanese coast, is an absolutely unjustifiable gesture which might lead to very serious international complications. We all know that if the situation were reversed, and if the Japanese naval forces were operating close to the territorial boundaries of the United States, it probably would mean a very serious international complication. Certainly the jingo press of this country would herald it from every masthead as an unfriendly act.

As I have said, I freely concede that the amendment is subject to a point of order if the Senator in charge of the bill makes it. I offer the amendment simply for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that under the present practice the Navy Department is, in effect, running the international affairs of our country by being permitted to endanger the peace of the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I make the point of order that under the existing law the Secretary of the Navy can determine where the maneuvers shall be held. The amendment would place upon the Secretary of State a duty which is not now placed upon him by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 52, it is proposed to insert the following:

No part of the appropriations made in this act shall be used for the salary or pay of any naval officer or of any official or employee of the Navy Department who shall make any public statement as to the policy of the United States in international affairs or its relation with foreign countries unless such statement is first approved by the Secretary of State.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I should make the point of order against that amendment; but I understand the Senator wishes to discuss it, so I withhold making the point of order until he shall have discussed the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I freely concede that this amendment, like the previous amendment, is subject to a point of order. I offer this amendment, as I offered the preceding one, for the purpose of briefly calling attention to other dangerous practices which for some time have been indulged in by officers of the naval and military services.

I do not think anything more outrageous has taken place in international relations during the past 15 years than the statements of two military officers who appeared before the House Committee on Military Affairs in which they advocated preparations to seize the possessions of friendly powers at the outbreak of war.

If such a thing as that were indulged in by foreigners, it would cause an uprising in this country. Certainly a wave of indignation would sweep the country if the chief of the Japanese air service were to rise in the Japanese Parliament, or appear before a governmental committee in Japan, and advocate preparations to seize air bases in the Philippine Islands or Alaska on the outbreak of any sort of a war, whether or not we should be a party to the war. If he should make such a suggestion, the wave of indignation which would sweep over this country would be something to marvel at. Similarly, if the chief of the French air service or the chief of the British air service had appeared before committees and advocated seizing the property of the United States for the establishment of air bases in the event of the outbreak of any sort of a war, this country would have seethed with indignation, and very properly so.

It is highly to the credit of the President of the United States that he promptly and specifically repudiated the statements of those two high-ranking military officers. However, so far as my information goes, there has been no court martial of those officers; there has been nothing in the way of new law to prohibit a repetition of such statements; nor is there anything in the statutes or the naval regulations, so far as I am informed, to prevent the recurrence of such a disgraceful incident as took place during the World War, before our entry into it, when Admiral Sims, then a rear admiral of the United States Navy, made a speech at a banquet in London which was properly taken in Germany and countries allied with Germany at that time, when we were supposed to be a neutral, as a violation of our neutrality and a direct declaration of sympathy on the part of the United States with one set of belligerents.

I repeat that while the amendment is subject to the point of order, as I well recognize, the time will come, and I hope the time will come speedily, when the Navy Department and the War Department will not be permitted to conduct the international affairs of the United States and deliberately precipitate conditions which might lead to war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from South Carolina to make a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committee.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, May 24, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 23 (legislative day of May 13), 1935

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Anning S. Prall, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Communications Commission for the term of 7 years from July 1, 1935. (Reappointment.)

APPOINTMENT, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Second Lt. Christian Frederick Dreyer, Coast Artillery Corps (detailed in Quartermaster Corps), with rank from June 10, 1932.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 23, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who art the light for morning, the light for noonday, and the light for eventide, breathe upon us every fragment of divine influence. Send us forth with visions of truth, with meditations of duty, and with musings of principles that have rights of authority. We pray Thee to enable us to keep alive the plants in our souls' garden, by prayer and supplication, striving eagerly to bring forward the lagging virtues of our spiritual natures. Come, Holy Spirit, lest we faintly hear the call of responsibility and dimly see the way of wisdom. Be Thou the guest of our souls and their sweetest refreshment. Cleanse that which is sordid, heal that which is wounded, blend that which is stubborn, guide that which is wandering, and grant us final salvation and everlasting joy. In the name of the world's Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On May 14, 1935:

H. R. 4442. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

On May 15, 1935:

H. R. 6084. An act to authorize the city of Ketchikan, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not to exceed $1,000,000 for the purpose of acquiring the electric-light and power, water, and telephone properties of the Citizens' Light, Power & Water Co. and to finance and operate the same, and validating the preliminary proceedings with respect thereto, and for other purposes.

On May 17, 1935:

H. R. 6718. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture and for the Farm Credit Administration for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

On May 20, 1935:

H. R. 3808. An act concerning the incorporated town of Seward, Territory of Alaska.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow it may be in order to call bills on the Private Calendar under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, that calls for an objection, then. If the gentleman would wait a minute we might get the objection out of the way.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object, if the gentleman is going to call for the regular order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I object, then, Mr. Speaker. However we might have had an understanding with the majority leader [Mr. TAYLOR] had the regular order not been called for whereby we might have been able to take up the Private Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on tomorrow to call up bills on the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ascertain from the gentleman from Colorado if it is the intention to commence calling bills on the Consent Calendar where we left off on last Monday. Does not the gentleman think that is right and proper, in view of the fact that there are a great many bills that have not yet been called? I hope the gentleman will amend his request to ask permission to start where we stopped on last Monday afternoon.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, whatever the rules of the House provide.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That can be done by unanimous consent. Of course, the rules of the House provide that we start at the beginning of the calendar, but I am asking the gentleman to amend his unanimous-consent request by asking that we start where we finished last Monday. That is nothing but right and proper. It gives Members who have bills on the calendar which have not yet been called an opportunity to have them called and considered.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have it made clear just what effect the suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia would have on the request made by the majority leader.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will yield, as far as I am concerned, I have no objection to starting where we left off.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman's request would be reasonable were it not for the fact that certain objections were made which were captious. Certain objections were made to certain bills to which there really was no serious objection. I had one case where the Member who objected came to me and said he was willing to withdraw the objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I am not going to take the position that any Member makes objection for some captious reason. I presume he has some substantial and valid reason to object to a bill. It is not fair to other Members who have bills on the calendar further down to start at the beginning again.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman will admit that the rules of the House so provide, and the gentleman is asking that the rule be set aside in his favor.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not in my favor. I have no bill on the calendar at all that I personally am interested in.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I am willing to withhold objection if the gentleman is willing to start calling the bills under the rules of the House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That means that we will start where we started last Monday. I think it is only fair to start with Calendar No. 142, where we left off last, and run through the calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I understand there are only three or four bills ahead of where we stopped, so it does not really make much difference where we start.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman let it go through, then?

Mr. GREENWOOD. With the explanation that has been made, with the understanding that I am going to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill to which there was no serious objection, but the objector came to me and said he had no objection to the bill but simply made a captious objection, I will agree to the unanimous-consent request, but I am going to make a unanimous-consent request to return to that bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And I hope the gentleman will be able to obtain it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. I shall not object to the gentleman's request, but I would like to ask if it will be in order, provided this consent is granted and the Speaker is willing, for a Member to be recognized to move to suspend the rules and pass bills on the calendar without getting unanimous consent?

Mr. SNELL. That was not contained in the gentleman's request.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder if the gentleman will add that to his request?

Mr. McFARLANE. I am against that.

Mr. RANKIN. Why?

Mr. McFARLANE. I think we ought to take up the Private Calendar tomorrow.

Mr. RANKIN. I am going to object to that.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. In response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi, the Chair states that the Chair would not be disposed to recognize anybody to move to suspend the rules if the request of the gentleman from Colorado that the Consent Calendar be considered is granted, even if the question of suspension were included in the request.

Mr. RANKIN. The information I desired, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not, if the request is granted, we also will have suspensions tomorrow.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Colorado again state his request?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I amend my request by asking also that the Speaker may have the same right on tomorrow to recognize Members to move to suspend the rules that he would have on any regular suspension day.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I will object to that. Suspension day is an institution in this House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, permit me to say to the House that we have been disappointed in several committees not having ready for consideration a number of important bills, and unless we can take up one of these calendars tomorrow the House will have nothing before it. I feel that, with hundreds of bills pending on the two calendars, we ought not to adjourn over tomorrow and do nothing.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Colorado will so modify his request that the Private Calendar also may be taken up under the rules with the understanding that no omnibus bills will be considered tomorrow I do not think there will be objection. It was the omnibus bills which Members did not want taken up tomorrow.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that certain Members of this House have been studying and analyzing the bills on both the Private Calendar and the Consent Calendar. Last Monday we considered something like 100 bills, and they were acted on by the House.

The Members who have been designated to study these measures have not had time to go into the bills that will be considered tomorrow if these requests are granted. I think it is manifestly unfair to ask for the consideration of these bills tomorrow when no preparation or study of the bills has been made.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, several times I have asked for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Colorado again state his request?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, my last request was that on tomorrow it may be in order to consider bills on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am willing that bills on the Consent Calendar be considered, but I am not willing for bills to be considered under suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Suspensions were not included, as the Chair understood the gentleman's request.

Mr. SNELL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that on tomorrow it may be in order to consider bills on the Consent Calendar under the rules of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of bills on the Consent

Calendar the call shall commence where we finished on the last Consent Calendar day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, upon what subject is the gentleman from Mississippi going to speak?

Mr. RANKIN. Primarily, on the subject of power.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow after the reading of the Journal, the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and following the gentleman from Mississippi, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Rules Committee may have until midnight tonight to file a report on one or two rules from that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. There is a special order pending. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman's text going to be?

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to explain a request to insert in the RECORD certain material.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a very important and interesting brief from the chamber of commerce of my city with the request that it be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In order to save the House the cruelty of listening to me making another textile speech, which I would have to do if this request is not granted, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein as a part of my speech the brief presented by the chamber of commerce of the city of New Bedford.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I object.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I have a unanimous-consent request to make, and I may say that I make this request only after conference with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] and with the understanding that he will not lose the opportunity to make his speech today, and believing it will only take a few minutes to dispose of the bill I have in mind.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2105) to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy. There are three amendments to this bill which have been recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

S. 2105 (Rept. No. 982)

An act to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be allowed at the United States Military Academy 3 cadets for each Senator, Representative, Delegate in Congress, and Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, 5 for the District of Columbia, and 132 from the United States at large, in addition to the number now authorized to be appointed from the enlisted men of the Regular Army and National Guard and the sons of deceased officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes."

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "Rico", insert "one to be selected by the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, from among the sons of civilians of the Panama Canal Zone and the Panama Railroad, resident on the Zone."

On page 2, line 3, after the word "large", insert "40 of whom shall be appointed on the recommendation of the academic authorities of the honor schools as designated by the War Department"; and on page 2, after line 9, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized to call to active service annually, with their consent upon application to and selection by the War Department, for a period of not more than 1 year for any one officer, not to exceed at any time 1,200 Reserve officers of the combatant arms, Ordnance, and the Chemical Warfare Service for active duty with the Regular Army: Provided, That members of the Officers' Reserve Corps so called to active service shall be distributed as nearly as may be practicable among the said combatant arms, Ordnance, and Chemical Warfare Service in proportion to the commissioned strength of such arms and service and shall be apportioned in grades therein so far as possible as follows: Not to exceed 5 percent in the field grade, 15 percent in the grade of captain, 30 percent in the grade of first lieutenant, and 50 percent in the grade of second lieutenant: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall affect the number of Reserve officers that may be called to active duty under existing laws, nor the conditions under and purposes for which they may be called.

"The President is hereby and further authorized to commission annually in the Regular Army of the United States in the grade of second lieutenant, upon application to and selection by the War Department, from among those in all grades who have served 1 year with the Regular Army under the prior provisions of this act, not to exceed 75 officers annually who shall take rank from the date of their permanent commissions in the Regular Army."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to provide for an additional number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, and for other purposes."

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs may sit today during the session of the House in order to conclude the T. V. A. hearings now being held by that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL 938 AND HOUSE BILL 7777, WHICH PROVIDE FOR THE ERECTION IN WASHINGTON OF A MEMORIAL TO THE SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES OF THE UNITED STATES WHO LOST THEIR LIVE IN THE WORLD WAR

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in reference to the bills S. 938 and H. R. 7777.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, each year we gather on Memorial Day to review the memories and to honor the fallen heroes of four American wars. About the middle of the last century we engaged in a war with Mexico, and 12 years later marked the beginning of our long and bloody Civil War. In 1898 we were drawn into an armed conflict with Spain, and in 1917 the cry of the endangered representative governments of Europe brought us face to face with the serried ranks of autocracy.

To pay a loving tribute to all of these gallant men who offered their lives in defense of country and of principles vital to liberty, we, in common with millions of our fellow citizens throughout the length and breadth of the land, join on Memorial Day to testify with speech and song, with silent tears and fragrant flowers, our appreciation of what they did.

With senior Senator of New York, Senator COPELAND, I have sponsored a plan to build in your Nation's Capital a memorial which will forever immortalize the glorious heroism of those who made the supreme sacrifice for freedom during the late World War.

Some of them sleep in marble cities of the dead, guarded by a Nation's faithful vigil; some in old fields beside quiet streams; some in Flanders' fields, where the poppies grow red as the blood that was shed upon the hard-fought fields of France; and some lie in unknown graves. Wherever they sleep, a Nation's love is with them, and their memory will ever be cherished.

Mr. Speaker, the heroism of the sacrifices of 1863-65 can never be forgotten, but to most of us who are living today they have not the poignant vividness of personal experience. But the year 1918 brought the significance of Memorial Day and memorial shrines when and where thousands of Americans gather each year. After that memorable year there were few Americans who had not suffered personal loss or bereavement. The real meaning of "dying for one's country" was impressed on the consciousness of the people.

As you are probably aware, World War memorials have been erected in many other countries as a symbol and a tribute to the sterling qualities and patriotism of their soldier dead. They gave their all and we gave our very little. Life was as precious to them as it is to us; nothing that we can give can be more than a weak beginning of their stupendous gift. Nor do they demand great recompense; gratitude and homage, and for those of us who remain in the world of opportunity the message of their young lives, sacrificed to duty, is too plain to be disregarded—they went forth to battle for the cause of human justice and freedom.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation sponsored by Senator COPELAND and myself provides for the creation of a World War memorial commission, the members of same to serve without compensation, and the erection in Washington of a memorial to the soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States who lost their lives in the World War. The location and design of such memorial is left to the discretion of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the National Commission of Fine Arts. A sum of $2,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act, is authorized and appropriated.

I can think of no better way to use part of the $4,000,000 public-works appropriation which Congress has placed at the President's disposal than in the realization of such a memorial.

VETO MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—
PLUMBING AND SANITARY SYSTEMS IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS (H. DOC. NO. 198)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval House Joint Resolution 254, entitled "Joint resolution providing for an investigation by the United States Public Health Service of the plumbing and sanitary systems in Federal Government buildings."

The joint resolution authorizes and directs the United States Public Health Service to make a complete survey of all Government properties for the purpose of eliminating alleged defective plumbing and sanitary conditions in Government buildings and report to the Congress on or before January 3, 1936, the cost involved in making desired eliminations and improvements. The Service is likewise directed to study and report to the Congress on or before January 3, 1937, on the relation of amebic dysentery to plumbing.

The cost of making even a superficial survey of the 2,000 Federal buildings, such as post offices, courthouses, and office buildings, and the thousands of other structures, such as warehouses, depots, hospitals, and establishments of every description, having plumbing and sanitary systems has been estimated to amount to at least $776,000, and to perform the project with thoroughness would amount to between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000. No provision was made for such a survey in the Public Health Service estimates as submitted in the 1936 Budget, and no appropriation has been made therefor. The Public Health Service reports that as at present organized it would be unable to complete more than 25 percent of the work required in the six cities where it now has sanitary engineer headquarters within the 7 months' period specified in the proposed joint resolution, and then only if all other sanitary engineering activities were dropped during such period.

It is believed that the end sought by Congress can be effectually attained by having the Public Health Service issue the requisite instructions through the various departments and independent establishments to the engineer personnel in charge of Federal buildings throughout the country to survey conditions under their supervision, so that any unhealthful conditions that may be disclosed can be corrected.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 22, 1935.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, the joint resolution to which this message refers was introduced in the House and acted upon by the House a day or two thereafter and before consideration could be given to it by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I therefore move that the message and joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the special orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on the textile situation in New England.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PETERSBURG, ALASKA

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6085) to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including the filling, grading, and paving of streets and sidewalks, the construction and improvement of sewers, and construction of necessary bridges and viaducts in connection with the same, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $40,000, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 3, strike out "$40,000" and insert "$35,000."

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to undertake certain municipal public works, including the filling, grading, and paving of streets and sidewalks, the construction and improvement of sewers, and construction of necessary bridges and viaducts in connection with the same, and for such purposes to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $35,000."

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDING IN VALDEZ, ALASKA

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6723) to authorize the incorporated town of Valdez, Alaska, to construct a public-school building and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $50,000; and to authorize said town to accept grants of money to aid it in financing any public works, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$30,000."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize the incorporated town of Valdez, Alaska, to construct a public-school building and for such purpose to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $30,000; and to authorize said town to accept grants of money to aid it in financing any public works."

The Senate amendment were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting a lecture delivered at Harvard University by George Henry Payne, of the Federal Communications Commission, on the subject of the Federal Communications Act of 1934.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would withhold his request for the present so that I may look it over.

Mr. BOYLAN. The lecture is on the Federal Communication Act of 1934 and was delivered at Harvard University by Commissioner Payne.

Mr. SNELL. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this college professor is on the public pay roll?

Mr. BOYLAN. As I explained to my distinguished friend, this lecture is by George Henry Payne, who is one of our Federal Communication Commissioners.

Mr. RICH. If he is a good professor, we will let it go in.

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

RATIFICATION OF TRADE TREATIES WITH THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, in its issue of May 15 the Washington Herald carried an item respecting the administration's trade-agreement program which should be of interest to the whole House. It reads as follows:

Secretary of State Hull's pet "unconditional most-favored-nation" program yesterday was tottering, with foreign nations declining to give this country return concessions for tariff favors they are already receiving.

Brazil and Colombia, with whom new treaties are awaiting final formalities, are refusing ratifications because the coffee concessions in which they are most interested already are guaranteed them by Hull's policy.

This development was predicted for months by Hull's critics—notably Trade Adviser George Peek—who protested against the policy of extending all tariff favors granted to any one country to all other countries alike.

Coffee was included in the recent treaty with Haiti, already signed, ratified, and promulgated. Under Mr. Hull's policy of "unconditional most-favored-nation" treatment, the coffee favors to Haiti automatically go to other nations. They must, under all conditions, go to Brazil and Colombia, as these two nations already have most-favored-nation agreements with the United States.

The attitude of both governments is that, inasmuch as they already receive the benefits, there is no reason for them to accord this country any further concessions such as are embodied in the pending new treaties.

Colombia's Legislature recently adjourned without ratifying the new treaty, despite considerable pressure from this country for action. Brazil's Legislature, after an identical procedure, has reconvened, but to study other matters.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious matter, and I think that the House is entitled to know more about it. Accordingly, I have prepared a resolution which I shall offer, calling upon the Secretary of State to transmit to the House of Representatives any information in his possession touching upon the failure of these countries to ratify the trade agreements negotiated with them.

There is no question whatever as to the facts upon which this press story was based. The trade agreement with Haiti was signed on March 28 of this year, and was ratified by the Haitian National Assembly on April 26. Among the concessions granted to that country by the United States was the "freezing" of coffee on the free list, and under the policy of the administration, as authorized in the Reciprocal Tariff Act, the concessions granted to one country are extended to all countries without requiring them to extend reciprocal concessions.

The agreement with Brazil was signed February 2 of this year, but it was not to become effective until ratified by the Brazilian Congress. Among the concessions proposed to be granted to Brazil was the "freezing" of coffee on the free list. In fact, this was the principal concession granted, and in return Brazil proposed to grant reciprocal concessions on a large number of our products. However, in view of the generalization of the Haitian concessions, Brazil now finds it unnecessary to ratify the treaty in order to obtain the concession which she sought from this country. The same situation exists with respect to Colombia.

Nothing so clearly illustrates the hopelessness of the administration's trade agreements program, so far as any net benefits to this country are concerned, as the situation I have described. The purpose of the program is to expand our foreign trade, but if we are to throw our domestic market open to all countries in order to gain a concession from one, we stand to be the loser by a very wide margin.

Even under our exclusive agreement with Cuba, in which our concessions to that country are not generalized, we have had to buy an additional $16,000,000 worth of goods over a 6-month period in order to sell that country an additional $4,000,000 worth.

If the present bargaining program is going to result in frittering away the entire domestic market for a mess of pottage, it is the duty of the House to find out about it. The first step is to adopt my resolution calling upon the Secretary of State for a statement as to the status of the Brazilian and Colombian agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution

Whereas it has been reported in the press that the Republic of Brazil and the Republic of Colombia, with whom the President of the United States has negotiated trade treaties, are refusing ratification of said treaties because the coffee concessions, in which they are most interested, are already guaranteed them by the generalization of the concessions granted to the Republic of Haiti under the trade agreement between the United States and that country: Be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives any information in his possession—

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting the reading of the resolution). Mr. Speaker, this resolution ought to go to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. KNUTSON. This is a very serious matter.

Mr. BLANTON. It ought to go to the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then I will have it read in my own time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman will have to get unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the resolution being read in the time of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the reading of the resolution.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then I shall read it myself.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman cannot do that except by unanimous consent.

Mr. KNUTSON. I can certainly read it myself, I submit to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot read the resolution without the consent of the House.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am going to read it as a part of my remarks. It would be an extraordinary ruling—

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this is the gentleman's own writing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot even read his own speech if anyone objects, according to the precedents.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is that going to be the ruling of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not seek to enforce the rule unless the demand is made. When demand is made, the Chair must enforce the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. The resolution ought to go to the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the harm in letting the gentleman read his own resolution?

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection to the gentleman reading it, but it ought to go to the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this resolution the handiwork of the gentleman himself?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes; and he is rather proud of it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Minnesota will be permitted to read the resolution.

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will take up the reading of the resolution where the Clerk left off:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives any information in his possession touching upon the failure of said countries to ratify the trade agreements respectively negotiated with them and the reasons therefor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

PUBLIC GRAZING LANDS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 215).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 3019, a bill to amend sections 1, 3, and 15 of the act entitled "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, and so forth", approved June 28, 1934. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Lands, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the report does not comply with the Ramseyer rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the report does not comply with the Ramseyer rule because it does not show the changes in the law by the proposed bill. I will read the rule which will be found in the Manual on page 338, 2a:

Whenever a committee reports a bill or joint resolution repealing or amending any statute or part thereof it shall include in its report or in an accompanying document—

- (1) The text of the statute or part thereof which is proposed to be repealed; and
- (2) A comparative print of that part of the bill or joint resolution making the amendment and of the statute or part thereof proposed to be amended, showing by stricken-through type and italics, parallel columns, or other appropriate typographical devices the omissions and insertions proposed to be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair will state that the point of order raised by the gentleman may be good as to reports by a legislative committee. But this is a special rule from the Committee on Rules which merely makes in order the consideration of a bill. The Chair does not think the point is well taken when made against the report of the Committee on Rules and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. RICH. Very well, I will make the point of order when the bill is taken up.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman is going to do that, why take the time on the rule?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Colorado yield to me to offer an amendment that it may be under consideration?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I will.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 1, line 8, after the figures "34", insert the words "and all points of order against the bill or report are hereby waived."

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, the Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEARSON in the chair). Three hundred and fifty-three Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we are taking up at this time H. R. 3019 under a special rule.

I want to call the attention of the Membership of the House to section 17 of the bill which we are going to consider, which reads as follows:

Sec. 17. The Secretary of the Interior shall have power to select a director of grazing and such assistant directors of grazing as shall be necessary to administer this act.

In selecting graziers for the administration of this act, the Civil Service Commission shall be governed by the practical range experience in public-domain States which such persons have had, and educational requirements shall be determined by test and not by any fixed rule.

I object to this bill because of the fact that we are doing the very thing that the Republican Party platform and the Democratic Party platform stated they would prohibit at their last national conventions—when they stated they would cut down Government expenses, consolidate offices and departments, and do other things that were for the best interest of the people of this country by trying to make some arrangements for the balancing of the National Budget.

I quote from the Democratic platform of 1932:

We believe that a party platform is a covenant with the people to be faithfully kept by the party when intrusted with power, and that the people are entitled to know in plain words the terms of the contract to which they are asked to subscribe. We hereby declare this to be the platform of the Democratic Party:

The Democratic Party solemnly promises by appropriate action to put into effect the principles, policies, and reforms herein advocated, and to eradicate the policies, methods, and practices herein condemned. We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance, to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government, and we call upon the Democratic Party in the States to make a zealous effort to achieve a proportionate result.

We favor maintenance of the national credit by a Federal Budget annually balanced on the basis of accurate executive estimates within revenues, raised by a system of taxation levied on the principle of ability to pay.

I wish to call the attention of Members of Congress to the fact that at the last session of Congress when we were considering the Taylor grazing bill, whereby 173,000,000 acres of land belonging to the public domain which were unappropriated and unreserved were placed in the custody of the Secretary of the Interior and such lands as were fit were to be allocated to cattlemen and rangers for the purpose of grazing.

During the discussion of the Taylor bill it was admitted by practically every member of the Public Lands Committee that the grazing lands should be under the jurisdiction of one department. The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, agreed that that was the proper thing to do. Secretary Wallace in his discussion agreed that the grazing lands of the country should be under one department. Mr. TAYLOR, the author of the bill, was very much in favor of this procedure. Mr. DEROUEN, Chairman of the Public Lands Committee, stated that that was his idea of the way the grazing lands should be administered. He furthermore stated to me personally that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, with the aid of the President of the United States, would accomplish that within a year; that they did not want to subdivide the authority for grazing lands on public domain, whether it be that which was under the Forest Service or any lands that would be taken over by the Department of the Interior.

I respectfully call attention of the Members of the House in the hearings before the Committee on the Public Lands in the House of Representatives, Seventy-third Congress, first session, of H. R. 2835 and Seventy-third Congress, second session, H. R. 6462. Referring to page 21 of the hearings in 1934, Mr. WHITE made to Secretary Wallace, who was before the committee, the following statement:

You have under your Department an organization in nearly all the districts of the forest reserve that have control of grazing and other uses of public lands.

Now, that being true, do you think it advisable to put this work under their supervision instead of setting up a new bureau for it?

Secretary WALLACE. It will be under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, Secretary Ickes. It would not be a separate set-up or a new bureau.

Mr. WHITE. You think it could be administered by the same organization?

Secretary ICKES. Yes; without additional expenditure.

Now, since the Taylor Grazing Act was to be administered by the same organization and without any additional expenditure, as stated by Secretary Ickes, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House of Representatives to the fact that the spokesman for the Secretary of the Interior before our committee in discussing the merits of this bill (H. R. 3019) stated that the Department of the Interior expected to set up 10 grazing districts in the United States for the perfection of an organization for the operation and control of these grazing lands. Secretary Ickes before the Public Lands Committee on March 6 stated that he was setting up in his Department a Bureau of Grazing Control and would have a man in charge in his Department with 20 assistants and that in the field to begin with in the 10 grazing districts they would place 14 men in each district, which would make a total of 140 men in the field.

I want to call to the attention of the House of Representatives that once a bureau, always a bureau. The beginning today with a set-up of 161 men to start this organization will mean inside of 5 years 1,000 men. When we called this to the attention of Secretary Ickes in the Public Lands Committee meeting the fact that he was doing today what he said a year ago he would not do and asked him why the organization was being set up under his Department rather than the consolidation of grazing lands in the Department of Agriculture with that in the Department of the Interior he stated it could not be done without additional legislation. I call it "passing the buck." After the meeting had adjourned I asked him if he had any objection to the segregation of the grazing lands of the public domain. He said he was perfectly willing. It was my intent and purpose to offer an amendment to H. R. 3019 asking that the grazing lands in the Department of the Interior and those in the Department of Agriculture be placed under the supervision of one head. The chairman of the committee, Mr. DEROUEN, notified me he would give me that opportunity.

We had been meeting on this bill quite regularly during the past month. I had attended practically every meeting of the committee. A meeting was scheduled at 10 a. m. Tuesday, March 19. I reported at that meeting and the secretary to Mr. DEROUEN told me the meeting had been postponed until Thursday, March 21, at 10 a. m.

I want to say to the membership of the House, both Republicans and Democrats, that if we permit the formation of this new organization under the Department of the Interior, as per the set-up proposed by Secretary Ickes—and he deliberately stated he would not form a new organization—that the membership of this House, both Democrats and Republicans, are administering the grazing lands of this country in a very unethical, unbusinesslike manner, building up a new organization which will add to the burden of the taxpayers of this country in future years still greater burdens.

Instead of reducing the number of bureaus, we are increasing them. Why, then, and now, does not the Membership of this House place under the jurisdiction of some organization all the grazing lands that are now being administered by the Department of Agriculture and this new set-up in the Department of the Interior under one department, whether it be the Department of the Interior or the Department of Agriculture? That should not be a question of great moment to Members of Congress, if we want to do the thing that will lighten the burden of the taxpayers of this country. Why permit a new-formed organization that will make conditions more difficult for the stockmen who graze on public lands in the summertime under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service and when they return their stock from the higher ground to the valley in the wintertime must place them under the jurisdiction of other rangers in the Interior Department? It is ridiculous; it is absurd! It will only lead to trouble vexation; and I can in no way support this bill until the members of the Public Lands Committee have backbones where they seem to only display wishbones, because of the fear in their own minds that they might interfere with either the Secretary of Agriculture or the Secretary of the Interior. To me such an excuse is absurd, and I believe the membership of the House of Representatives should segregate the grazing lands of this country in order that the public lands can be administered in a sound, sensible, businesslike way to the best advantage of those who graze on these lands in the public-land States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I take this 5 minutes to call attention to the form of this bill, and I hope these remarks will be considered generally by the committees of the House.

I am a little surprised that the astute Rules Committee permitted a bill, drafted as this bill is drafted, to come onto the floor. Section 1, for instance, provides:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the first sentence of section 1 of said act is amended by striking out the following.

That is the procedure to amend statutes. That is not the language which the statute should carry. In other words, when you go to compile your law you will find a section providing that you must hunt up some other section and strike out something and insert something and put in some periods, and after you have done that, if you are a good lawyer and a good grammarian and a good reasoner, you may know what the law is. Otherwise you would not even know what the law is.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is a very interesting subject, and I ask these questions in good faith. First, how would the gentleman meet that situation?

Mr. MICHENER. The situation is met in some provisions of the bill. Section 3, for instance, reads:

That section 15 of said act is amended to read as follows—

and then you restate the entire section as amended. I will say this frankly—I do not know who drafted this bill—it looks to me like one of these bills coming from a department and drafted by a new man in the department. I do say that no experienced man in the Department of the Interior ever drafted this bill and sent it up to the committee, because they do it differently when they know how.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's remarks. I believe the terrible mess—and that is the only word to use—in which Federal statutes are today is due to the fact that we do not have a real, comprehensive legislative bill-drafting bureau. I do not say that in respect to the employees there now. They are all competent, but there is no State in the Union that has gone into the mechanics of legislative bill drafting that would have such an insufficient organization as has the Congress of the United States. We do not have any organization at all. I think we appropriate a pittance of $40,000 a year, when States like Wisconsin, which started the legislative bill-drafting bureau, and other States that have followed, have real legislative bill-drafting bureaus. Because Members have claimed that they can draft any bill and that a Congressman should be able to draft legislation, we have never developed in this Congress a real legislative bill-drafting bureau. The States laugh at what we have in the Congress of the United States. Until we can get Congress to really appreciate that no Member of Congress can draft his own legislation, and until we establish a real legislative bill-drafting bureau, we will have legislative statutes that no lawyer in America can determine what the law is. That is the situation today.

Mr. MICHENER. May I suggest to the gentleman right along this line that within the last few months we seem to be in an era of new bureaus and new commissions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has suggested another bureau which, in my judgment, would be a useful bureau and which would not entail a great deal of expense, in which bureau we might consolidate the splendid drafting service in the House today. We have a splendid drafting service today, but it is too limited.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did not suggest a new bureau, but we might as well not have any bureau compared with what we have now, because we do not afford enough facilities and enough help to really draft legislation.

Mr. MICHENER. I agree with the gentleman in that particular. But, coming back to this bill, what does it do? This bill is the story of what the man who drafted it wanted to accomplish; that is all there is to it. It is simply a statement of the way the man wanted to make certain amendments in the existing law. I am making this suggestion during the consideration of the rule, not of the bill; I hope the committee will not ask this House to pass this bill in its present form, for it would be lamentable to present to the country a conglomeration of this kind. Section 1 is of one type. Section 3, outside of the first line or two, is properly drafted. Section 4 is something else. The bill should be redrafted. I think if it were submitted to the present drafting service of the House, it could be returned to us in 20 minutes written in such a way as to be understood by those who have to deal with it and operate under it. As it is the bill in effect says, "Strike so and so out of some other law and insert something else somewhere else in some other law." How are you going to know the effect of the bill by reading this bill? It is perfectly ridiculous; it is not only ridiculous, it is assinine, and I hope the committee will seriously consider redrafting the bill. I am sure that there are lawyers on the committee qualified to prepare a suitable bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman states that the bill is an assinine bill. I will say to the gentleman that the contents of the bill are worse than that.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not know just what that would mean.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I think the full discussion of this bill will take place after the rule is adopted. We have received no more requests for time under the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the rule and the amendment thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 34, noes 11.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DE ROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3019) to amend sections 1, 3, and 15 of "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3019, with Mr. TERRY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After a pause.] One hundred and five Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. DE ROUEN. Mr. Chairman, the three amendments offered to the House in the pending bill are suggestions made by people living in the 11 States where there are grazing lands. Mass meetings were held in many of these States and the bill incorporates the suggestions made at these meetings.

The committee carefully considered the situation from all aspects and there is no doubt whatever that the three amendments are necessary if we are to accomplish the purposes intended to be accomplished by the Taylor grazing bill of 1934.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DE ROUEN. I yield.

Mr. BURDICK. Can the gentleman tell us anything about the composition of these mass meetings?

Mr. DE ROUEN. The committee has a brief brought to it from the meeting held in Colorado. At this meeting every State interested sent representatives. In the volume in the files of the committee are contained the statements made at that meeting.

Mr. BURDICK. Were those meetings composed only of the interests who wanted to lease the lands, or were they composed of everybody concerned?

Mr. DE ROUEN. Notice of the meetings was published in newspapers and was posted in various places. I assume that the various interests affected were represented at the meetings.

Mr. Chairman, as I am just out of the hospital following an attack of heart trouble, I shall ask my friend, the ranking member of the committee on the Democratic side, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON], to explain the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. The pending bill amends the Taylor Grazing Act in four particulars. It will be remembered that the Taylor Grazing Act passed by the House during the last session of Congress provided that all land in the public domain could be used for the formation of grazing districts. This bill applies only to 11 States. There are some 167,000,000 acres of land designated as public lands. By the terms of the Taylor Grazing Act as passed by the House this entire area was made available for the purpose of the formation of grazing districts, but the bill was amended by the Senate cutting down the area available for this purpose to 80,000,000 acres.

The Department of the Interior sent men into the field for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act as passed by Congress. They went to the various States. They found the States favorable to the formation of grazing districts, and in every State where there was public land public meetings were held. Everyone interested in the question was given notice and the people generally responded to those notices. The result was that after hearings in the various States the Department found that it had demand for 143,000,000 acres of land to be placed in grazing districts. In order, therefore, to carry out the purpose, intentions, and desires of the people in these various States it will be necessary for Congress to amend the Taylor Grazing Act so as to include at least an additional amount of land to that included in the original act.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman tell me how much of the 82,000,000 acres of land is now being used for grazing?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I would say a large part of it is so used; practically all of it in some way or other.

Mr. CULKIN. It is not all being used. It is proposed now to turn over the entire 165,000,000 acres carte blanche to the Secretary of the Interior. This bill gives the Secretary of the Interior complete jurisdiction over this whole area?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is true.

Mr. CULKIN. Autocratic jurisdiction?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I would not say autocratic jurisdiction, but it gives him jurisdiction over this area.

Mr. CULKIN. It withdraws this land from settlement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That has already been done.

Mr. CULKIN. It not only withdraws the 80,000,000 acres but the remaining amount.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. All of it is withdrawn from homesteading and from settlement now.

Mr. CULKIN. I understood that the land that was not included, in other words, the difference between 80,000,000 and 165,000,000 acres, was subject to settlement under the order of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No; the gentleman is in error. If he will read section 15 of the original act, he will find that all of the public land is turned over to the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of leasing, if he desires to lease the land, but only 80,000,000 acres can be used for forming grazing districts.

Mr. CULKIN. When this bill was passed in the House, it will be remembered that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. CARTER] made a very sustained and very able speech against this procedure.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. It was a very able speech; I agree with the gentleman; but I do not think it was very well sustained by argument.

Mr. CULKIN. It did not result in favorable action by the House, but it seems to me now we are going too far.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I do not yield for a speech from the gentleman, and I wish he would ask questions.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding thus far.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, getting back to where we were, I may say the first amendment we are asking here today is an amendment so that we may have the right in the various Western States to include in grazing districts all the land that the people of those States want included. There are various reasons for this, and I should like to point out some of the reasons. It was found when we went into the States and began to segregate certain areas for grazing purposes that in order to rehabilitate those areas and bring the grass back and put the ground in a condition so that it would be valuable it was necessary to limit the number of cattle or the number of sheep that could be grazed on those areas. The result was, of course, that the areas that were not in the grazing district would immediately be overcrowded, and it was seen at once if that kind of condition obtained all the land that was not within the grazing areas would be completely denuded and rendered absolutely worthless. We could see, therefore, that it was necessary to put all of the land within the grazing districts or, as stated, the land that was not therein would be entirely denuded and rendered valueless.

Mr. Chairman, we had another situation arise. Under the Taylor Grazing Act we have established some 40 or 50 civilian conservation camps. These camps are established on this land and the C. C. C. boys dig wells, make trails, build roads, plant various kinds of grass, and do things generally that will rehabilitate the soil and bring it back to its former condition, where it will be of value. These camps cannot be established on any land that is not within the district, because the Department has ruled—and I think rightly—that they will not go on land, rebuild it, reestablish it, and put it in the condition in which it should be placed unless they have some control over its future; therefore these camps cannot be established on any of these lands not within the grazing districts.

For these two very important reasons it is absolutely necessary that this act be amended, as originally passed by the House, to include all of the land under the public domain. I think this is a most important provision.

Mr. BURDICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. Is the gentleman satisfied from his experience on the committee and having listened to the discussion that the bill as now presented to the House is fair to the homesteader and to the large operator equally?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes. I may say that we had before our committee both classes. I have received hundreds of letters from my State and various other Members have received many letters from their States. Not only that, but, as I stated a few moments ago, the Department has gone into every State to determine the sentiment of the people and it has been found that the sentiment is almost unanimous for the passage of this bill in the various States.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that the people in the gentleman's State who use these lands for grazing in the summertime must have their flocks under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Some do, yes; not all.

Mr. RICH. If this act is passed and in the summertime they graze these flocks under the jurisdiction of the Department of Agriculture, when they are brought off the high places, or their winter-grazing grounds, then they must be under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Of course, to a certain extent that is true.

Mr. RICH. Well, that is a fact. They must be placed under the supervision of the Department of the Interior if this bill is passed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is true. These lands would be under the Department of the Interior.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe—and he is a member of the committee and interested in the grazing situation in the State of Utah—that all of these grazing lands ought to be under the supervision of one department and not under the supervision of two departments of the Government?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I am very glad to answer that question. I may say that as far as I am individually concerned, I would have no objection at all and should be very glad to have these lands under the Department of the Interior or the Department of Agriculture, but more especially under the Department of the Interior.

However, no harm can come from the dual operation of these lands. The operation that the Forest Service has is entirely separate and distinct from the operation of the lands under this bill. They are different lands, under different conditions, under different environment, different circumstances, and the dual operation of these lands will in no wise affect the purpose of this act. The matter can be carried out so far as this act is concerned just as well by both departments, as provided in this bill, as could be done by either one of the departments.

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman will permit an observation at this point, I disagree with the gentleman with respect to that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I am very sorry to disagree with the gentleman on anything, but we have disagreed before.

Mr. RICH. The same cattle that graze in the wintertime under the Department of Agriculture must be grazed in the summertime under the Department of the Interior, or vice versa, and when our committee tried to get information here in Washington with respect to grazing, we had to take it up with the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture. Nothing can be dealt with so far as grazing lands are concerned unless we take it up with both departments. Would it not be simpler if there were only one Department rather than two? I do not see how the gentleman can claim that administration would be just as easy when we have two Departments to deal with.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DEROUEN. Will the gentleman explain that this grazing bill is a conservation measure and has as much to do with conservation as anything I can think of in the preservation of these grazing areas for the benefit of the public?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I am very pleased to have that suggestion.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. Can the gentleman give us any idea of the approximate cost of administration under section 17, where it is provided that the Secretary shall have power to select a director and assistant directors? Will the gentleman venture an opinion as to the probable cost?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. The bill provides for that, and the House has appropriated for the administration of this act the sum of $250,000.

Mr. DITTER. Does this bill contemplate any further request for an appropriation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No further request at all.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. However, when the bill is in operation, fees will be collected sufficient to maintain it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I am pleased to have that suggestion.

Under the Taylor Act, as the gentleman from Oregon reminds me, of course, we collect fees. For every head of cattle and for every head of sheep grazing on this land fees will be collected. Fifty percent of this goes into the general Treasury, 25 percent goes to the county where the land is located, and 25 percent goes for the upbuilding of rehabilitation of the land itself. So that we expect when this gets under way fairly, instead of being an expense to the Government, it will, in fact, bring revenues to the Government.

So far as I am concerned, this is all I care to say about the first amendment; and if there is any question on the amendment, I will be pleased to entertain it now. If not, I want to go to the second amendment.

The second amendment simply provides for a certain kind of survey. In our Western States the Government has ceded to the various States certain land sections. In our State we have, for instance, school sections 16 and 36. These sections cannot be given to the State until there is a survey made. The State, of course, wants to have these lands so they can trade them for other lands and in order to accomplish this result we have provided that instead of going on to the land and actually surveying it in this rough and mountainous, and sometimes desert, country, we can survey it from field notes or from maps in the office and thereby be able to give the State the amount of land it is entitled to so it can exchange this land for land in other sections.

Mr. PIERCE. Those sections, 16 and 36, are school lands given to the States by reason of their admission.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is true.

The next amendment, which is amendment numbered 3, differs from the original bill in perhaps two particulars. Under the original bill the Secretary of the Interior was not permitted to lease any land that was contiguous to a homestead or to a settler unless it included at least 640 acres. He could only lease it to land that was contiguous to the settler. We have found this impracticable because in a number of instances there are smaller tracts than 640 acres and in numerous instances the adjacent owner does not have any cattle or sheep or any use for this land and therefore it cannot be used. This amendment is simply a clarifying amendment to permit the use of this land.

Section 4, which has been attacked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], is simply for the purpose of carrying out the original act. It does not add anything to the original act except to designate how these people are to be chosen.

The original act provided that such amounts and such means as should be necessary to carry out the purposes of the act should be provided by Congress, and that was done. What we have sought to do is to make it definite, and we provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall have the right to select the director of grazing and such assistant directors of grazing as shall be necessary to administer the act.

That is no different from any other department of the Government. We think the Secretary of the Interior should choose such director and assistants as he may need to carry out the provisions of the act.

The reason is this. You sometimes have in the western States men who are very familiar with cattle, men who are very familiar with sheep, men who are really expert on the range, men who are expert executives so far as carrying out this range act is concerned. Yet if they had to pass a technical examination under the civil service they would be eliminated, and the result would be that we would have college professors operating the range. In order to do away with that we have provided that the Secretary shall select the director and his assistants.

The Secretary was of the opinion that he would need five assistants.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I think that is a wise provision. I am firmly convinced and believe that men who are practical are better than college professors to administer the provisions of this bill. I want to say to the gentleman that I am in hearty sympathy with that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. If I have done the gentleman an injustice, I want to apologize.

Mr. RICH. The great point I am making is, and what I object to, is the dual control; that is my whole objection to the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not had time to study the bill, but I will ask the gentleman if the purpose of the bill is to liberalize grazing on the public domain?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is the purpose, to a certain extent.

Mr. PIERCE. Not to liberalize, but to regulate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. It is an effort to liberalize and regulate it.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is my understanding that most of the land on the public domain has been overgrazed, and that is partially due to the dust storms.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is true. This bill is to correct that and to rehabilitate the land.

Now, I want to say in reference to this amendment that there was a subcommittee appointed on this particular amendment. We met with the Civil Service Commission and others, and after careful deliberation we agreed on practically every word of this amendment. Here is what we tried to get at:

We felt that it would be unfair to have college men just because they were college men have these positions. We thought that the positions should be filled largely by men who had a wide experience on the range. The Civil Service Commission took the view that unless we put in this amendment that education should be required by test and not by any fixed rule they could say we will require everyone who has a position to be a college graduate or a high-school graduate or have a 2 years' college course, and so forth. Under the amendment they could not put in a rule like that.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. Is that not rather a serious reflection on the Democratic Party's present appreciation of college professors?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I will leave that to the gentleman. I do not think so. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURDICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. BURDICK. Is the gentleman sure that in answering these test questions it would not require technical knowledge in order to pass the examination?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. No. I think it will not. I think we have liberalized it just as much as we can.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. In all seriousness, will the gentleman justify that change which he spoke of under section 3, by which discretion is vested in the Secretary of the Interior to determine the matter of the leases? I think the gentleman did say something about it earlier.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. That is already in the original act.

Mr. DITTER. Is the discretion in the original act, that is vested here, with regard to the privilege of the Secretary to determine?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes. That is in the original act. This is just a reenacting of that law.

Mr. DITTER. Even as to the matter of preference?

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, it will be recalled that when the original Taylor grazing bill was being considered at the last session of the Congress I opposed it, and opposed it as vigorously as I could. At that time I took occasion to state the reasons for my opposition. If the original bill were before the Congress again for passage, I should oppose it now just as vigorously as I opposed it then; because I still believe the principle of the original Taylor grazing bill is wrong.

However, the Taylor grazing bill is not before the House at this time for consideration. The Taylor bill is now existing law, in process of administration. What we are considering here now are certain proposed amendments to that law, and the question to be decided is whether those amendments ought to be adopted. It is my opinion that the amendments should be adopted. Improper as I believe the Taylor Grazing Act is, I certainly have no objection to having it improved, if that is possible; and I believe the proposed amendments are calculated to do that.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I gladly yield to my colleague from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman stated that he considered the Taylor Grazing Act improper, illegal, and wrong?

Mr. MOTT. I did state that.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman state why?

Mr. MOTT. I stated my reasons at length when the original bill was under debate last session, but I shall be glad to review them briefly for the benefit of my colleague. My objection to it is very fundamental. The Taylor grazing bill takes away from the Congress of the United States all legislative authority over the public domain of the United States and vests that authority in the Secretary of the Interior. It effectively repeals all of the homestead laws which have heretofore been upon the statute books of the United States. In lieu of that legislation so repealed, the act grants to the Secretary of the Interior absolute discretionary authority, including lawmaking jurisdiction, so far as the use of land is concerned, over the entire public domain of the United States. It permits him, in his discretion, to repeal the homestead laws by departmental order or decree whenever he pleases. It permits him to say to one citizen of the United States, "You may take up a homestead here", and at the same time permits him to say to another citizen of the United States, "You may not take up a homestead there." It substitutes government by decree for government by law within the public domain.

There are about 179,000,000 acres of public domain in the United States, all of which, under the law as it existed prior to the enactment of the Taylor grazing bill, belonged to all of the people of the United States, and all of the people had a right to use it in common. The Taylor bill repealed this common right of the people to the use of this land.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Is the gentleman not aware of the fact that there was practically no homesteading going on; that the lands in the public domain were simply valueless as homesteads?

Mr. MOTT. I do not understand that at all. That is not the testimony before our committee. That matter was very thoroughly gone into in committee, and we have had witnesses from all over the United States. Some of them, I may say, were very emphatic in contradicting that statement. I understand the gentleman's argument on this point perfectly, but I do not agree with him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I do not know whether I understood the gentleman correctly or not. Of course, the gentleman understands that that privilege he is now talking about has already been taken away under the Taylor Grazing Act, and these amendments have nothing to do with that.

Mr. MOTT. I admit that, certainly. I have been stating my objections, not to the amendments, but to the original Taylor Grazing Act, for the benefit of my colleague from Oregon. All of the land now is withdrawn from public entry by proclamation of the President of the United States, and this was solely on account of the passage of the Taylor Grazing Act. This act is in existence. It is the law of the country. We do not have any more homestead laws in the United States. Nobody can take up a homestead any place in the United States unless he asks permission of the Secretary of the Interior. That is what the Taylor grazing law did. That was the main object and purpose of the Taylor Act, and that was, and is, one of my principal objections to it.

Of course it is claimed, and it may be true—I am not quite satisfied on that point—that this is a conservation act as well. It may be true that it will help to preserve some of the grazing lands. I hope that is true. The fact remains, however, that there is not a word, not a syllable in the entire act which compels any conservation. If any conservation is to be effected upon the public domain of the United States under the Taylor Act it will be entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. I have no doubt, of course, that the Secretary will exercise his discretion in this regard to the best of his ability, because he is a conservationist. The point I am making is that conservation is, at best, an incidental factor in the act and not the fundamental object of it.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it not a fact that in addition to eliminating those lands from future homesteading it gives the Secretary of the Interior a bloody clutch on the cattle industry? It makes him czar of the cattle industry in a large portion of the United States?

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman's forceful language is, of course, his own, but I doubt if anyone would seriously contend that the Taylor Act places very much of a limit on any of the powers it undertakes to grant to the Secretary. That is one of the purposes of the bill, to place authority in the use of public land in the hands of one man. I am quite aware that regulation of some sort is necessary, and I do not object to purely administrative regulation under definite law. My fundamental objection to the Taylor grazing bill is that through it the Congress gives up its power to legislate in regard to the public domain. My fundamental objection to the act is that it takes the lawmaking power over the use of the public domain of the United States out of the Congress of the United States and vests it in the discretionary authority of an executive department, and that it repeals the homestead laws of the country.

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. Certainly, I yield to the lady from Arizona.

Mrs. GREENWAY. While there is not in this bill any section authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to rehabilitate the earth's surface, the original act specifically authorizes and directs him to do any necessary work to prevent soil erosion and protect the public domain.

Mr. MOTT. I think that is true. Under the act the Secretary of the Interior can do anything he pleases in that regard, in his own discretion.

Mrs. GREENWAY. I thought the gentleman said it did not really direct him to take care of the public domain.

Mr. MOTT. I do not think the original bill really directs the Secretary of the Interior to do anything. It gives him authority to do it if he wants to. That is my interpretation of the original bill.

Now, so much for the original Taylor bill, which is the law of the land and which its opponents, through lack of numbers, could not repeal if they wanted to. I have spent too much time on the original bill, which I opposed, and not enough upon the amendments, which I intend to support.

What are these amendments? When the bill passed the House at the last session there was no limitation as to the grazing area over which the Secretary of the Interior should have jurisdiction to make rules, regulations, and restrictions. When the bill reached the Senate an amendment was adopted limiting the grazing area to 80,000,000 acres. The first amendment removes that limitation. It was found upon an attempt to administer the law that it could not be administered equitably with that limitation for the reason that some areas would be included while others would have to be excluded. In the eastern part of the State of Oregon, the district represented by my distinguished colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], there are very large areas used for public grazing. Cattle raising is one of the principal industries of that part of the State. With a limitation of 80,000,000 acres, all of the public grazing land in eastern Oregon could not be included, and that created the impossible and unfair situation of having grazing on one area regulated and restricted but unrestricted on an adjoining area.

A typical example of that was in Crook and Deschutes Counties. On account of the limitation, these counties were left out of the regulated grazing area. Now, in the territory adjoining those counties, where grazing is to be regulated and restricted under rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior, the transient cattle raisers are prohibited from coming in and using that land. Transient cattle raisers cannot use the range in any part of the country where these regulations apply.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. Unless all of the grazing land is included, therefore, transient cattle raisers will go into that part of the territory which does not come within the operation of the act and will obviously injure and probably put entirely out of business the resident cattle raisers.

No matter what I think of the original law, therefore, I would certainly be obliged, in order to protect those people, to support these amendments. There are other amendments, I may say also, with which I am heartily in accord because they do tend to make possible the equitable operation of this law which in its original form was impossible; and although I am opposed to the original law, although I would like to see it off the statute books, as long as we have that law I certainly want all of my people treated fairly under it. The adoption of the amendments, therefore, becomes a necessity.

I wish to take occasion now in the remaining minute at my disposal to thank the chairman and members of the Public Lands Committee, of which I am a member, for the eminently fair and courteous and generous treatment they have accorded me and the people of my district in the consideration of the original Taylor Act. The people in western Oregon, whom I represent, did not want that bill. We have a great deal of public land in my part of the State of Oregon. It is not grazing land. It is revested public land; it is a part of the public domain; but there was a very serious question whether that land would not be embraced in the far-sweeping provisions of the original Taylor bill. I wanted that revested land excluded from the bill, and the Public Lands Committee was kind enough to accept my amendment to eliminate it and to exempt my portion of the State from the operation of this bill.

I have told you now why I opposed the original act; I opposed it on principle; and I still believe it wrong in principle. I have told you also why I am supporting these amendments; I am supporting them because without the amendments the bill would be admittedly inequitable and unfair to a large portion of the very people whom the original bill is supposed to benefit. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I suppose my taking advantage of the rule at this time will be regarded somewhat as an imposition upon the patience of the House in that I do not expect to speak upon the bill actually before us but wish to make a few brief observations concerning another measure which, while it does not come from the Committee on Public Lands, of which I happen to be a member, but from the Committee on Agriculture, nevertheless affects not only the livestock industry, both on and off public lands, but also the whole industry of farming. It may not surprise you, Mr. Chairman, to know that I intend to say a few words about the proposed amendments to the triple A, so called.

The gentleman from Oregon, who has just spoken so clearly with respect to the Taylor grazing bill, called our attention to the fact that we are from time to time delegating power to make law to executive officers and administrative officials, a power supposed to reside in the Congress of the United States; and when he made that statement my thought immediately went to this other proposal which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and which has to do with amendments to the present law known as the "Agricultural Adjustment Act." If I read the language of the amendments correctly, the Congress is asked to make another very sweeping delegation of the lawmaking power to an agency or agencies far removed from the control of the Congress.

I have only a few moments; I want merely to strike at the fundamentals of this suggestion, if I may, for there is not time to discuss the details of the business of farming, the oldest of occupations, and one engaged in by millions of the American people. I may be pretty old-fashioned; I have been charged with that crime a good many times; but no man who is engaged in the business of farming will misunderstand me when I say that the most precious thing about it is independence.

There are hundreds and hundreds of thousands of farmers in the United States who are content to struggle through hard times and to carry on their business in normal good times at a very, very low return, largely because they enjoy the independence of the life. They are their own masters. Their love of the soil and the cultivation of the soil really springs from that human desire to be free. As I read these proposed amendments that condition is to come to an end.

Mr. Chairman, we examine this bill and we notice that there is provided the establishment of a series of marketing agreements to be negotiated amongst the producers of a certain crop, presumably with the assistance of the Secretary of Agriculture and in cooperation with the processors and dealers engaged in handling such crops; and when the marketing agreement is decided and agreed upon by a number of processors equal to at least 50 percent of the total number in a prescribed area or by a number of producers who together produce more than 50 percent of the crop in the prescribed area, that marketing agreement, as I read this bill, immediately attains the force of law. It becomes for that area and with respect to that crop the law of the land to be backed by the force of the Federal Government, a sweeping delegation of the lawmaking power.

Further than that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized under this bill to impose a licensing system on all dealers and processors of a given crop if in his judgment the refusal of 50 percent of the processors or of the producers to sign on the dotted line obstructs the policy of the act.

Mr. Chairman, thus there is vested an extraordinary power in the hands of one man to make law. These marketing agreements, whether they are voluntary or imposed, may include the regulation of the price of the product. They may regulate the area in which the processors or dealers may operate, buying and selling from or for the farmer. They may regulate the quantity that may be produced in a given area and how it shall be marketed. And those regulations, as I read this bill, immediately assume the force of law. Any dealer or processor who purchases or sells a product raised upon a farm in violation of the agreement may be prosecuted and fined for each violation or for each day of continued violation. There is not a Member of this House who can at this hour visualize what a marketing agreement will contain. The country may be divided into a number of areas and differing regulations imposed in each area in accordance with the marketing agreement to cover that area. We have no idea what kind of law will govern the production of food in the United States as we pass this bill, and I am wondering if it would interest anybody in these curious times, so fraught with hysteria, to regard the fundamentals involved in this situation. I am not speaking of the constitutional fundamentals, I am not competent to discuss that matter, but some of the things that affect human beings.

It is a Fascist idea that the majority of persons engaged in a business may employ the force of government to compel the minority to do as the majority wishes. Fifty-one percent, according to this philosophy, of the persons engaged in a business, be it farming or anything else, under this Fascist idea, may with the support of the Government or its bureaucracies, enact and effect a law governing the conduct of the business and compel the 49 percent to live a life decreed by the 51 percent. There, in my judgment, is the fundamental thing that should attract and hold our attention as we bring ourselves to a consideration of a bill such as the A. A. A. amendment bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KENNEY. Have the farm organizations of the gentleman's district expressed themselves on this proposition?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not received communications from any farmers in my district, and I may say that my district is almost entirely farms. I think it fair also to say that most of the farmers in my district know that I am in the same business.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Referring to those fundamentals, and forgetting the question of constitutionality, does the gentleman believe the establishment and creation of these trade areas through the issuance of these regulations would tend to destroy, impede, or interfere with the exchange of goods and commodities, both manufactured and raw, as between the States and the people residing in those States?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Why, of course. Conditions vary tremendously over this immense country. What may be wise for an area on the Pacific coast with respect to the raising of vegetables, for example, might be utterly unwise for a similar area in Florida or western New York. These areas will be contiguous one to the other. In an industrial and economic sense they overlap in hopeless confusion and complication. From the purely administrative standpoint, I do not see how the Secretary of Agriculture can divide this country into appropriate areas and make them all work in harmony.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The gentleman is a dairy farmer?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. The dairy cow and the dairy farmer are selected for a particular operation and experiment in this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman explain how he markets his dairy products from his farm, and is he satisfied?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not sure that would interest the members of the committee. I happen to be in the business, and my only hope is that the Government will let me alone. That is all I care about. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, to the fundamental, again; I am thinking of the rights of the minority. Is the 49 percent to be subject completely to the domination of the 51 percent? Have we reached that point in our development here in America? If that is true, then for the future scarcely ever can the under dog rise up and fight his way to the top. Legislation of this kind involves a philosophy which, in the end, means that once an under dog always an under dog. What is the under dog in business? It is the poor fellow who starts handicapped. Granted that he has thrift and character and energy, but he starts handicapped. How can he rise and fight the battle of life?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only by competing with his more favored neighbor. How can he compete? Let us be practical. Only by working harder and underselling in a competitive market. Today, in accordance with the new philosophy, that man is called a chiseler and subjected to contumely—the little man who has his life before him and must get ahead. Yet these bills, which come before us—and there is a similar provision in the Wagner Labor Disputes Act which gives to a majority the absolute control of the method by which the minority in a plant shall earn their living—yet these bills come along and say that the little man who can succeed only by fighting for his rights must subject himself to a law not made by the Congress but by his powerful neighbors backed up by the force of government. [Applause.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. GREEVER].

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, I have had considerable correspondence with the stockmen of my State relative to their views with respect to the inclusion of all of the public domain within the provisions of the Taylor Grazing Act. This, as we all know, simply means the end of an institution which has been known in the West as free range.

Generally speaking, there has been a wide difference of opinion among the stockmen of the State of Wyoming relative to the desirability of the act. I have opposed the adoption of the first of the amendments which are now before this Committee mainly for two reasons.

In the first place, I have felt that the grazing districts provided by the Taylor Grazing Act under the law as it now exists should have been set up and should have been given a fair trial before applying the provisions of the act to all of the lands in the public-lands States. In other words, I am more apprehensive of the practical difficulties which will be encountered in the administration of the act than I am of the act itself. I think it would have been wise, before including all of the public grazing lands in the provisions of the Taylor Act, that a fair trial should have been given in the administration of the act by the creation of actual working of the grazing districts.

My second reason for feeling that the first amendment to the act is not wise at this time is due to the fact that it must of necessity, in order to properly operate, create a herd law, something which has never yet been effected within the State of Wyoming, in that the provisions of the act and the regulations of the grazing districts must, in order to be workable, necessarily contain provisions against trespassing in these districts by animals which have no allocation for range use.

I realize, of course, that the Taylor Grazing Act in itself, in case it can be effectively administered, contains many good provisions, in that it will prevent overgrazing and that it will prevent soil erosion that has been caused by overgrazing. I am mindful of the fact that the act, properly administered, will do away in many cases, as the Secretary of the Interior points out, with the trespassing upon privately owned lands and the overgrazing of the public lands by persons who have no commensurability adjacent to the range lands which they occupy. I am also mindful that my fellow Members from practically all of the public-lands States feel that the amendment is advantageous in their particular localities. I do not feel that Wyoming has the same problem with respect to erosion and overgrazing that many of the other States have had.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that we would adopt a far better policy if we were to take the act as it now stands and administer it before putting all of the lands under its provisions. However, during the hearings we have been assured by representatives of the Department of the Interior that the grazing districts would be largely self-governing and their establishment would depend upon the wishes of those people who are owners of stock within the areas proposed to be enclosed within the districts. This administrative policy will, of course, remove much objection because it will be subject to majority designation and rule and will give those within the district the right to say to a large extent, first, whether they shall be included, and second, if they are included, under what conditions, rules, and regulations they will operate.

I must confess that these assurances and the further assurances that the provisions of section 15 of the act will be carried out wherever possible, remove a great deal of the apprehension from my mind, but I still believe that it would be prudent, in this great change of policy affecting the largest industry of the West, to proceed carefully and to feel our way as we go, and with that feeling existing so strongly in my mind as it does I feel constrained to say that I reluctantly and possibly somewhat sectionally disagree with the first amendment, yet I also feel constrained to say that had grazing districts been put into operation under the provisions of the original act and had the success of the administration of this act been demonstrated, I would probably not feel inclined to disagree with the provisions of the first amendment to this act.

I am in full agreement with all amendments except the first. [Applause.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have 4 minutes left, and I yield that time to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, we have pending before the Public Lands Committee a bill to create a monument to the first homestead or the first tract of land taken up under the homestead law, which land is located in the State of Nebraska.

This policy of giving a homestead to the people who wanted to settle the unappropriated lands of this country was one of the greatest policies for the development of a nation that was ever written into law in any country.

In my boyhood I obtained an old geography used by my grandmother, and the country west of the Mississippi River was indicated in this geography as the Great American Desert, but through the operations of the Homestead Act and the settlement of the unappropriated public lands of this country, we have built up wonderful communities extending throughout the Western States to the Pacific Ocean. The acquirement of this land and the building up of communities, followed by the railroads and the schools, constituted one of the greatest areas in the upbuilding of a country in the world's history.

It is now intended through the operation of the Grazing Act to abrogate this law. We are to do away with the homestead law and close the door of opportunity to the man who wants to make a new start. By legislative enactment we are to finish up America.

We have left in this country 172,000,000 acres of public land. Under the provisions of the act passed in this House at the last session and amended in the Senate, we are taking 80,000,000 acres of this land and putting it under the administration of a department here in Washington. It is now proposed to amend that act and take the last remaining part of the public lands and bring them within the provisions of the Taylor Grazing Act, which will entirely abrogate the Homestead Act and put the entire matter of settling on any piece of this land within the discretion of a few representatives of the Secretary of the Interior and permitting them to say whether that land shall be classified for homesteads or not. In other words, we put it in the control of some one person to say whether this land shall be acquired under the rules and regulations of the homestead law.

For this reason I am opposed to this amendment. I want to give you a little picture. In my State, in a beautiful mountain valley, with broad, sweeping meadows, supplied with mountain streams, we have one of the prettiest places for settlement or for the establishment of communities and homes anywhere in the country. It happens to be, unfortunately, in a national forest, and the forest officers prevent anybody from going in there and homesteading. I had occasion to travel some 30 miles through these mountains and along this beautiful valley on a truck trail built by the Forest Service, and what did we find there? We find here and there a few standard sheep wagons and a few flocks and once in a while a shepherd. This was in a country where we might have had churches and schools and civilization. As it is, the region is dominated entirely by the Forest Service, and anyone who makes application for a homestead is denied this right and told to keep out. Who is enjoying this land? Who is reaping all the benefits? When you trace the ownership of these flocks you find they are owned by such people as Swift & Co.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS].

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentleman of the House, I might say that we entered into this long-range program of our public-domain planning with a great deal of uneasiness, but in my judgment the diplomatic manner in which the Department of the Interior has acted in the performance of the service has won the confidence of the stockmen of the West where the public lands are located.

It was my pleasure to participate in the organization of one of these grazing districts under the provisions of the Taylor Land Grazing Act. It was a new era in the administration of this country. Instead of the Department of the Interior here in Washington attempting to administer the Taylor Land Grazing Act out there in the far West, Department officials simply delegated the authority to the men who were actually engaged in raising cattle and sheep.

These men came down from the mountains and plains, organized their committees, elected their officers, and were given the power to make rules under which this was to be administered.

As I sat there and watched the organization, it occurred to me such was one of the most democratic performances this administration, or any administration, has given to this country of ours.

I believe that these amendments are necessary. I believe the people of the West will appreciate them, and I call upon all Members of the House to support these amendments, believing that it will be for the best interests of the people of this country. These amendments to the basic Taylor Land Grazing Act clarify its purposes and enlarge its usefulness. They are the usual changes required after a major piece of legislation has been enacted and has been in operation for a period of time sufficient to disclose its weaknesses. These amendments strengthen the Taylor Land Grazing Act and protect the interests of both the Government and the stockmen and sheepmen. They plug loopholes and add or remove restrictions which have proved necessary in the light of administration of this almost year-old law.

Others have described the technical features of these amendments, and since you have been informed on these points I shall confine my remarks to only two major features of this law.

These two are the decentralization of activities and the efficient administration which have proved salient features of this law since its inception approximately 11 months ago.

It was my duty and pleasure during the last session of Congress to take the floor when the bill was under consideration. I had been informed that this particular type of legislation had been before Congress for a period of 30 years, more or less, but had always been stopped by those who feared bureaucratic control of the public-domain grazing areas. I have never known any type of individual more independent than the average stockman, and no one more willing to battle for his rights; and this legislation appeared to them as an effort to force them into regimentation and under a departmental thumb.

I had faith, however, in the legislation which appeared before me in committee, and although I was confident that it would become understood and appreciated sooner or later by the stockman himself, I did not realize that it would operate so successfully in such a brief period of time.

Probably the most important factor which has brought about the success of this law has been the home-rule feature. Instead of being subject to dictation from a department in Washington in the matter of grazing district boundaries, in the selection of local officials, and in the making of local rules and regulations, the stockmen in the various parts of the country were given complete authority to create their own administrative organizations, elect their own officials, recommend grazing district boundaries, and otherwise operate almost independently of Washington. Only a few general rules and regulations were imposed upon them and these were so thoughtfully framed that it gave the stockmen every opportunity to organize districts and to continue his operations in harmony with local conditions. This system of decentralizing activities and authority, which has been perfected under the Taylor Land Grazing Act, is a happy one and typifies the true spirit of our form of democratic government. To those who have feared bureaucratic control, I point to it with pride as an example of what can be accomplished in decentralization, and the delegation of authority and responsibility to the governed. It has always been my contention that they are governed best who govern themselves.

I might add that while the administration of the Taylor Land Grazing Act in the field has proved more than successful, because of its home-rule features, the administration set-up in Washington should be accorded high words of praise because of its evident desire to cooperate with stockmen in every possible fashion in keeping with the letter of the law. This is appreciated by those of us from the far West who generally have been forced to travel to this side of the country to present our views. Officials of the division of grazing, however, go among the affected ones in the far West, and bring them news of developments, suggestions, and information. I ascribe much of this success in the field and at the headquarters in Washington to the sympathetic understanding of public-domain problems possessed by our Secretary of the Interior, and to the able management of Director of Grazing F. R. Carpenter and the other officials of the Department of the Interior in whose hands has been placed the responsibility of making a success of this new and long-range public-domain rehabilitation program. As a Member of Congress, from one of the largest and most important grazing districts created under this new law, I feel that I would be remiss in the proper sense of appreciation if I did not relate the success of this agenda, and compliment the Secretary of the Interior for his foresight and good judgment in selecting an administrative executive with academic training and real practical experience, and thus bring definite assurance to those most affected that our grazing problems will be solved by a capable and understanding director of grazing.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first sentence of section 1 of said act is amended by striking out the following: "not exceeding in the aggregate an area of 80,000,000 acres of vacant, unappropriated, and unreserved lands."

SEC. 2. That the second sentence of section 3 of said act is amended by striking out the following: "except that no permittee complying with the rules and regulations laid down by the Secretary of the Interior shall be denied the renewal of such permit, if such denial will impair the value of the grazing unit of the permittee, when such unit is pledged as security for any bona fide loan."

With the following committee amendment: Page 2, strike out lines 1 to 7, inclusive, and insert:

Sec. 2. Amend section 8 by adding immediately thereafter: "Areas and values of unsurveyed school lands within or without grazing districts may be approximated by protraction or otherwise for the purpose of effecting exchanges of State lands."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 12, after the word "land", insert "that the second sentence of section 3 of said act is amended by striking out the following: 'except that no permittee complying with the rules and regulations laid down by the Secretary of the Interior shall be denied the renewal of such permit if such denial will impair the value of the grazing unit of the permittee when such unit is pledged as security for any bona fide loan.'"

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, if you will turn to page 2 of the printed bill you will find the text of what was section 2 of that bill stricken out.

I believe that that section should remain in the bill, and for this reason: If it is not left in the bill, and if the amendment I have suggested is not adopted; the result will be that a vested right in many instances will be given to private people in the public domain. The manner in which they will acquire the vested right is this:

Under the language of the original Taylor grazing bill, the text of this proposed section 2 of the pending bill is included. It reads:

That no permittee complying with the rules and regulations laid down by the Secretary of the Interior shall be denied the renewal of such permit, if such denial will impair the value of the grazing unit of the permittee, when such unit is pledged as security for any bona fide loan.

It will be apparent, I think, to everyone, under that language, it would be perfectly possible for a permittee, by keeping his grazing unit continuously mortgaged, to have an absolute vested right in the public domain; a vested right which never could be taken away from him. If we are going to regulate the grazing area so as to give all the people of the United States who want to engage in the business of grazing as equal an opportunity as possible, then we should provide that no one may ever be given a vested right in any part of that public domain. The right to deny a renewal of permit to any permittee should always be retained in the Government. Otherwise you are giving to a private person a special right and a privilege which other private persons do not have.

Now, it was first suggested in the committee that the amendment I have offered be included in this bill when it was reported out of committee. Before it was reported out of committee, however, that suggested amendment was stricken out. I think it is proper and absolutely necessary for the protection of the property of the United States and for the protection of the people of the United States that we have this amendment reinserted in the bill.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it the gentleman's idea that there should be no vested right in that range?

Mr. MOTT. I think there should be no vested right by private persons in any publicly owned property, and that range is still publicly owned property, notwithstanding the Taylor Act.

Mr. PIERCE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the permittee might mortgage that permit?

Mr. MOTT. Yes. I understand it is a rather common practice to pledge them as security for loans. The act provides that if the grazing unit is mortgaged, then the Secretary of the Interior shall not deny the permittee a renewal of the permit if denial of the renewal would impair the value of the grazing unit. That, obviously, would enable the permittee to acquire a vested right and to keep it. Everyone should have equal opportunity to receive these permits, and nobody should be given an absolute right, under any conditions, to have that permit renewed indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Mott] has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be granted 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. As I understand the committee amendment, it is to strike out all of section 2 as printed in the bill?

Mr. MOTT. That was the original intention of the committee. This was the proposed amendment of the committee. Now, the amendment comes in here stricken out, so that there is no amendment, and the language which appears stricken in the bill is no part of this bill at the present time. Therefore, this language, which is stricken in the pending bill, still remains in the original act. My amendment is to strike out from the original Taylor Act the language that occurs on the second page of the pending bill. It is that language which makes it possible for a permittee to acquire a vested right in a part of the public domain.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then, as I understand the gentleman, this language is in the original bill, this language which the bill attempts to strike out?

Mr. MOTT. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. And if the gentleman's amendment is agreed to, it will remain in the bill?

Mr. MOTT. It will, and consequently it will be stricken out of the original act.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the gentleman is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has again expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do this for the purpose of again calling the attention of the committee to the language of this bill. I address my remarks especially to the chairman of the committee. I understand the committee does not want to take the time now to try to correct the bill, and I shall not insist upon that if there is an understanding that when the bill goes to the Senate an effort will be made to have the bill drafted as it should be drafted, so that we may understand just what it is. If the chairman will take that up, very well. Otherwise I think we should have a quorum.

Mr. DEBOUEN. The gentleman understands that we can not vouch that, but we are in perfect agreement with the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. If the chairman will ask the Senate to do it, they will do it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will say to the gentleman that I will personally look after that and see if it needs amending; and if so, I will try to secure the appropriate changes. I am anxious to have it right.

Mr. MICHENER. Then it will be done. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have had much to do with Government lands, representing a district about 300 miles square, two-thirds of which is either in the public domain or in the forest reserves. I have been very ardently for the Taylor bill from the very beginning. I did everything I could for it a year ago. I think it is one of the real bills that passed last session. I am delighted to know that it is receiving these amendments at this time. It was a great error that it was cut down in acreage by the Senate and we were not able to put it into full operation.

I am opposed to any changes at this time suggested by my colleague from western Oregon [Mr. Mott]. I do believe that a man should have a right, the same as he has in the forest reserves, to a renewal of his permits. I think there is such a thing as a vested right for a man who uses these ranges. The great opposition to the original Taylor Act and the opposition that has been expressed here comes from those who have water rights on springs and rivers, and for that reason command great sections of the public domain.

The statement has been made that the public domain is homestead land. As a matter of fact, there has been practically no homestead land for 30 years anywhere in the West. Sometime ago we extended the limit that might be taken up by one individual to 640 acres, but even then hardly any was taken up. So that argument is simple buncombe; it does not mean anything.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. Is the gentleman familiar with the records of the General Land Office and the number of homesteads that are now being initiated?

Mr. PIERCE. I am; and I have taken notice of the gentleman's description of that very beautiful mountain valley, but I would like to have the gentleman tell us some more facts about the elevation of that valley. Not even in summer does a period of 30 days go by without a killing frost. Is not this true?

Mr. WHITE. But that does not prevent the raising of hay and the supporting of cattle.

Mr. PIERCE. That is all right, but if the gentleman is going to establish families and civilizations way up on top of that mountain, I do not know why it could not have been homesteaded under regulations of the Forest Service.

Mr. WHITE. When it was withdrawn from the Forest Service it was inaccessible because there were no roads.

Mr. PIERCE. And it is inaccessible now because it is way up on top of the mountain. It is a mere dream.

Before we had regulation the public lands were being grazed so hard that the grass was being killed out. A few people came in with herds of cattle and sheep. Their animals took the grass off, but the people did not own an acre of the land. When this law is in full operation it will double the value of the grazing area on the public domain and instead of this area being an expense to the Government it will be a source of revenue.

I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] that if he would come out West and look at the public domain he would understand what we are trying to do. If this bill is passed the land will be put in very excellent shape and so maintained. I would have changed some provisions of it had I been drawing the bill; I would have put all the public lands under one head; however, there will be no difficulty in the dual operation of the law governing the forest reserves and the public domain.

Mr. RICH. I am very glad the gentleman admits that he would put the public lands all under the one head, because that is what I am trying to do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I merely want these 5 minutes to get the question submitted by the gentleman from Oregon straightened out. As I understand it the Taylor Grazing Act, in its present form, contains this language in section 3 thereof:

Except that no permittee complying with the rules and regulations laid down by the Secretary of the Interior shall be denied the renewal of such permit, if such denial will impair the value of the grazing unit of the permittee, when such unit is pledged as security for any bona fide loan.

Mr. DE ROUEN. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. As I understand the pending bill, Mr. Chairman, section 2 is stricken out leaving the bill as I have read it just now. Is that true?

Mr. DE ROUEN. That is correct. I may say to the gentleman from Utah that the language to which he refers was not in the bill as it passed the House but is what is known as the "McCarran amendment", and was put in the bill by the Senate.

Mr. MURDOCK. But it is a part of the original bill.

Mr. DE ROUEN. It is in the bill at the present time.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say to my colleagues here today that if there was any reason whatever for the adoption of the Taylor Grazing Act it was that of regulating the public domain. Is that true?

Mr. DE ROUEN. That is correct.

Mr. MURDOCK. What is the effect of leaving this language in the bill? It thwarts that very purpose by allowing the permittee to perpetuate a pledge or a mortgage against his permit, and as long as he does that you preclude the Secretary of the Interior, the head of the grazing department, and all other officials connected with the administration of this act from efficient regulation.

Why? Because leaving the bill as it originally became law, including the objectionable language specified by me, in my opinion, tends to place the permittee in a position where he may willfully and unscrupulously continue and perpetuate a mortgage against his permit and thereby preclude proper and efficient administration and regulation. Such actions, of course, would be rare, and it may be argued that the possibility of such actions is too remote to warrant caution on our part at this time, but it is to protect the people in whose behalf this bill is enacted and the officials who will administer it against these unscrupulous persons that this language should be stricken from the bill. This language would permit collusion on the part of banks and their debtors, who may be permittees, and I am sure that it would be only a short time, were we to let this bill go unremedied, before the officials administering the bill would be calling upon us to protect them from the vice the inclusion of this language permits. If we have confidence in the Secretary of the Interior, and the officials whom he will place in direct charge of the administration of this bill, then we can have no doubt but that they will administer it insofar as it is possible and practicable for the benefit of all persons, associations, and corporations coming within its terms; this includes not only permittees, but their creditors, who may be holding permits under this act as collateral security. We need have no fear that the Secretary of the Interior, or his successors in office, will willfully interfere with such collateral security, except for the general welfare of the people in whose behalf this bill is enacted. While, on the other hand, striking this language from the bill places the administering officials in a position to administer the law without being hampered and coerced by some banker or unscrupulous permittee, who is selfish enough to protect his own interests at the expense of the general public using the grazing lands under this bill.

I urgently request the committee to consider this amendment and accept it as a part of this bill. I do not think we should wait until it goes to the Senate in the hope that body will do what we leave undone. Why not perfect it in this body and be through with it when it goes over there? Why not send it to the Senate in proper form?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 2 minutes to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

EXECUTIVE VETO OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES BILL SUSTAINED BY THE SENATE

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman and colleagues of the House, the adjusted-service certificates compensation bill, known as the "Patman bill", was before the Senate today in debate. I have just returned from the Senate, and listened to their debate and heard many able speeches for and against the so-called "bonus bill." I have just been informed that the final vote was 54 to override the veto and 40 to sustain the President, or seven more than necessary to sustain the veto.

WHAT THE PATMAN BILL MEANS TO THE THIRD DISTRICT AND MINNESOTA

Under the Patman bill, the following counties in Minnesota, which I have the honor to represent in Congress, would receive:

Anoka	$381,374.65
Chicago	273,144.19

Isanti.....	$250, 197. 51
Washington.....	512, 634. 63
Hennepin.....	10, 723, 327. 35

A total of $12,140,678.33.

These counties are all in my district.

The State of Minnesota would receive $53,099,466.63.

When I voted for the bonus bill in the House of Representatives yesterday, I was thinking of the soldiers back home in Minnesota, back home in Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Anoka, Chisago, Isanti, and Washington Counties, and all of our great North Star State. I was thinking of the tens of thousands of these veterans out of work, in the relief lines, hungry, and many of them poverty stricken in the extreme, well on the way to the poorhouse, after their brave and courageous service in the Army of the United States under the American flag in France, fighting "to save the world for democracy", at least so they were told.

VOTING AGAINST ENTERING THE WORLD WAR

I tried to save them from that terrific and awful experience of battle ordeal in France. I voted "no" on America's entry into that war, and to my dying day I will be proud of my vote, and I know I was right. After we were in the war I voted to sustain the Army in the field until victory was ours, and from that day to this I have never ceased to vote for justice to the soldiers of America, the men of the World War who so courageously carried our banners across the ocean.

The first obligation which a nation owes to any of its citizens or any class of its citizenry is to the soldiery of the country—the men who forged the Nation upon the fields of battle; the men who drenched the very soil of the country with their own blood so that their Nation might live. These men who entered upon the field of battle suffered in fever camps and from insanitary conditions thousands of miles from home deserve the best the Nation can give; and I have stated on innumerable occasions that there is wealth in this country; that there are billions in this country for the soldiers if we will only go and get that money and see that the service men get the money that was promised to them.

BIG BUSINESS AGAINST THE VETERANS

The battle today is not a battle in France. It is a struggle in America between big business and the veterans. Big business refuses to pay the bill that is owing to the veterans. They say, "No; we must not print any money and give it to the veterans." And the veterans vainly reply that all they will get will be immediately spent for necessities. It will go into the channels of trade to aid and benefit the country at large. But that does not seem to satisfy the aristocracy of wealth in America. That is not satisfactory to the money kings and the financial powers of these United States.

This hereditary aristocracy of wealth is ruthless and merciless in its attitude toward the soldiers. Now, that the war has been fought and won they are not concerned with the soldiers any more. They are willing to let them drift into poverty, destitution, and even to the doors of the poorhouse. That does not concern the money changers in the temple, for have they not their enormous war profits in their coffers safe and secure? They have their mansions, their millions, their yachts. They have their limousines, and all that goes with wealth and luxury in this world, and they are callous and hard and unyielding, and even contemptuous toward the men in uniform.

I pledge the soldiers of the country, of the Third District, and Minnesota and America that I will fight this aristocracy of wealth, these money changers in the temple, until they are driven out of these precincts of government where they have intruded themselves, and established themselves as the great invisible government in control of all American affairs.

VETERANS FORWARD INTO A NATIONAL LABOR PARTY

There is only one thing that can accomplish this, and that is the establishment of a great national labor party. I call attention to the fact that all Farmer-Laborite Representatives in the House are voting solidly for the service men. There is not a break in our ranks. Our senior Senator from Minnesota—Farmer-Laborite—voted to override the President's veto today. A labor party is the soldiers' party. It is the farmers' party. It is the party of labor and the working-man of America. It is the party of the rank and file of the people, whom God must love for He made so many of them.

THE FIGHT WILL GO ON FOR THE ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES

The fight will go on for the adjusted-service certificates; and I have only one fault to find with this bill: It is not enough. No one can measure the sacrifice of the soldier for his country. It cannot be measured in money or denominated in gold, or in any of the precious stones of this earth. It is beyond the measure of money and wealth. The adjusted-service-certificates compensation is only an infinitesimal part of that which they earned; but once they are promised, they are entitled to it, and those who say it is not due until 1945 should remember that every other class of citizens has been benefited in this crisis, and that time is not an element now that the crisis is on.

There is no merit in the claim that inflation will destroy the currency. The Chief Executive himself stated in his message that the payment of the bonus would not impair the Treasury, so why argue along that line any longer? And, so far as inflation is concerned, there is no difference between inflation of the currency of the country or inflation of the bonds of the country, except that inflation by bonds is worse than inflation through currency, because inflation with bonds means a terrific load of interest payments in addition to the bonds.

I want the country to know also that there are some of us here who will continue to fight for the payment of the adjusted-service certificates and the Patman method of payment until the fight has been won. [Applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And in the meantime the unemployed soldier has to live on a standard wage of $19 to $94 a month?

Mr. LUNDEEN. The gentleman is absolutely right. Think of it! Nineteen dollars per month for life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

WE ACCEPT THE CHALLENGE

These things are well known to all men, and it is time now today to reform our lines; to fill the gaps; to march ahead forward to build a great labor party and send Congressmen and Senators who will vote to stand by the soldiers of America; stand by the men who wore the uniform in time of war. That time is here. There is not a moment to lose. Forward to final victory!

Mrs. GREENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened attentively to all that has been said, and I am very anxious to emphasize one or two reasons why I think these amendments should be passed. Maybe it is appropriate that I speak, because I opposed this bill last year rather vigorously until almost the end. I opposed it for very human reasons. I opposed it because I think we all hate to see more bureaus, more Federal control, and more red tape. However, Mr. Chairman, there is a reason why this bill was considered, and one portion of my State illustrates that perhaps more clearly than almost any other place in the United States.

In Graham County, Ariz., we have had in recent years 19,000 of our fertile acres washed away. Some of the people who homesteaded there in the last generation have a bridge spanning their homesteads today; and that, I think, is the reason this bill is being considered. It is a matter of erosion control.

Mr. Chairman, may I say something about my experience in the committee in dealing with the Interior Department. It has been a wonderful experience to find that the Interior Department met us with an open mind, acceded in, at times, to our wishes, and apparently without prejudice, to some very important suggestions that apply not only to this bill but have to do with the future of the American people. The last five lines of the bill have to do with its administration—the choosing of graziers and are an important instance of what we should be trying to get into every bill of this sort that comes on the floor. They state that in selecting graziers for the administration of this act that practical range experience in public domain States and educational requirements shall be determined by test and not by fixed rule.

The lines were a serious issue in the committee, and the fact the Interior Department accepted graciously and apparently gratefully our suggestions that the administration of this bill be given to our local people who understood the business and not be administered by college graduates from other States should be applauded. [Applause.] This indicates that we intend to trust our local people. It indicates that the Secretary of the Interior not only believes but is demonstrating his belief in a certain amount of decentralization of Government and authority, and, third and peculiarly important, it concedes that maturity, common sense, and experience have a place parallel to what is known as "higher education." [Applause.]

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I request the members of the Committee to defeat the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon. The committee has gone over this matter very thoroughly. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] is a member of the committee, and knows that this amendment was added to the original bill by Senator McCARRAN, of Nevada. At this late minute to try to add new language to the amendments reported and agreed to by the committee I feel would disturb the entire bill, and I am therefore asking the Members to stand by the committee and defeat the proposed amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the language which was first proposed in the House Public Lands Committee striking out section 2 on page 2 of the bill was not at the suggestion of the Senate, and not at the suggestion of anybody in the House?

Mr. DEROUEN. I am not able to answer the gentleman's question because I have not been in conference with the Senators. I do not know.

Mr. MOTT. It was not stricken out by our committee.

Mr. DEROUEN. Absolutely; it was.

Mr. MOTT. If it was stricken out by our committee, I do not recall the circumstance of its being stricken out.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is the gentleman favorable to the regulation of our public domain by the Interior Department, or does he want to restrict and limit it?

Mr. DEROUEN. Indeed not.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is that not exactly what the gentleman is doing by leaving that language in there? The gentleman makes it possible for the great big sheepmen and the great big cattlemen to perpetuate a permit already obtained by merely having the land pledged to some bank. If the gentleman agrees that the Secretary of the Interior should have power to regulate and control our public domain, then why in the name of common sense limit and restrict him by the inclusion of language such as has just been read?

Mr. DEROUEN. The language in the original bill is not the language of the Public Lands Committee of the House.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then why not strike it out right now?

Mr. DEROUEN. Let me explain. This language was put in there by Senator McCARRAN to protect loans that were outstanding and held by the banks. Of course, it could happen, as the gentleman stated, and I agree with him, that some dishonest person could come in there and perpetuate his permit by letting his loan stand.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman believe in that type of legislation?

Mr. DEROUEN. I am sincere in my belief that I do not think that these public-land gentlemen who live over there will do such a thing. Of course, I do not know.

Mr. PIERCE. I really think the amendment ought to be accepted. I did not take that view at first, but after reconsideration I believe that it ought to be accepted.

Mr. DEROUEN. Very well. I will leave it to the Committee to vote, and will withdraw my objection, but I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may again read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Mott amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 3. That section 15 of said act is amended to read as follows: "The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized, in his discretion, where lands of the public domain are so situated as not to justify their inclusion in any grazing district to be established pursuant to this act, to lease any such lands for grazing purposes, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe.

With the following committee amendment:

After the word "prescribe", in line 19, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That preference shall be given to owners, homesteaders, or other occupants and lessees of contiguous land to the extent necessary to permit proper use of such contiguous land."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, insert a new section, to be known as "section 4" and to read as follows:

"Sec. 4. That said act is amended by the addition of the following section, to be known as 'section 17':

"Sec. 17. The Secretary of the Interior shall have power to select a director of grazing and such assistant directors of grazing as shall be necessary to administer this act.

"In selecting graziers for the administration of this act, the Civil Service Commission shall be governed by the practical range experience in public-domain States which such persons have had, and educational requirements shall be determined by test and not by any fixed rule."

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything on this bill, but I have offered this pro forma amendment simply for the purpose of allaying any apprehension in the minds of any Members that by the provisions of this bill any desirable or any fit agricultural lands may be taken out of circulation.

I am quite familiar with the lands in these Rocky Mountain States that are principally involved in this legislation. I have been looking at this land and traveling over it and living on it for the last 50 years. I doubt if there is a quarter section of unappropriated public land in the State of Colorado that is worth the filing fee for farming purposes. I doubt if there is a section of it on which a man can make a living farming, and there is a whole lot of it on which it would hustle a jack rabbit to make a living. The good farming land, and much that was not good, was taken up long ago.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman might say that is true of the entire 11 States, including this mountain valley of our friend from Idaho.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I quite agree with my colleague from Oregon, that this is practically true of all the remaining public domain.

For the past 10 or 12 years when veterans have come to my office to consult me about veterans' preference laws for filing on lands I have never hesitated to discourage them. I have never hesitated to tell them that if the Government made them a present of a section of this land they could not make a living on it.

So, instead of being deprived of any valuable rights, it would really be a crime to allow people to settle and undertake to make a living by farming on this land. The tragedy of a lot of that country, when you drive through it and see the little deserted shacks where some poor devils have gone with their wives and grubbed away the best years of their life, is that they have been allowed to take up millions of acres of this land, now abandoned, in the first place. Millions of acres should never have had a plow stuck in it.

The Government is now engaged in the activity of repurchasing and taking much of this land out of circulation and trying to rehabilitate it or at least to restore it to a state of nature. A lot of it, if it is fit for anything, is fit only for grazing and it would not hurt a lot of it if it could even get a rest on grazing, and this can only be cared for by Federal regulation.

I want to say to you that in my opinion the overgrazing of this type of land has been a far greater injury, has resulted in vastly more erosion than timber cutting in the Rocky Mountain States, because most of the timber is up in the gulches and on the mountain slopes where there is little or no farming anyhow. This land has been grazed over and trampled over until the skin of earth has been destroyed, with the consequent results of erosion, and the erosion I have seen on it in my lifetime is something horrible. I am 100 percent for this erosion service. If we do not take it up and stick to it and do something about it, there will be reproduced in this country the pictures you have seen in the Geographic Magazine, taken in Asia and China, where whole sections of country have been destroyed forever. I have seen in my time in the West an arroyo 30 feet wide, widened to 600 or 700 feet. In my home town we have a stream called the Fountain River. It is said to be one of the most unruly streams in the world. It is now about 1,000 feet wide in a sand stretch. An old pioneer told me that he recalled the time in the sixties when he could jump his horse across the channel of this stream and in grass up to the saddle girth. The widening of this stream or the washing of these terrible arroyos all through the mountain West is due almost solely to the denudation of overgrazing. There never was any timber on this land, so cutting timber did not destroy it. What did destroy it was the overgrazing of this country. The cattle and sheep ate the grass down to the roots and they ate the roots out of the ground and they trampled over it until they broke the surface of the soil and there was nothing to hold the water when it came and then erosion did the rest.

If there is any chance to conserve that country and bring it back or restore it to a state of nature, it will have to come through such legislation as this and water conservation. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in listening to the speeches that have been made on this bill today I am reminded of the famous poem of John G. Saxe of the six blind men who went to see an elephant. When we are talking about 172,000,000 acres of the remaining unappropriated public land we are talking about quite a tract of land. I am wondering when I hear these trite old sayings about soil erosion and its prevention just what the grazing administration is going to do to protect these widening arroyos.

Reared in Mississippi, I come from one of the States in the Union which has a great amount of erosion. I can show you wagon roads there going over hills where there has never been a shovel of earth turned, and now there are cuts 30 feet deep eroded by dust and rain. I have seen red hills eroded for 40 or 50 miles. I do not hear anything about restoring grass down in Mississippi on eroded land. Out in the West there is some beautiful farming country along these pretty rivers, where the settler has a nice home and is sending his children to school, wintering his stock on 40 or 50 acres of irrigated alfalfa, and turning his steers and his dry cattle back into the hills to graze in summer. He brings his cattle back in the fall, culls out his steers, sends them to market, and gets a few dollars to support himself and his family. Such are the men we want to protect. These are the men from whom the big sheep and cattle owners and some of the big banking interests of the western cities want to take this land. When this is done the settlers and ranchmen will have to keep their cattle on their little 40 acres. What do we care for some banker in Salt Lake City, or other banking center, who has an alimony suit with his wife over the dollars he has gleaned from these valleys by taking the range away from these farm owners? It is like the reservations. I have seen Indians come galloping down to a farmer and tell him his cattle were over on the reservation and had been impounded; he can come down there and get his cattle by paying the damages or they will sell the cattle. When this law goes into effect we will have a herd law. If a man's cattle stray off of his own premises on to these public lands, they will be impounded, and he will have to pay the damages to permittees or go out of business. This law is going to put a lot of people out of their homes.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Forest Service has put people out of business?

Mr. WHITE. It has. There is a case in my State where one outfit is ranging 80,000 head of sheep on public land, and we have a man up in a beautiful valley, about which I have been telling you, with 1,800 acres on which he is paying taxes, and he cannot get range for one head of sheep. The forest people say, "Why, he can range his sheep on his own land; forest range is not needed." The big outside sheepmen have come in and taken the range away from a bona fide settler who is paying taxes on 1,800 acres of land, and I cannot make a dent in the Forest Service. When this law is put into operation, when you put these people in the West out of business on the plea of soil erosion, who is going to raise the funds for soil protection?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions.

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. I want to know how Andy Little gets a range for 80,000 sheep in Idaho?

Mr. WHITE. Because he has a stand-in with the Forest Service. That is how he gets it. We cannot break that control. We are trying it now. The Forest Service permits for 10 years all expired last year and now they are going to renew them and perpetuate the same thing.

Mr. PIERCE. There are only three permits allowed to any one man by the Forest Service. How does he get by with ten?

Mr. WHITE. Oh, there are many ways of getting around the law by dummy permittees, relatives, and in other ways. These laws are evaded plenty.

Mr. PIERCE. Has the gentleman presented those facts to the Forestry Service?

Mr. WHITE. Yes. I would ask the gentleman from Oregon if he is not running a couple of bands of sheep right now on the forest reserves?

Mr. PIERCE. Indeed, we are—that is, my son and I—and we are getting along very nicely with the officials of the Forest Service.

Mr. WHITE. We can easily understand why the gentleman is so favorable to special privileges to special interests.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. It is true that there was no more bitter opponent than I of the Forestry Service when it came into our State, but it saved the forests of Oregon. That is true.

Mr. WHITE. What are we saving them for? The gentleman will admit to me that this Congress is going into its pocket every session to appropriate money to save the forests for the big lumber interests when they are ready for them.

Mr. PIERCE. I deny that. I do not believe that is true. They are saving them for the people. The selective logging plan adopted by the Forest Service will be of inestimable value to future generations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE] has again expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RICH: On page 3, beginning in line 1, strike out all of section 17 and insert "The administration of all grazing on the public domain be placed under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I was very much interested in the remarks of my colleague from Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY] when she gave credit to the Department of the Interior for inserting the last paragraph in this bill. I think my colleague from Arizona is somewhat timid in trying to claim credit that is due to her and the members of the Committee from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], Wyoming [Mr. GREEVER], Idaho [Mr. WHITE], Arizona [Mrs. GREENWAY], and Oregon [Mr. MOTT], because of the fact that they realized that college professors were not qualified in their judgment to administer the Grazing Act in the Western States.

They realized that men with experience, men who have endured the hardships of the West, men who know something about grazing lands, raising cattle, were better qualified than college professors, who probably do not know what a cow, a steer, or a sheep is other than it is an animal with four legs and a tail.

I want to give the credit to the western members of our committee for having inserted in the bill this provision and not the Secretary of the Interior or his assistants, for if it had not been for those members of this committee the provision would not have been inserted in the bill of using men of practical experience to administer the act. It is because of their knowledge of grazing land, their ability to administer affairs in the western part of this country in reference to grazing that the Secretary of Agriculture was compelled to adopt this part of the bill, or they would not have reported it out of the committee and the Interior Department knew this and acquiesced to their demands.

Now, the point I want to bring out here is this: That every one of the members of this committee, all intelligent people, for whom I have great respect, sometimes become a little bit department timid; they seem afraid of Government departments, and the reason we do certain things is because we are very timid and are afraid to assert ourselves. You can see the results in this particular case when we stand up for our rights.

If the members of this Committee have backbone and try to do that which is for the best interest of the grazing States in this Nation, and I wish all members of the Committee would do the thing they think is right in every respect, buck the Department of the Interior and the Agriculture Department, and include in the bill the things that they know to be the right thing to do, and that is to consolidate the grazing authority of this country and place all grazing lands in one department. It is the proper thing for Congress to do.

I realize that my amendment can be ruled out on a point of order, and I thank the members of the Committee for giving me the permission to make this my last request to this bill to consolidate grazing authority. I see my genial colleague from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] standing in his place, and I think he should be included—he wants to do the right thing, but he is timid about it—saying anything to the departments. He says it should be done and ought to be done. [Laughter.]

If our committee would say to the Departments that they want to have the grazing administered in a sound and sensible way, we would add the amendment that I have proposed and let the Department of Agriculture administer this Grazing Act. Or, if the majority prefer, place all grazing in the Interior Department. If they would do that, we would be doing the job in fine shape; and I do hope and I do wish that the membership of the House would assume their responsibility and adopt the provisions of this amendment, which will be for the best interests of the Western States and for the best interests of the grazing industry, and the best thing for the taxpayers of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this minute so that I could take a bow on behalf of the western Members for the compliment paid us during the course of the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Such encomiums falling from the lips of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are so rare that I do not think they should be passed unnoticed. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I will use the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, in making the observation I did about my western colleagues on the committee I felt I was right. Whenever I think the western Members, or any other Members, or even the President of the United States is right I will be for them. [Applause.]

The President's message yesterday on the bonus bill was one of the finest pieces of literature and arguments that ever has been expounded from this rostrum [applause], and I want to say that I was for him 100 percent yesterday. Whenever these same individuals are wrong, then I am against them. I figure right is right, and wrong is nobody.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has spoiled the whole thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. That is because yesterday you did not support the President, and I am glad to say that I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado press his point of order?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TERRY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3019) to amend sections 1, 3, and 15 of "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes", pursuant to House Resolution 215, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DE ROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate, having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 3896) to provide for the immediate payment to veterans of the face value of their adjusted-service certificates, for controlled expansion of the currency, and to extend the time for filing applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, and for other purposes, returned by the President of the United States to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with his objections, and passed by the House, on a reconsideration of the same, it was

Resolved, That the said bill do not pass, two-thirds of the Senators present not having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. WALSH and Mr. BORAH members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of Labor.

THE N. R. A. AND THE A. A. A.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a brief letter written by me to the editors of certain papers in the State of Utah relative to the N. R. A. and the A. A. A.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter relative to N. R. A. and A. A. A.:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., May 8, 1935.

Mr. E. R. RASMUSON,
Editor the Provo Herald, Provo, Utah.

DEAR MR. RASMUSON: I have read and carefully studied your letter of May 1, urging me to oppose continuance of the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. I agree with your letter to the extent that I believe in the principles of Americanism as those principles were proclaimed and defended by Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln; that I am opposed to any kind of undemocratic dictatorship, and especially any dictatorship that embodies Fascist measures or methods; and that I will defend American liberties with all my energy. However, it occurs to me that you have been grossly misinformed.

In the second paragraph of your letter you say, in part, "Before the passage of the N. R. A. bill business had started to recover and unemployment was decreasing. The N. R. A. did not help; it hindered progress." I am afraid, Mr. Rasmuson, that you have been reading the statements of the chairman of the Republican National Committee, rather than the official figures, or even the reliable data published by reputable newspapers. I believe that no one who is familiar with the actual facts can honestly say that N. R. A. has hindered recovery. The truth is that before the National Industrial Recovery Act was passed business was on the verge of collapse, and unemployment threatened us with the worst crisis in our history. That you may know, here are the figures:

The National Industrial Recovery Act was approved June 16, 1933. The following table shows index numbers, based on the averages for the years 1923-25, for industrial production, factory employment, factory pay rolls, freight-car loadings, and commodity prices:

Month and year	Production	Factory employment	Factory pay rolls	Freight-car loadings	Commodity prices
March 1933.....	59	59	37	50	60
June 1933.....	91	67	47	62	65
February 1935.....	89	82	69	65	80

The first fact that attracts your attention in this table is that under the new deal factory production has been increased from 59 percent of normal to approximately 90 percent of normal; certainly that speaks well for the effectiveness of the Roosevelt administration. Next, and more important, is the fact that, whereas in March 1933, only about 59 percent of the laborers of America were employed, immediately after the enactment of the N. I. R. A. the figure rose to 67 percent, and that in February of this year, after almost 2 years of N. R. A., 82 percent of the laborers of our country were gainfully employed. Certainly that constitutes a miracle of reemployment. Again you will perhaps remember that from the autumn of 1929 until the spring of 1933 wages were constantly decreased, and fewer and fewer workers were drawing wages; perhaps you will even remember that during the Hoover depression we constantly assured ourselves that conditions were as bad as they could possibly get, and that therefore "prosperity was just around the corner." And we did finally hit bottom just before Mr. Roosevelt became President. In March 1933 factory pay rolls; that is, the wages received by factory employees, fell to 37. Immediately after the enactment of N. I. R. A. the index number for factory pay rolls rose to 47, and in February of this year it stood at 69. These and the other figures shown in the table speak eloquently for themselves and for the continuance of N. R. A.

This whole process of eliminating unemployment, putting more people back to work, increasing wages, increasing business, abolishing child labor and sweatshops, is what Mr. Roosevelt meant by the new deal. The keystone of the new deal, so far as industry is concerned, is the N. R. A. To oppose those governmental principles which have aided so much in eliminating unemployment, putting more people back to work, increasing wages, increasing business, abolishing child labor and sweatshops, and so forth, is to oppose the welfare of the American people, to work for the continuance of wage slavery, to precipitate industrial peonage, to foster exploitation, to boost for the Hoover depression. Mr. Fletcher calls the new deal "fascism." But then, Mr. Fletcher is paid to utter dangerous nonsense, paid by those who profited from child labor, sweatshops, and wage slavery.

It is also luminously clear, Mr. Rasmuson, that you have been grossly misinformed concerning the achievements of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. Of course, the farmers and the country at large have suffered from the drought. But Mr. Roosevelt did not cause the drought, in spite of all the innuendoes issued by Mr. Fletcher. If you will consult the farm bureaus in your county, or the individual farmers (hundreds of whom have written me concerning this matter), you will find that they almost unanimously favor continuance of the A. A. A. The reason why the farmers support continuance of the A. A. A. is that the A. A. A. has halted the decline in the prices of farm products, and has instituted measures which are very rapidly boosting farm prices back to levels that make it possible for farmers to live according to American standards. That you may know, here are some figures:

The Agricultural Adjustment Act was approved May 12, 1933. The following table shows a few wholesale prices for farm products:

Month and year	Corn, per bushel	Wheat, per bushel	Steers, per 100 pounds	Hogs, per 100 pounds	Wool, per pound	Cotton, per pound
March 1933.....	$0.25	$0.49	$5.44	$3.92	$0.20	$0.07
June 1933.....	.43	.79	6.36	4.58	.33	.10
June 1934.....	.59	.92	8.60	4.34	.33	.12
March 1935.....	.80	.97	12.33	9.29	.25	.12

You say that you are opposed to continuance of the A. A. A. Well, Mr. Rasmuson, I leave to you the hopeless task of arguing with the facts and with the farmers. Meantime, I will vigorously support continuance of the A. A. A., because experience has proved that it is beneficial to American farmers, that it is the first successful effort the American people have made to protect the rights and promote the welfare of that class which has been most ruthlessly exploited by the money magnates in spite of the fact that it produces what we eat and what we wear.

I distinctly remember that Mr. Roosevelt promised to fight for a more equitable distribution of the national wealth. I also remember that he told us he was bound to lose that fight unless the people of the Nation, including the newspapers, cooperated with him. Mr. Roosevelt has commenced to bring about a fairer and more equitable distribution of national wealth. He has not completed the job, because he is fighting against the dishonesty, corruption, and inefficiency of long years of money rule. But he has fought and will continue to fight for redistribution of wealth and economic justice. The people of the Nation have, up to date, cooperated with him. I urge you, if you advocate a fair distribution of wealth, to fulfill your duty by cooperating with the President who was elected by the people and with the administration which is carrying on in spite of the propaganda of Morgan and his kind.

No administration in American history has so well fulfilled its promises as has the Roosevelt administration. No government in the world has so heroically set about the task of promoting the general welfare. The achievements of the Roosevelt administration up to date justify the confidence and faith of the American people. They also justify the support of those institutions who are charged with the duty of keeping the public correctly informed on current affairs.

Trusting that I have made my position clear, I am

Very truly yours,

ABE MURDOCK.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6114) to amend section 128 of the Judicial Code with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 1, strike out all after "proceedings;" down to and including "Zone", in line 4, and insert "and in the District Court of the Canal Zone in the cases and modes prescribed in sections 61 and 62, title 7, Canal Zone Code (48 Stat. 1122)."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, the amendment merely changes the reference to the appropriate provisions of the Canal Zone Code. As originally drawn—and I will say that the bill was drawn in the Attorney General's office—the enactment of the Canal Zone Code of 1933 was overlooked and instead of making reference to the code reference was made to the original laws. The amendment changes the references to refer to the provisions of the Canal Zone Code.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill the purpose of which is to pay the veterans in cash at this time the present value of their adjusted-service certificates. The bill provides that such payment be made from the $4,880,000,000 which the President has already been authorized to spend for such purposes as he may desire. This method of payment will not create a new debt, but, on the contrary, it will discharge an existing obligation.

The President plans to spend $4,880,000,000 of the taxpayers' money within the next 14 months, which means that spending must go on at the rate of $350,000,000 every 30 days. The program for disbursing this vast sum has developed now to the point where it is apparent that much of the money will be used for projects of doubtful value and some of it will be squandered for purposes of political expediency, such as the Passamaquoddy project to harness the tides.

Payment of the veterans in the manner provided for in the bill which I have introduced will accomplish at least two good purposes: In the first place, it will settle the bonus question on a basis which is eminently fair both to the veterans and to the Government and take the issue out of politics. In the second place, as I have stated, it will permit a substantial portion of the $4,880,000,000 to be spent in the cancelation of an existing indebtedness, which will not only bring financial assistance to thousands of veterans and their families but will prevent such funds from being diverted to otherwise questionable purposes.

The taxpayers know that the President has been authorized to spend the colossal sum of nearly $5,000,000,000 within the next 14 months. As long as this money is going to be spent, anyway, I believe that the taxpayers would prefer to have a portion of it used to pay the veterans what the Government owes them rather than have this vast sum squandered for other purposes.

I wish further to emphasize that this method of payment does not require printing-press money; it does not necessitate the imposition of any new taxes; it does not increase the national debt beyond the expenditures to which the Government is already committed.

SUMMARY OF REED BILL FOR CASH PAYMENT OF ADJUSTED-SERVICE CERTIFICATES—GENERAL PURPOSE

The purpose of the bill is to permit veterans of the World War, at their option, to surrender their adjusted-service certificates and receive in cash, out of funds to be allocated from the $4,880,000,000 Emergency Relief Act, an amount equal to their basic adjusted-service credit, with compound interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum from November 11, 1918, less any loans and unpaid interest.

According to estimates made by the Veterans' Administration, the amount of all adjusted-service credits, with interest at 4 percent from November 11, 1918, to July 1, 1935, would be $2,659,686,958. The amount of the adjusted-service certificate trust fund as of July 1, 1935, is estimated at $1,460,000,000. Therefore, the additional amount required to carry out the purposes of the bill would be approximately $1,200,000,000.

ANALYSIS

Section 1 of the bill amends section 507 of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act by making the adjusted-service certificate fund available for payments on account of certificates surrendered in order to obtain the benefits of this act.

Section 2 adds two new sections to title V of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, permitting veterans to surrender their certificates and in lieu thereof receive the amount of their adjusted-service credit, with interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum, compounded annually from November 11, 1918, to the date of filing their application for cash payment, but not beyond January 1, 1945, less any indebtedness against the certificate.

No payment is to be made until the certificate is in the possession of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and all obligations against such certificate discharged.

If a certificate is held by a bank, a method is provided whereby a loan thereon may be paid and the certificate redeemed from the bank by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

The veteran may receive the benefits of this section by application filed during the lifetime of the veteran with the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs either by the veteran or his representative. If the veteran dies after the application has been filed, the settlement authorized under the provisions of this section shall be made to the estate of the veteran.

Upon receipt of a certificate from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs showing the amount due, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay the veteran by a check drawn on the Treasurer of the United States.

In acquiring title to notes held on account of the United States Government life-insurance fund, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make payment therefor by the issuance of bonds. All bonds issued for this purpose are to be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act.

If at the date of maturity of the certificate the certificate has not been surrendered, and if at the time of filing application for payment under section 501 the amount of the adjusted-service credit and interest at 4 percent per annum, compounded annually from November 11, 1918, to the date of payment, or to January 1, 1945, whichever is the earlier date, exceeds the face value of the certificate, then such amount, in lieu of the face value, less the amount of any indebtedness required to be deducted under the act, shall be paid immediately by check drawn on the Treasurer of the United States.

Section 3 extends the time for filing applications for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act from January 2, 1935, to January 2, 1937.

Section 4 authorizes and directs the President to allocate funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 for the purpose of making any payments under this act for which funds are not available from the adjusted-service certificate fund. [Applause.]

DEFENSE OF SOUTHERN LABOR AGAINST UNWARRANTED ASPERSIONS

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein short excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and a short newspaper clipping.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

On the afternoon of April 23, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], while discussing on the floor of the House the textile situation in the United States, saw fit to cast some unnecessary and highly baseless aspersions against the people who are engaged in the textile industry in the South, which statements are untrue and without foundation of fact. Under the circumstances I felt it my duty to the people whom I represent to ask the gentleman to be more specific in his charges and name the parties guilty of his alleged charges and subjected to his abuse. In insisting that Mr. CONNERY be more specific in this matter, I had nothing in mind but getting as much information as possible on this particular subject, feeling that his indictment of virtually all the good people engaged in the great textile industry in that section should not go unchallenged.

In my efforts to get this information from Mr. CONNERY I apparently incurred the wrath of the weekly newspaper Labor, published here in Washington by the Association Recognized Standard Railroad Labor Organizations, which paper appears to have been just as maliciously misinformed as Mr. CONNERY himself with respect to conditions in the South. In the issue that followed the exchange of remarks between Mr. CONNERY and myself, instead of printing the facts as they actually occurred on the floor of the House, as could have easily been done, this paper preferred to distort and color a story which they displayed in front-page prominence, charging in the headline: "Exploitation of children is defended by South Carolina solon", followed by the charge that I had defended the textile "bosses" and that I favored the exploitation of child labor in southern cotton mills.

PAPER'S CHARGES FALSE

Nothing was said on the floor in defense of what this paper terms the textile "bosses." Neither did I then or have I ever advocated the exploitation of child labor. I arose on the floor of the House to defend the decent, respectable people engaged in the textile industry in the South against the charges that the food they have on their tables would be thrown in the trash can in New England; that they did not have clean sheets on their beds; that people in the South were forced to work and live in highly inhuman and insanitary conditions; and that they did not receive improvements and the comforts of life until organized labor came South and organized them and secured these benefits for them.

I registered my protest with the manager of this paper against these misrepresentations and distortions. And subsequently I prepared a statement which included the actual remarks as taken from the Record and submitted this to him with the request that it be published in order to give his readers the benefit of the whole truth. The manager of this paper refused to publish this statement.

STATEMENT SUBMITTED FOR PUBLICATION

In order that my colleagues, constituents back home, and the public in general may have the whole truth in this matter and may know to what extent this paper went in coloring and distorting their report of this incident, I am including herewith the statement which I submitted to the manager of this paper and which he declined to publish:

Mr. EDITOR: In your issue of April 30, 1935, you published in front-page prominence what purported to be a report of an incident that took place on the floor of the House on April 23 between the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CONNERY, and myself. Since you, for reasons best known to yourself, did not give the full text of the affair, as could have reasonably been done (preferring to color and distort it to suit your own purpose), I am asking that you please allow me space in your publication to give a more amplifying account of the matter, which will include, among other things, the full text of the happening, as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 23, in order that your readers might pass in judgment without the complexion given it by your biased press:

"Mr. CARY, Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

"Mr. CONNERY, Mr. Chairman, I listened today with great interest to the remarks of my distinguished friend the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]. There was merit in some of the things that he said, but, in general, I do not think his speech covered the situation insofar as the textile conditions exist today.

"In the first place, the gentleman from North Carolina, in referring to the Republican administration, did not give the reason but said that these mills in New England moved South during a Republican administration, which is true, but the main reason that these mills did go South, as I brought out once before here today, was because at that time you could work 60 or 70 hours a week in the textile mills of the South, and the wage was as low as $6 or $7 a week. These employers in the textile industry went South to get away from decent living conditions and from decent wages for labor in the New England States. The manufacturers who stayed in New England are the ones for whom we are fighting today. They are the ones who believe in a decent wage for labor. They are the ones who do not believe in working little children in their mills as was done in the South at that time, before the N. R. A. They are the ones who believed at that time in a 48-hour law, such as we had in Massachusetts. They are the ones who believed, in other words, in a break for labor and in decent living conditions and decent wages in industry.

"Mr. BOILEAU, Mr. Chairman, will be gentleman yield?

"Mr. CONNERY, I yield.

"Mr. BOILEAU, Is the gentleman of the opinion that the N. R. A. has helped to rehabilitate the textile industry of the North?

"Mr. CONNERY, Oh, yes. I will say to my friend that he knows my opinion of the N. R. A. I have always said that the N. R. A. gave the textile industry of New England the first break it ever got from the hands of the Government. We had a 48-hour law, while the South worked 60 or 70 hours a week, and when you put the South on a 40-hour law and put Massachusetts and New England on a 40-hour law in the textile industry, even with a wage differential in favor of the South, you gave them the first break they ever got in decent, fair competition.

"Mr. BOILEAU, I agree with the gentleman that the N. R. A. has helped out the industrial sections, and does not the gentleman believe that, in order to keep agriculture on a parity with industry, it is necessary to carry out an agricultural policy, with the processing tax, and so forth, to offset the harm done to agriculture and to give agriculture a chance to live also?

"Mr. CONNERY, I am going to touch on that in just a moment.

"Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. CONNERY, I yield.

"Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, When the costs of industry were increased through the N. R. A., was not that one reason why it was essential to have more tariff protection in order that we might have a chance to sell our goods?

"Mr. CONNERY, Of course, I have always believed in that and have a bill now before the Ways and Means Committee which I think would take care of this whole situation; in fact, I wrote that into the 30-hour-week law 3 years ago. I saw this whole thing coming at that time, and the labor men came to me and said, 'If you put the country on a 40-hour week, while Japan and Germany and Czechoslovakia and England are working 50 or 60 hours a week at low wages, how can our manufacturers in the United States survive?' I wrote this provision in the bill, and I have it in the bill now before the Ways and Means Committee:

"Wherever the landed costs of any article or commodity—not just the textile, but any article or commodity, including agricultural products—coming into the United States are less than the cost of production of a similar article or commodity in the United States, such article or commodity shall be barred from the country."

"This will take care of your Japanese situation and everything else.

"Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts, If the gentleman will permit, I asked the question because I appreciate the splendid work the gentleman has done in the past in protecting industry, and I knew what his past opinion had been upon the question, and I wanted to know if he is still of the same opinion, namely, in view of our increased costs and in view of the keen competition that exists today, does he not think it is absolutely necessary that we have a greater amount of protection than we now enjoy?

"Mr. CONNERY, Yes; I know it, because my people are walking the streets today in Lawrence, Lynn, and Peabody. They are men who have been engaged in the leather, shoe, and textile industries.

"In reference to the statement of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], I want to touch on that point. I know I do not have to convince him, because he knows that the first meeting ever held by the Committee on Labor where the farmers and labor joined together was held while I have been Chairman of the Committee on Labor. I do not want the farmers to be broke, because if a farmer is broke, he cannot buy the textile, he cannot buy the shoes, he cannot buy the leather, he cannot buy the electrical products and the thousands of things that are made in our industrial New England. I want him to get a decent break for his farm products, but what I would like to call to the attention of the men who represent the farm sections in this body is that the State Department is saying to the Members of Congress and saying to the country, 'If you cut down on your demand that we buy only American products and go into reciprocal trade treaties, we will fix it a little later so that we can bring in your Argentine wheat and bring in your other products from South America and along the Atlantic seaboard, and we will sell them to you far cheaper than you can buy them from the American farmer.'

"I want your farmers to know about this and to look into the proposition.

"Mr. BOILEAU, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. CONNERY, I yield.

"Mr. BOILEAU, I want to commend my friend from Massachusetts on his broad viewpoint. I believe he is as anxious to protect the farmers as I am, but I may say to the gentleman that I do not believe we should try to help out industry by taking from agriculture what small benefits they have been able to get during the past few years. We should help industry in the way suggested by the gentleman through a higher tariff, and I am willing to go along with the gentleman on that.

"Mr. CONNERY, I voted for the A. A. A., I signed the petition for the consideration of the Lemke bill, and I voted for that proposition and would be pleased to do so again.

"Mr. BOILEAU, I know the gentleman has always been very fair in respect of all these matters.

"Mr. CONNERY, I do not believe you can have prosperity in the United States unless there is prosperity for the farmer and prosperity for the industrial worker, and I do not say that the processing tax is the sole reason or that it is the bête noir of the textile industry. That may not be it at all. I am informed by the evidence given to us by the textile men and by the labor unions and the workers in the textile mills that the processing tax is working greatly to our disadvantage in the mills, but I say that the President has appointed this Cabinet committee to look into this matter thoroughly. They are going to start hearings Thursday, and we are going to bring down our millmen and our laboring men and everyone else concerned from New England, and we expect the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] and the men from the Southern States to bring up their men and put the whole story before this committee; and then, I say, if the processing tax is doing all this harm, get some other way to help the farmer rather than by a processing tax. If it is not the thing that is doing the harm, all right; but we feel that that is the danger.

"We feel that the Japanese importations are a menace to our textile industry. It does not do the Wisconsin farmer any good if the man on Pine Hill next to me, working for the General Electric Co., cannot buy any of the farmer's products.

"Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

"Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman should not use Wisconsin for an example, because we get no benefit from the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

"Mr. CONNERY. It does no good to have a man who lives in Lawrence or Lynn to go broke. All I ask is for a committee appointed by the President to look into this matter impartially, not to look into it as a New England question but as a question for the United States of America.

"When I vote on the floor I do not expect to vote especially for New England. I resented today the statement that a lot of New England manufacturers had come down here to boost or push up the price, trying to blackmail the administration.

"There was a meeting downstairs in the luncheon room. They did not advocate price boosting. They predicated their demand on the fact that people are walking the streets of Lawrence and Lynn. I know what it is. I have seen it myself, and I do not like it. I do not like to see children go hungry.

"Mr. BOILEAU. May I suggest that in the consideration of this proposition that the processing tax is an injury to the textile industry, we should consider also that the N. R. A. is doing an injury to agriculture.

"[Here the gavel fell.]

"Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes more to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

"Mr. CONNERY. I imagine you are not getting the whole picture. The gentleman speaks of the N. R. A.—no more child labor, no more "yellow dog" contracts, the right of labor to organize—and if it did nothing more than that it would be worth while.

I do not like the members of the N. R. A. in the textile industry, in the manufacture of automobiles, to write codes for labor. I said it is like a little lamb sitting down by a wolf and the wolf writing the contract between the lambs and the wolves.

"Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. CONNERY. In just a moment. My committee reported out a bill for equal labor representation on the Code Authorities. I am for the N. R. A. I would like to see these difficulties done away with. I would like to see the Wagner-Connery labor-disputes bill and the 30-hour-a-week bill passed.

"Mr. BOILEAU. If I had my way, I would be very glad to substitute the 30-hour-a-week bill for the N. R. A.

"Mr. CONNERY. The N. R. A. came as a result of the Black-Connery 30-hour-a-week bill.

"Mr. BOILEAU. I was for the N. R. A., and I believe I have the distinction of being the only N. R. A. general on the floor.

"Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

"Mr. MARCANTONIO. On the question of writing the N. R. A., originally Congress wrote it, but since then Mr. Richberg has rewritten it.

"Mr. CONNERY. That is true. That decision in reference to the automobile case in Detroit caused all of the strikes and troubles in reference to 7 (a), and you will never have industrial peace in the United States until you pass the Wagner-Connery bill on labor disputes.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Would the gentleman be kind enough to be more specific in his accusations of industries of the South and name those that worked their employees 70 hours a week prior to the installation of the N. R. A.?

"Mr. CONNERY. I could not tell the gentleman the names of the concerns. I mentioned them several times years ago—mills in the South that ran 60 and 70 hours, and that had child labor.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Would the gentleman be more specific and name those that have enslaved child labor?

"Mr. CONNERY. I could not give the gentleman the names.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. The gentleman ought to be more charitable.

"Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman wants the names, I shall get them for him and take the floor in a few days and give him the names, the dates, and everything else.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Will the gentleman be more specific and name those that forced their employees to live in inhuman and insanitary conditions?

"Mr. CONNERY. I will give the gentleman all of that information later. I have had men come in to me who went through the mills in the South. This was 4 or 5 years ago. They said that what those workers got on their table you would throw into your garbage can in New England. He said, 'You would not have it on your table.'

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Perhaps that was some eccentric investigator.

"Mr. CONNERY. Oh no; it was not. He had no bias in any way whatever; he said, 'I was down through the mills of the South and saw these company homes they had them in and it shocked me; I never dreamed such conditions existed.'

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Permit me to tell the gentleman that I went to work in a cotton mill before I was 9 years old, and I worked there for 21 years, and my people now live at a cotton mill, and I do not give a tinker's dam who told the gentleman that; his information is incorrect.

"Mr. CONNERY. I am sorry to disagree with the gentleman, but we have all of that. We have had investigations, and social workers, and everybody else going through the mills of the South. What wage did the gentleman get when he started?

"The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

"Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

"Mr. CONNERY. What wages did the gentleman get when he went to work?

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I got from 5 cents a day when I started until around some twenty-odd dollars a week when I quit.

"Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman got 5 cents a day when he started?

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I was learning, and they were charitable to give me that.

"Mr. CONNERY. Why, nobody would ever pay so little as 5 cents a day to anyone in New England, a child or anybody else.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. But that was a different day.

"Mr. CONNERY. I mean in those days.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I started 36 years ago. The trouble about the labor situation is that New England is trying to dictate to the rest of the country what labor conditions shall prevail throughout the whole country.

"Mr. CONNERY. That is right. New England says, 'We want decent living wages, we will not have slavery, we want people to have a place to live in and a place to sleep in that is decent; we want them to have clean sheets and refrigerators, all of the comforts that every laboring man should have in the United States, and not be ground down.' [Applause.]

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I have not seen anything out of New England that indicates that they have any more comforts among the laboring class there than they have in the South. We have those things. They have electric lights, in most instances, running water, and everything else that they can have.

"Mr. CONNERY. But you have had them only since labor went down there and started to organize. Only since then have you had those things.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. They have had it for a quarter of a century.

"Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

"Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

"Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the gentleman from Massachusetts would refer the gentleman from South Carolina to the testimony of Mr. Gorman, president of the Textile Union, when he testified on the Connery equal-representation-for-labor bill before our Committee on Labor, he would be convinced.

"Mr. CONNERY. Yes; the gentleman should look that over.

"Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I would not believe it after I had read it."

CHARGES WITHOUT FOUNDATION

As will appear from the reading of the foregoing, the whole matter arose out of the discussion of the textile situation, in which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], gave the impression, inadvertently or otherwise, that all the textile employers of the South worked the employees before the N. R. A. 60 to 70 hours per week, forced them to live in insanitary and indecent conditions, and exploited child labor. With no pretense of knowing of all the conditions prevailing through the whole South, but knowing full well that such conditions did not exist generally in some parts of the South, I asked the gentleman to be more specific and name the mills in the South which operated 70 hours per week, forced their employees to live in indecent and insanitary conditions and exploited child labor, prior to the N. R. A., in the hope that the gentleman might draw some demarcation between the guilty and the innocent. That does not seem to be an unreasonable request, and neither does it bespeak any unsavory purposes, for surely there is some element of justice left to allow such segregation.

CHARGES SHOULD BE MADE SPECIFIC

Mr. CONNERY agreed to give the specific instances asked for, which means that he will name the mill, the house, and the occupant where such occurrences have taken place, thus affording an opportunity for all parties in interest to pass in judgment. But, now that you have so adroitly come into the picture with your distorted report of this occurrence, I shall gladly relieve Mr. CONNERY and in turn ask you to provide the name of the mill or mills, the house or houses in which people are forced to live in indecent and insanitary conditions, and also the children who have been exploited to their harm, injury, and damage, in violation of the laws of the respective States.

Understand, please, that nothing short of specific instances will suffice, for your ability as a distortionist has been too well demonstrated to permit the public to pass their judgment on any basis other than specific facts. I have no financial interest in any textile establishment of any sort, neither do I have any assurance that as much as one mill president in my district voted for me for Congress, and certainly none contributed to my campaign. However that may be, I never have on any occasion, and do not now, offer any brief for them, other than to wish for them a most successful and lawful operation of their business, for upon their success depends the operation of the mills and the resultant employment of labor.

Of course, there is no thought on my part of claiming absolute perfection for the working and living conditions of people who work in the cotton mills in the South, neither do I admit as much for the New England States. I grant that there are improvements that can be made to the working and living conditions that would mean a great deal to the people. I have constantly been interested in such improvements and the people whom I represent know that I have been interested in this phase of their lives and well-being. There have been many improvements in the South in the last quarter of a century and they were in evidence long before the strange and unnatural love and compassion of the "wise men of the East" were aroused by the southward movement of New England's industries.

BASELESS AND UNNECESSARY INSINUATIONS

As I stated before, there is no justification for your insinuations that I arose in Congress to defend the textile "bosses." Instead of seeking to express the views of the management, I did arise in the House of Representatives for the purpose of refuting the aspersions cast upon the textile industry of the South and the hundreds of thousands of men and women employed therein. I arose to defend this major industry and those who compose it—textile owners, spinners, weavers, sweepers, or cleaners, all of whom I represent with a deep conviction of adherence to truth and impartiality—because the gentleman from Massachusetts gave utterance to such broad statements as to challenge every thinking man and woman who is interested in the cotton mills of the South.

CAN SPEAK FOR THESE PEOPLE

I feel that I am well prepared to speak for those who work in the cotton mills. My friends and my relatives are there; numbered among the industrious citizenship of South Carolina thus engaged, are the friends and relatives of many of the people of my State. Nowhere in the Union will one find a higher percentage of white, native-born American citizens engaged in any industry than are numbered among the textile workers of South Carolina. They are good citizens, law-abiding people, thrifty people, men and women tremendously interested in the religious as well as the commercial aspects of life.

Among these dependable citizens of our State are to be found the same sturdy characteristics of the men and women who, in 1876, were with Wade Hampton when he overthrew the misrule of reconstruction days and drove the carpetbaggers and scalawags from the borders of the Palmetto State. These people have a glorious heritage of which they may well be proud. They believe in the true principles of Americanism so dear to the heart of every good citizen, and they put the Bible and the flag above everything else. That they are religious, the fine community churches attest; that they are patriotic is shown by the wonderful records made by their sons in the World War. No finer soldiers followed the flag to France than those boys from the cotton mills who joined with their kinsmen from the farms of South Carolina in a common cause for the safety of democracy.

I am stating these facts to give you some idea of the background of the textile people of my State. Communism has never showed its ugly head there. They believe in the supremacy of God, in the sovereignty of States, and individual liberty; and any proposition contrary to these principles will neither be welcomed nor tolerated among my people.

These conditions I know, of my own knowledge, prevail in my immediate section, and from the information and observation at hand, I believe them to be true in a general way throughout the South. There are exceptions, for exceptions can be established to almost any condition, but we should measure the industry by the averages, and not attempt to misjudge it by a pitifully small minority of circumstances.

INDECENT LIVING CONDITIONS CHARGED

The suggestion that textile workers in the South live indecently and in insanitary surroundings is highly erroneous. The twisted and distorted reports which suggest that these people eat food unfit for human consumption, and which should be thrown in the garbage can, is an outright falsehood that apparently is circulated for the obvious purpose of damaging the South as a whole and to bolster up a case in exaggerations and misrepresentations. If those who pretend they are so interested in the welfare of these people would make an honest effort to obtain the facts, they can learn the truth about conditions among textile operatives in our section. Some of the exaggerations are akin to the misapprehension prevailing in some quarters of the North and East that the afternoon diversion of true southerners is tarring and feathering, or perhaps lynching, of Negroes who live in our section. Many misguided but fanatical souls seem unable to ascertain the truth about either.

INDEPENDENT THINKERS

There is another thing impressive about the attitude of the textile workers who live in my section of the South. They are independent thinkers. They do not take orders well from a so-called "leadership" that is pretending to be interested in their welfare in order to collect "so much a month" from them for the dictatorial privileges. A vast majority of the textile workers in our section of the country appreciate the fact that the State of South Carolina, many years ago, abolished child labor and made it unlawful for children under 14 years of age to work in the mills. That has come about since my childhood days, for I started to work much younger than this and I am glad to state that it did not impair my health or wound my determination to obtain an honest living for myself; in fact, experience and training I obtained as a small boy, in one of the textile plants of the South, proved of great value to me in after years. It was there that I learned to value and appreciate the consistency of diligent application to every job that comes to hand. Another boy who worked in the same room with me and learned those same lessons today is Governor of South Carolina. Neither of us, as boys who worked in the cotton mill, was abused or in any way discouraged from our objectives in obtaining an education and making all advancement possible.

STATE ABOLISHED CHILD LABOR MANY YEARS AGO

As I have just stated, the State of South Carolina abolished child labor in the cotton mills long before the advent of the N. R. A. The State found the textile industry, as a whole, interested and cooperative in providing the maximum sanitation the plants could afford. This is not all; the mill owners have evidenced a sustained interest in schools and churches for the people employed in this industry.

The textile workers of my section do not fall in line readily and willingly, as so many sheep, to follow the orders handed down from alien fields. They are competent and trained workers; they like to work. Agitation and strife do not appeal to them. They have the ability to think for themselves, and the man or woman who says that these people did not have decent food on their tables, or clean sheets on their beds, or comforts and conveniences of life until eastern influences made them possible, is either grossly misinformed or has little regard for accuracy. These thrifty people of my State are not dependent upon the alleged intellect of these so-called "leaders in the East" for their initiative and enterprise necessary to procure food fit for human consumption. They have good food and comfortable living conditions, good schools, automobiles, radios, and recreation programs comparable with the people engaged in any industry elsewhere in this Nation. All these things they attained long before there was any evidence of selfish and unnatural affection for their welfare on the part of eastern agitators.

CAN ADJUST DIFFERENCES WITHOUT OUTSIDE INTERFERENCE

One of the most pronounced characteristics of the southern textile operators and operatives has been their willingness to adjust their differences through a spirit of friendly cooperation. When left alone to work out their problems, a fair and equitable program usually develops. I am firmly convinced that the major portion of labor disturbances in our section have been the outright product of meddlesome agitators, often men who knew or cared little about textile labor but chiefly concerned in furthering their own financial gain. The agitators have brought only trouble to our section—a section where men who have grown up in the industry together, to call each other by their first names, who were probably in school together and played on the same baseball team, are able to sit down and discuss and adjust honest differences of opinion—and none of the improvements of our industry there can be attributed to their efforts.

THESE ARE FACTS

I am asking you to publish these facts, because they are facts. It is only natural that my interest and sympathy should center around the men and women who work in the textile plants of my district in South Carolina. I was reared among them, and I cherish their friendship. From early youth until mature manhood I worked in the mill, and today my relatives are employed there. I do not speak as a casual observer. My observations are not based on distorted reports and glaring misrepresentations. I am familiar with working conditions and living conditions in scores of textile communities, and I know their problems, for I am one of them.

As a representative of all of the people of my district, and in defense of its major industry and the people employed therein, I cannot sit idly by without refuting the aspersions cast upon us by the gentleman from Massachusetts. His remarks insult the intelligence of my textile constituents and our people as a whole. When he says they did not live decently, or have for their tables anything but such sorry food that the high-toned New Englanders would have thrown it into their garbage cans, or no clean sheets for their beds or modern conveniences for their homes, "only since labor went down there and started to organize", he departs from the truth. I will treat it as charitably as possible and assume that he makes these statements through ignorance of the facts.

INVITE PERSONAL INVESTIGATION

If the gentleman from Massachusetts would make a personal investigation of textile conditions in the South, I am confident that he would withdraw the statements quoted above, for no man who knows the facts, and is imbued with a sense of fairness and honesty, would allow such gross misrepresentations to stand. I am likewise confident that if you, Mr. Editor, would glean some sound information from unbiased sources you would cease being a party to such rank injustice as you allowed your publication to deal me in connection with my defense of the textile industry in the South. I am naturally interested in the further improvement of these conditions. We have made good progress. I am confident that future years will bring further developments in social security and improved working conditions, as well as living conditions, that will bless generations as yet unborn. I will seek, in my small way, to contribute to these achievements and to all worth-while objectives of the textile industry as a whole and every man and woman numbered among its employees. By this course of conduct will I have the satisfaction that comes of the fair and impartial treatment of all of the people. It is only through truth and honesty that lasting strides are made in any industry or any government.

Respectfully requested.

JNO. C. TAYLOR.

ARTICLE UNFAIR AND UNETHICAL

For a period of time after reading the article which so completely misrepresented the remarks I made on the floor of the House, I was at a loss to understand just how any man could be so unfair and unethical as to give the report which this paper carried. My friends and constituents know that I have always been fair to labor. The people who work in the cotton mills in South Carolina and who do other jobs that require labor know that I have their interests at heart. They also know that I do not intend to sit idly by while another man, who comes from an entirely different section and who is naturally less familiar with conditions in my own section, casts insults upon them.

HAVE BEEN AND AM NOW FRIEND OF LABOR

When I first became a Member of Congress and legislation that eventually resulted in the passage of the N. R. A. was being discussed, I went to General Johnson and to the President, carrying the cause of the people who work in the cotton mills in the South, the East, and other parts of this country, asking the President and General Johnson to include in the N. R. A. such regulations as would specifically eliminate the so-called "stretch-out" system in cotton mills and regulate the machine load any one man or woman would be required to perform in any one day. It was evident then that unless an effort was made to regulate the machine load the action of the N. R. A. in setting wage scales and hours of labor would be partially dissipated and full and effective results from the N. R. A. as applied to cotton mills would not be obtained. Without any desire to be egotistical, I can truthfully claim that I was one of the first, if not actually the first, to call to the attention of this administration this particular practice. A "stretch-out" investigation of wide-spread scope was conducted, and later the President formed the Textile Work Assignment Board, which was created to hear complaints arising from such practices. Even abuses that have resulted from the "stretch-out" practice, which, I understand, have been modified since 1933, do not warrant the abuse heaped on these people by Mr. CONNERY.

INTERESTED IN WELFARE OF THESE PEOPLE

These people who work in the mills in South Carolina know that I am interested in seeing them get the best possible wages for their work. They know also that I have been interested in their problems of health with respect to both living and working conditions. With this in mind it is difficult for me to understand how any paper that purports to represent the laboring man could so carelessly and maliciously handle the truth.

DENUNCIATION ANALYZED

At last, however, I have been able to learn where the trouble lies with respect to this false report and I feel that it is my duty to my colleagues here and to my friends and constituents back home to lay these facts before them. Here are the facts:

In the RECORD of April 23, 1935, page 6245, I had asked Mr. CONNERY to be more specific in his blanket charge against the people engaged in the textile industry in the South. At this juncture, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCAN-
TONIO], who perhaps knows less about conditions in the South than Mr. CONNERY does, advised, after gaining the floor:

If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] would refer the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TAYLOR] to the testimony of Mr. Gorman, president of the textile union, when he testified on the Connery equal-representation-for-labor bill before our Committee on Labor, he would be convinced.

To this I was constrained to reply very frankly and said:
I would not believe it after I had read it.

This, I am firmly convinced, brought about the severe denunciation I received at the hands of this railroad paper, so aggravating its editor until he lost all sense of fairness and allowed this entirely unfair misrepresentation to appear in print.

FACTS ABOUT MR. GORMAN

The facts I have with reference to Mr. Francis J. Gorman, who is the first vice president of the United Textile Workers of America are quite clear and to the point. I quote herewith a letter which was written by Miss Carrie Nash, a textile worker and a union member of Greenwood, S. C., to the editor of the Greenwood Index-Journal. This letter was published in that paper and since has been given wide-spread publicity in the South. This letter explains fully without the necessity of any additional comment why I would not believe a statement made by Mr. Gorman after I had read it:

MISS NASH'S LETTER

To the INDEX-JOURNAL:

Please allow me space in your paper to relate my experience in the union.

When the union was first organized I was under the impression that such an organization had the financial backing of the U. T. W. A., in close cooperation with the A. F. of L., which I understood had a large treasury.

At the time the union was organized I was making a good living wage, and was aware of it, but at the same time I felt that if by joining the union, and helping to support the organization, it would at some future time be the means of increasing my own or other people's salaries, I was willing to do so.

After joining I was elected to fill the office of financial secretary. Therefore, I feel that I am in a position to know a few things that might be enlightening to others.

Before the strike was called I had sent to James Starr, secretary to Francis J. Gorman, approximately $1,100.

During the strike we received weekly bulletins from headquarters issued by Gorman telling us to hold fast, stick together, etc.; that they were behind us and wide-awake, which led us to believe that when we reached a crisis we would receive help from headquarters.

After our local treasury was depleted our secretary was authorized by the president to send Mr. Gorman a special-delivery letter stating our circumstances. This being done, we waited a week, and receiving no reply, a telegram was then sent to Mr. Gorman telling him it would be impossible to carry on any longer without help. We received no reply from this.

At the convention in Gaffney a resolution was drawn up and telegraphed to Mr. Gorman asking for a commissary to be set up in Greenwood for the relief of the two locals here, and to my knowledge Gorman hasn't been heard from yet.

When Peele, Brookshire, and Rogers come down and cry "Stick together, you've got the backing"—well, that's a huge joke. They want the locals to stick together—sure—for that's where their salaries come from.

The only help we ever got was from other locals, and if one local in Carolina has to help another, why is it necessary to send Gorman the money?

Each month that I mailed Gorman's secretary a money order, usually around $150, there wasn't a minute lost in the time it took for it to get there and a receipt to get back here thanking us and wishing us all kinds of success and hoping we would continue to grow. Of course that was natural, for as long as we continued to grow it meant more dollars in his pockets.

Before the union was organized I don't know of a single needy family in our community, and now I could name a dozen needy families.

What has the union profited any of us? It has bred enmity among a few and brought hardships to many. And now Mr. Gorman doesn't even recall that there was ever a Local No. 2171 in Greenwood, S. C., or if he does, there's no evidence of the fact.

I sincerely hope that if anyone reading this happens to be a 100 percent union member or is still inclined to belong to a union, that he or she will not be offended, for I have merely stated the true facts.

I do not care for any more union experience, and prefer to be dictated to from now on by someone I know personally and not by Gorman.

Thank you.

(Miss) CARRIE NASH.

NOT FIGHTING LABOR

I am not making any fight against Mr. Gorman, the United Textile Workers of America, or any other labor organization as the article in this paper attempts to intimate. My position with reference to all union labor is simple. I believe that any man who desires to become a member of a labor union has the right to do so, and likewise any man who does not desire to be a member is also within his right in staying out. Neither the union or the nonunion man has a right to coerce, tantalize, or threaten the other, and in making either choice he should be allowed to base that choice on whatever appeals to his better judgment and reason. This principle is fair, democratic, and in accordance with the principles of right as set forth in the Constitution of the United States. Any other principle is unfair, undemocratic, and un-American. I fought this whole thing out in my campaign for reelection to Congress in 1934 before the people of the Third District of South Carolina, and despite sinister and ulterior influences that tried to undermine this fair and impartial attitude toward the laboring man as well as other constituents, I was reelected by a satisfactory majority. The people of the district I represent are fair, honest, hard-working people. They are not going to oppress, threaten, or coerce any organized minority or allow any organized minority to bully, threaten, or coerce them.

MR. O'CONNOR'S REMARKS

Perhaps conditions in the home State of Mr. CONNERY, of Massachusetts, are perfect. If they are not, I certainly do not intend to malign or indict the good people of New England as he has indicted and abused the fine southern textile people. I have too much respect for these people and the great work in which they are engaged to set myself up as a critic of the conditions they are facing.

However, since the remarks of April 23 in the House here, a Member of Congress from Mr. CONNERY's section, a man who worked in the cotton mills of New England in the early years, when he was paid "the munificent sum of $1.50 a week", has arisen in this House and told us something about conditions there as well as in the South. The remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] are highly pertinent to this question at issue. With the permission of the gentleman from New York, I desire to include his remarks again in the RECORD, taken from page 7510 under date of May 15, 1935:

This campaign, which has gained momentum through their chambers of commerce and other parochial and selfish individuals, has raised a dastardly sectional issue between the North and South. I have listened as patiently as I could to the aspersions cast on the textile industry in our Southern States. There are the charges made that labor was underpaid, that child labor was employed, and that the living conditions of the worker were deplorable. It is not necessary for me to reiterate a denial of those charges. Everybody familiar with the situation knows they are not true. The distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], in a magnificent address, recently disposed of this selfish sectional attack on the processing tax, but he omitted to mention what I can state of my own knowledge. The textile industry of New England should be the last to talk about wages or the living conditions of workers in that industry. I spent 23 years of my life in a Massachusetts mill town. I worked as a bobbin boy in a cotton mill, and, like the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TAYLOR], I received the munificent sum of $1.50 a week, and this at a time when spinners and weavers, men and women, were getting only $6 a week.

I have seen company houses, row on row. I have seen company stores; I have handled the company pay tokens. I have seen whole rows of workers living in those company houses thrown in the street with all of their belongings because of some labor dispute. It does not lie in the mouths of the mill operators of New England or the steel operators of Pennsylvania or the mine operators of Pennsylvania, the chief beneficiaries of a high protective tariff, supported for 50 years by a high protective tariff, to make such charges about conditions in the South. Nor could such a complaint come with good grace from the gentleman from New York, who spoke yesterday. It is not over 20 years ago that, under Democratic leadership in the Legislature of New York, the canners were forced to abolish in that country the same conditions that are now charged to the South, and which do not exist. In your canneries in upstate New York you were employing children and you were employing women in childbirth for 20 hours a day and paying them starvation wages.

It was due to the leadership of a great Democrat that this condition was abolished not so long ago. This great Democrat was Alfred E. Smith. [Applause.]

I often think of those mill towns in Massachusetts and New England, which I knew so well, Taunton, Fall River, and New Bedford, represented by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]; Lowell, the home city of the beloved lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]; Lynn, the home city of our own "BILL" CONNERY; Nashua, Manchester, Woonsocket, and Pawtucket.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] omitted to say that in his State they at least employ their own people. They did not import the people and put them to work in their mills. Why, it was because of importations of foreign labor into this country that we passed the contract-labor provisions in our immigration laws, and principally because of what was done by the textile workers of New England.

Now, let us have it out. Let the lady from Lowell and the gentlemen from these other cities, which we all know so well, tell us what was the predominating language spoken in these cities 25 years ago. It was not English. Those people were fine, decent, religious, law-abiding, ambitious people, a credit to their communities, many of them rising to high place and becoming mayors and governors of some of those States, but their forefathers had been brought into New England by the textile magnates because of the low wages they could offer them and the long hours they could work them. So enough of that sectional talk.

DETAILS OF RELIEF SCALE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the schedule of monthly wages by regions and types of work specified in the Executive order that President Roosevelt issued the other day.
